The drugs, which were seized at an airport in China, were supposed to be passed on to Hong Kong couriers in China who would then bring them back across the border, he said.

"In this case there were clear indications that China was being used as a transit point for the drugs," he added.

After this case, Mr Tong said, the departments concerned had meetings in which the problem of China as a transit point was discussed.

"This is not an isolated case and our intelligence points to a strong possibility that drugs are coming through to Hong Kong from China," he said.

This type of operation, he said, would involve two or possibly three parties of couriers -- one to take the drugs to China (presumably from Thailand), another to bring the drugs out to Hong Kong.

Mr Tong said it was difficult for the customs to conduct searches on all passengers coming into Hong Kong by train from China.

However, he said that the couriers bringing the drugs into China had their own problems to face -- getting through the airport with them or having them passed as imported goods.

Mr Tong said it would be unfair for him to comment on the standard of customs detection techniques used in China, as he had no first-hand knowledge on the subject.

He did however say, in response to a question, that the measures adopted here are "quite tough."

Mr Tong did not rule out the possibility that as measures got tighter here, the cases involving China as a stopover would increase.

Turning to recent statistics on dangerous drug offences, Mr Tong noted that the number of arrests up until the end of September this year had increased by 62 cases compared with the whole of last year.

The figure for arrests up until the end of September this year is 812; or 108 percent of the total number of arrests in 1981 (750).

The estimated value of the seizures up till September is $92.35 million compared with $59.18 million for the whole of last year.

The number of people for internal concealment of dangerous drugs for the first nine months of this year is slightly less than those arrested for the same offence last year.

A total of 14 Thai men were arrested for carrying drugs insude their bodies as of September this year, compared to 11 Thai men and six Chinese men arrested for this type of offence last year.

Figures show that 12 of the Thais were arrested between January and March this year and the other two were arrested only in September.

Mr Tong said this could be taken to mean that for the period between March and September some other method was used to smuggle the drugs in, or traffickers resorted to this kind of smuggling as a "last resort."

The courier can only conceal about 200 grams of heroin base inside the body cavities, Mr Tong said, making it not really worth the traffickers while.

"The only time it can really show a profit for the trafficker is if he has a group of couriers each concealing 200 grams," he said. "Otherwise it really doesn't seem worth it only as a last resort," he added.

WEN WEI PO REPORTER MEETS HUBEI'S CHEN PIXIAN

["Special feature" by Feng Ying-tzu [7458 5391 1311] "A Secretary's Breadth of Vision"]

[Text] The reporters taking part in the Chang Jiang visiting group reached Wuhan on 20 September. The next morning reporters from Shanghai also arrived. Gathered together, they formed a team of more than 30 reporters, representing 30 news units of the whole country. That afternoon, we were received by Chen Pixian, first secretary of the Hubei Provincial CPC Committee and newly elected secretary of the Secretariat of the Party Central Committee.

Secretary Chen is now over sixty. Ever since he became a "little devil" in the Red Army, he has devoted his life to revolution. He is now still in high spirits and has an impressive manner. That day he was dressed informally in light gray. Elegant, natural and unrestrained, he looked just like a scholar. Radiating smiles, he came among our reporters and shook hands with us. He also asked us to point out any difficulties or needs we had in Wuhan.

The reporters asked for his opinion on propagation work after the 12th CPC Congress. When everybody had sat down, Secretary Chen started to talk freely.

When discussing the significance of the 12th CPC Congress, Secretary Chen said: "The other morning, at the meeting of the provincial CPC committee which was held to communicate the spirit of the 12th CPC Congress to the cadres of Hubei Province, I talked on five points: 1) We must maintain political and ideological unity with the party Central Committee; 2) We must adhere to the party's line in whatever we do; 3) We must unite the majority and correct all unhealthy tendencies; 4) We must grasp well the work of administration and system reform; and 5) We must strive to march ahead of the whole country." He said that provided we do all these things well, we will be able to implement the spirit of the 12th CPC Congress and demonstrate its significance. He also asked the reporters to propagate the spirit of the 12th CPC Congress more fully, so that the pace of our advancement could be accelerated.

During the reporters' Changjiang tour, Secretary Chen continued to discuss Hubei and Wuhan. He said, Wuhan is a large city occupying an area of 190,000 square km and with a population of over 4.7 million. The total areas covered by the three towns joined together constitutes the second largest city in the whole country. We have everything here, including industry, science and technology, culture and so on. Take the Wuhan Iron and Steel Company for example; the state has invested several billion in the company and now it is showing results. The Dongfeng make of automobile manufactured by the second automobile factory is also very nice. You all can go and have a look. With regard to culture, our Wuhan University can match Shanghai's Fudan University and our teachers' college is a big as the East China Teachers' College. Look at the fields of history and modern history. A bell of the completeness and size of the one unearthed in Sui County has seldom been seen elsewhere.

When Secretary Chen was told that the reporters would stay for only 10 days in Hubei, with an air of pride and of cherishing every tree and blade of grass of Hubei, he said: "Are you going to stay only for 10 days in Hubei? That is too short a time, like looking at flowers while riding on horseback. Even this is not too bad, though you can gain only a superficial understanding through cursory observation.

You should go and see whatever you can. There is a qin [a musical instrument] platform in Hanyang where Yu Boping met Zhong Ziqi. There are two mountains in Wuhan, Snake and Tortoise Mountain. The Wuchang revolt took place in Wuhan. The scenery of the East Lake in Wuchang is beautiful. There are also many historic sites in Chibi and Yu Quan Mountain, mentioned in the "Romance of the Three Kingdoms," and in Longzhong where Zhu Geliang lived. Longzhong is on the edge of Xiangfan has developed very fast in recent years. It is now a newly developed industrial city. Yichang and Shashi are also worth seeing.

As if counting his private treasure, Secretary Chen talked on and on about the development and characteristics of Hubei. He said, there is a certain Jianghan plain in Hubei, a very large one occupying an area of over 30,000 square km. It stretches to the horizon and forms a beautiful scene. In the northwest of Hubei, there is a prefecture called Enshi, near Hunan, also very beautiful. I have lived in Hubei for 5 years and it is regrettable that there are still 7 countries I have not yet visited. If you have any problems, do tell us. We will do our best to help you.

These words of Secretary Chen inspired us greatly. The reporters were particularly moved by the fact that as secretary of a provincial CPC committee, he was so familiar with the places under his administration, knowing them like the back of his hand. Full of affection, sincerity and frankness, he cherished every tree and bush of the province with great pride. This sense of pride has guided millions of sons and daughters of China to advance along the road of socialist modernization. Is there anything difficult in the world that we cannot overcome? At the end of the interview when I told my feelings to Secretary Chen, he patted my shoulder and said, "I have a sense of pride. We Chinese deserve to be proud of ourselves."

Nearly one month has passed. After my Chang Jiang visit, I returned to Shanghai to sort out these reports. "We Chinese deserve to be proud of ourselves!" These words again flashed across my mind. They showed great breadth of vision forever inspiring people to march forward.

RENMIN RIBAO EXAMINES U.S. MIDTERM ELECTIONS

["Newsletter From America" by Yuan Wianlu [5913 0341 4389]: "Initial Analysis of U.S. Midterm Elections"]

[Text] The results of the U.S. midterm elections have been announced. The Democratic Party gained 24 seats in the House of Representatives, while the Republicans lost 26 seats. There were basically no changes in the Senate. In the state governor elections, the Democrats gained seven governorships and the Republicans lost nine.

Both Parties Claim Victory

At 1900 eastern time on 2 November, when polling stations in the eastern states had just closed, and voting in other areas was still going on, the three U.S. televison networks started to report the initial election results from various regions and also gave a series of forecasts. Personnel concerned of the two parties watched television until 0200 on 3 November, and proceeded to issue comments as the situation gradually became clear. Each claimed victory for his own party.

Some Republicans said that the party in power always loses congressional seats in the midterm elections; the number of seats lost by the Republicans in the House of Representatives was no more than expected, while the party continued to hold its Senate majority. This showed that the American public supported President Reagan's slogan of "continuing with the principles laid down," and the Republican Party's policies would in effect continue. Certain Democrats then claimed a resounding victory, saying the election results showed the American public opposed "Reaganomics" and demanded that the government change its current policies.

The Republican Party was obviously just consoling itself in claiming victory. A notable feature of this election was that the rising trend of conservatism that appeared in the 1980 elections was reversed. Many of the first-term conservative congressmen elected in 1980 failed to be reelected. At that time certain extreme conservative organizations used the method of counterpropaganda, with the result that certain eminent Democratic congressmen failed to be reelected. But their efforts to repeat this method in the 1982 election were completely defeated. As for the economic issue, American public opinion openly acknowledged that this election would be the citizens' vote on "Reaganomics." And what were the results? In areas where the economic situation has gravely deteriorated, the majority of Republicans suffered setbacks; Republican candidates who did win there had kept their distance from the President's economic policies during the election campaign. There is nothing strange about that, because opinion polls showed that the American public is more and more unhappy with the present situation, with record unemployment and a wave of business closures.

However, the victory claimed by the Democratic Party should also be analyzed. When a series of statistics showing unemployment at 10.1 percent and gloomy economic prospects were released at the beginning of October, some people expected that the Democratic Party would win an overwhelming victory in the election. However, this did not happen at all. The Democrats did not win many seats compared with previous midterm elections. The Democrats even lost in some places where Republican policies are far from popular. And in many places, the race between the two parties was extremely close. This of course had something to do with increased Republican campaigning and the personal intervention of President Reagan on the eve of the election. However, it seems that the fundamental reason was that many voters, while unhappy with Republican Party, lacked confidence in the Democrats. Certain public opinion polls showed that many Americans hold that although President Reagan bears responsibility for the present gloomy economic scene, the Democratic Party cannot evade its responsibility either.

"Politics of Money" More and More Serious

The Republican Party's promotion of impractical measures and the Democratic Party's inability to devise practical ones were clearly reflected in this election campaign. American public opinion has summarized the two outstanding characteristics of this election campaign. One is that "the politics of money" is becoming increasingly serious. Some people estimate that the average campaign expenses for each candidate during the race were as much as $200,000. Certain candidates spent as much as $500,000, or even more. The entire sum is said to exceed $300 million. The other is that there was a plague of "negative propaganda." During the election campaign most candidates attacked their opponents instead of announcing their own policy proposals, and some even resorted to the vicious methods of making groundless accusations and spreading damaging rumors. As a result, some newspapers wrote with emotion that the election race developed from a debate over policy proposals into relying on dollars and attacks on one's opponent in order to win a seat. The policies of American democracy are going from bad to worse.

Influence on the American Situation

Despite this, the results of this midterm election will have considerable influence on the situation in the United States for a time to come. This is because in the first 2 years of Reagan's Presidency, although the Republicans only had a majority in the Senate while the Democrats continued to hold the majority in the House of Representatives, the ideas of several dozen conservative Democratic congressmen were in fact very close to Reagan's, and they consistently supported President Reagan in some crucial votes. All the cuts in social welfare expenditures and taxes proposed by Reagan in accordance with his "economic recovery program" were thus smoothly approved in both the House and the Senate for this reason. Following the midterm elections, there will be changes in the balance of power between conservative and liberal congressmen, and it will be more difficult for Reagan to rely on the alliance of Republicans and conservative Democrats to get congress to accept his schemes.

There will be frequent wrangling between the House of Representatives and the Senate and clashes between the President and Congress. Some American newspapers point out that although during the election campaign President Reagan put forward the slogan of "stay the course," in fact at the end of August he had been forced to raise taxes in order to to reduce the budget deficit; and during the campaign, in order to win votes, he signed bills proposed by the Democrats on increasing unemployment subsidies, setting up organizations for training the unemployed, and so on. There have in fact been changes in his "staying the course." In the future the Reagan administration will have to take account of the Democratic opposition on a series of major issues such as the plan to cut taxes, cutting social welfare spending, increasing military spending and so on, and will have to seek compromises. There are bound to be some changes in U.S. political, economic and social policies.

'Costly Democracy' Noted

["International Jottings" by Shi Fang [1102 4364]: "Costly Democracy"]

[Text] While 6.6 of the 11 million unemployed workers in the United States were strolling at the crossroads, unable to get their relief funds, the "most costly congressional election in U.S. history" was held, for which the two parties in the United States spent more than $300 million.

In the United States, money is used to open a way for the election of the President, congressmen, state governors and state congressmen. It is not strange that so much money was spent in this mid-term election.

In this country, where money means everything, there is hardly any difference between votes and bank notes. Perhaps, it is only the United States which has the "fortune" to enjoy such costly "democracy."

U.S. PAPER CITED ON SOVIET MIGHT IN PACIFIC

[Text] Washington, November 7 (XINHUA) -- The Soviet Union is continuing to expand its military power in the Pacific, THE NEW YORK TIMES reported today quoting senior officers in the U.S. Navy.

Adm. Robert Long, commander of the American forces in the Pacific and Indian Oceans, reportedly said Soviet Backfire bombers were flying missions from Kamchatka Peninsula in the Soviet Far East and from Cam Ranh Bay in Vietnam. The appearance of the Backfire, a medium-range supersonic plane, in the Pacific added "a new dimension to the threat to sea lanes in the area," he said.

The admiral said that a third of the Soviet Union's SS-20 missiles were now deployed in the Far East. The missiles, some of which are within range of Japan, were armed with 250 nuclear warheads.

RENMIN RIBAO REPORTS ON WEINBERGER'S ASIAN TRIP

["News Review" by Wei Yuqin [7614 3768 3830]: "Weinberger's Southeast Asia Trip"]

[Text] From 31 October to 3 November, U.S. Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinberger paid a visit to Singapore, Thailand and Indonesia, and talked with the leaders of the three countries.

Weinberger said that the visit was aimed at "emphasizing" that the United States attaches "great importance" to Southeast Asia. A Pentagon official said that Weinberger carried a "dual message" with him in his visit: One is that although the United States is busy with its European and Middle East affairs, it continues to take an interest in the Pacific area; the other is that these countries should make more efforts toward their common defense.

Weinberger's trip to Southeast Asia has something to do with the recent reinforcement of U.S. military deployment in the western Pacific in order to combat Soviet expansion in this area. In Singapore, he said that since the USSR is continuously increasing its offensive military forces, it is necessary to let people "know the nature and extent of the augmentation of the (Soviet) military forces, how fast they have been increased and how serious a threat they now constitute."

During the talks, Prime Minister Lee Kuan Yew said that since the USSR has increased its naval and air activities in Vietnam's Vung Cam Ranh and Da Nang bases and strengthened its offensive military forces in the Pacific Ocean, the present strength of the U.S. Seventh Fleet cannot meet the needs of cruising and defending the South Pacific area and the Indian Ocean. Thus, Singapore suggested that the United States reinforce its Seventh Fleet, or at least add a special carrier composite fleet to it. Weinberger said this was "feasible."

The U.S. secretary of defense repeatedly reiterated in Singapore and Thailand that the United States scrupulously abides by the Manila Treaty and promises to bear responsibility for defense in Southeast Asia. In Indonesia, he declared that the United States would deal seriously with any invasion and attack on the country's sovereignty. He revealed that the United States had provided Indonesia with a loan of $40 million in 1982 for the purchase of arms and that $50 million will be provided in 1983. The United States also agreed to increase its military loan to Thailand from $9.9 million to $12.5 million so that the total military loan in 1982 would reach $80 million [as published].

Thailand appreciated the U.S. promise to speed up the delivery of the weapons Thailand had purchased. At the same time, the United States emphasized the necessity of joint military exercises. Weinberger urged the ASEAN countries to increase defense budgets and do more for the defense of the area.

During his visit, Weinberger spoke highly of the important role played by Thailand and other ASEAN countries in condemning Vietnamese aggression and supporting the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea. He said that the United States would maintain unanimity with the ASEAN and strive for the complete restoration of Kampuchean sovereignty and independence. He clearly declared that the United States "would not reward" "any form of Vietnamese aggression." So long as the Vietnamese continue to stay in Kampuchea, the United States will not give Vietnam diplomatic recognition.

After his visit to the three ASEAN countries, Weinberger continued his trip to Australia and New Zealand.

Grishin Speech Noted

OW061358 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1305 GMT 6 Nov 82

[Text] Moscow, 5 Nov (XINHUA) -- Speaking at the meeting marking the 65th anniversary of the October Revolution, Grishin, member of the CPSU Central Committee Politburo, said: "If someone attempts to gain military superiority through deploying several hundred new U.S. nuclear guided missiles in Europe or through any other measures, the Soviet Union will take corresponding measures."

Brezhnev, Tikhonov and other Soviet leaders attended the ceremony held in Moscow's Kremlin today.

Grishin strongly denounced the United States for engaging in arms expansion and "doing its utmost to create difficulties for the situation in Poland that has just begun to normalize." He stressed that the Soviet Union "will take all necessary actions to strengthen its capability in national defense."

In his report, Greshin reiterated the Soviet stand on the issue of relationships between the Soviet Union and China.

Further Report

[Text] Moscow, November 5 (XINHUA) -- The Soviet Union Friday warned that any United States efforts to seek military superiority would be followed by Soviet countermeasures.

Addressing a meeting to celebrate the 65th anniversary of the October Revolution, Politburo member of the Soviet Communist Party Viktor Greshin said Moscow would take appropriate measures if Washington attempted to obtain superiority by deploying hundreds of American-made nuclear warheads in Europe.

The Soviet Union "is undertaking all necessary measures to strengthen" the Soviet armed forces, he said.

This is the second time in ten days that Soviet leaders have aired strong condemnation of a U.S. military buildup. Soviet leader Leonid Brezhnev told military commanders on Oct. 27 the Soviet military forces would lack nothing in confronting U.S. military expansion.

Speaking in the Kremlin Hall of Congresses in the presence of Leonid Brezhnev and Nikolay Tikhnov, Grishin accused the United States of "creating trouble for the already-improved Polish situation."

Grishin reiterated the Soviet stand on the Soviet-Chinese relations in his speech.

[Text] Moscow, November 7 (XINHUA) -- A military parade was held here today to mark the 65th anniversary of the Russian October Revolution.

Addressing a celebration gathering on Moscow's Red Square, Soviet Defense Minister Dmitriy Ustinov accused Washington of expanding its military strength to an unprecedented level.

He said the Soviet armed forces are kept at high-level war preparedness and always concerned about the security of both the Soviet Union and its allies.

President Leonid Brezhnev and other Soviet leaders were on the rostrum of the mausoleum on the Red Square for the occasion.

Brezhnev made a speech at the banquet the Soviet Government held today in Kremlin to celebrate the festival.

KYODO Report

[Text] Beijing, Nov 7 KYODO -- China has apparently retreated from its support of the Japan-U.S. security treaty to what could be viewed as a neutral stand toward the pact, according to former Japanese Ambassador to China Heishiro Ogawa Saturday.

Liao Chengzhi, chairman of the China-Japan Friendship Association, was quoted as saying "the Chinese Government neither approved nor protested the Japan-U.S. Security Treaty" when he met Ogawa here Friday.

Liao's remark was taken to mean China's retreat from its support of the treaty, expressed by then Vice Premier Deng Xiaoping when he visited Japan in 1978.

While saying Japan has a right to maintain its self-defense forces as a sovereign state, Liao said this and possible revival of militarism in Japan were separate matters, hinting concern about such possibility.

Referring to Sino-Soviet relations, Liao said no substantial progress could be achieved in Beijing-Moscow talks to improve their relations in a short time.

Chinese Vice Premier Wan Li also suggested it would take considerable time to improve Sino-Soviet relations when he met Ogawa Saturday.

Wan also renewed his invitation to Japanese Education Minister Heiji Ogawa, the elder brother of the former ambassador, to visit China.

The education minister's visit to China was originally scheduled for early September but China then indicated he would not be welcome due to the textbook revision issue which strained Sino-Japanese relations.

Holds Talks With Zhao

[Text] Beijing, November 7 (XINHUA) -- Premier Zhao Ziyang held talks this morning with Khieu Samphan, vice-president of Democratic Kampuchea.

It is learned the two leaders exchanged views on the present world situation as well as the situation in Indochina. Zhao Ziyang warmly congratulated the Kampuchean people for their major victory in their struggle against Vietnam.

Zhao Ziyang said the stand of the Chinese Government and people on the question of Kampuchea is firm and consistent. "We firmly support the Kampuchean people in their struggle against Vietnamese aggressors and upholds its position that Vietnam must withdraw its aggressive troops from Kampuchea and abandon its regional hegemony," he added.

Khieu Samphan said during the hard years of Kampuchean people's struggle against Vietnamese aggression, it is the Chinese people who have extended powerful support to them. The Kampuchean people always keep in mind the profound feelings of the Chinese people toward them. Now it is four years since the Kampuchean people started their struggle against Vietnamese aggressors. Great progress has been made in the struggle and the Vietnamese aggressors have fallen into dire straits. He also told the Chinese premier about the situation in Kampuchea since the formation of the coalition government.

Present were Huang Hua, Chinese state councillor and foreign minister; Wu Xueqian, Chinese vice-minister of foreign affairs; Zhang Zhen, deputy chief of staff of the People's Liberation Army, Ieng Thirith, secretary general of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of Democratic Kampuchea; and Pech Cheang, Kampuchean ambassador to China.

Feted by Zhao

[Text] Beijing, November 7 (XINHUA) -- Chinese PremierZhao Ziyang gave a banquet here this evening in honor of Khieu Samphan, vice-president of Democratic Kampuchea, and his party. In his speech, Zhao extended congratulations on the victories scored by the people of Kampuchea both at home and abroad.

He said: "It was with patriotic spirit and brave fighting that the Kampuchean people defeated all attacks by Vietnamese in the past four years. The fighting of Kampuchean people against Vietnam has defended the independence and sovereignty of Kampuchea, and made an important contribution to containing the aggression and expansion of hegemonism and safeguarding regional peace, safety and stability."

Zhao said: "Last July the formation of the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea headed by Samdech Sihanouk was proclaimed. This marked a new stage of the patriotic Kampuchean forces' united resistance to Vietnamese aggression. We believe that under the leadership of President Sihanouk, Vice-President Khieu Samphan and Prime Minister Son Sann the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea will play a positive role in promoting the national unity and strengthening the fight against the Vietnamese aggressors.

"This year's U.N. General Assembly has maintained Kampuchea's legitimate seat in the United Nations by an increasingly overwhelming majority and passed a resolution demanding Vietnam to withdraw its troops from Kampuchea. This fully shows that justice is on the side of the Kampuchean people and the Vietnamese aggressors are very isolated."

The Chinese premier said: "In order to extricate themselves from difficulties both at home and abroad and beffudle world opinion, the Vietnamese authorities are now intensifying mopping-up operations in Kampuchea and at the same time continuing to employ all sorts of political intrigues.

We firmly believe that under the leadership of the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea and with the support of the peace-loving and justice-holding countries and peoples, the Kampuchean people will surely frustrate the Vietnamese aggressors' military attack and political tricks and win still greater victories."

In conclusion, Zhao reiterated: "The Chinese people are the trustworthy comrades-in-arms of the Kampuchean people. The Chinese people will, as always, firmly support the Kampuchean people in their just struggle against Vietnam aggression until the final victory is won."

In his speech, Khieu Sampan thanked China for its firm support of the Kampuchean people's just struggle for national liberation.

He said: "The valuable support granted by the People's Republic of China and by all countries committed to peace and justice the world over constitutes a great encouragement to our present struggle against the Vietnamese aggressors for the survival of Kampuchea as an independent, neutral and non-aligned country, thereby contributing to safeguarding peace, stability and security in the region and in the world."

Speaking of the struggle against the Vietnamese aggression in Democratic Kampuchea, the vice-president said the struggle waged by the people of Kampuchea has been favorably developing in all fields, stepping up every year. As for the Vietnamese aggressors, they have been heading downwards every year and gradually towards their own disaster.

He said the formation of the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea with Samdech Norodom Sihanouk as its president and the outstanding victories achieved recently by the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea at the 37th session of the United Nations General Assembly clearly point to the fact that the struggle of the Kampuchean people has been developing favorably.

Khieu Samphan said although the Hanoi clique have been suffering heavy defeat in Kampuchea, they still refuse to withdraw their troops of aggression from Kampuchea in accordance with the unanimous demand of the international public opinion.

They have been carrying out deceitful manoeuvers aimed at occupying Kampuchea forever, he said. "For this reason," he said, "we are confident that all peace- and justice-loving countries the world over will thwart all those above-mentioned Vietnamese aggressors and expansionists' manoeuvres. At the same time, all countries committed to peace and justice the world over will unite to demand the unconditional withdrawal of all Vietnamese troops from Kampuchea, enabling the people of Kampuchea to decide their own destiny free from outside interference, through free general election by direct and secret ballots supervised by the United Nations."

Vice-President Khieu Samphan reiterated: "As long as the Hanoi leaders implement the U.N. resolutions by withdrawing all Vietnamese troops from Kampuchea, we will be pleased to sign a non-aggression treaty and live as good neighbours with Vietnam, on the basis of the five principles of peaceful coexistence. Kampuchea will remain an independent, peaceful, neutral, non-aligned country having no foreign military bases on her territory, with the guarantees of the United Nations for her neutrality."

He said the struggle of the Kampuchean people has most favorably developed but it still has to go through a sinuous and complicated course. The people of Kampuchea must therefore carry on their strenuous struggle.

"We are determined to do our utmost to unite and increase the forces fighting the Vietnamese aggressors until they are all driven out of Kampuchea," he stressed.

Attending the banquet were Ngapoi Ngawang Jigme, vice-chairman of the National People's Congress Standing Committee; Huang Hua, state councillor and foreign minister; Hu Ziang, vice-chairman of the National Committee of the Chinese People's Political Consultative Conference; Wu Xueqian, vice-minister of foreign affairs; Zhang Zhen, deputy chief of General Staff of the Chinese People's Liberation Army; and leaders of related departments. Kampuchean Ambassador to China Pech Cheang was also present.

PRC LEADERS ATTEND SIHANOUK BIRTHDAY BANQUET

[Text] Beijing, November 5 (XINHUA) -- Samdech Norodom Sihanouk, president of Democratic Kampuchea, and Madame Sihanouk invited Chinese leaders to a banquet in their residence here this evening to mark Samdech Sihanouk's 60th birthday. Among those attending were: Wan Li, vice-premier; Ngapoi Ngawang Jigme, vice-chairman of the Standing Committee of the National People's Congress; Huang Hua, state councillor and minister of foreign affairs, and his wife He Liliang; Qian Changzhao, vice-chairman of the National Committee of the Chinese People's Political Consultative Conference; and Zhang Zhen, deputy chief of General Staff of the Chinese People's Liberation Army. They extended birthday greetings to Samdech Sihanouk.

The Chinese Government, Li Xiannian and Deng Yingchao sent baskets of flowers and a birthday cake was sent by Deng Xiaoping. Sihanouk said he feels very happy to spend his 60th birthday in Beijing. "As an old friend of China, I am elated over the tremendous achievements China has attained in all fields in recent years," he said. He praised China, especially for its foreign policy. "This policy is based on correct principles and guided by a lofty ideal. China adheres to its unity with countries and people who were subjected to unjust treatment, and supports nations, including Democratic Kampuchea, in their struggle for freedom, national independence and territorial integrity. China enjoys high international prestige in the world of today," he said.

The Samdech said that the Kampuchean people are stepping up their struggle against the Vietnamese aggressors. "The struggle will bring brilliant victory," he said. Vice-Premier Wan Li spoke highly of the Samdech. He said that for scores of years, Sihanouk fought for safeguarding the sovereignty and independence of Kampuchea. He said: "Whenever the aggressors trampled the soil of Kampuchea and the Khmers faced grave danger, the Samdech always came forward, upholding the patriotic banner and devoting himself to the cause of safeguarding national independence, thus winning the respect and love of the Kampuchean people."

Wan said that the friendship between China and Kampuchea, cultivated by late Chairman Mao Zedong and Premier Zhou Enlai and Samdech Sihanouk, has withstood tests in the common struggle and been steadily strengthened and developed. During the past dozens of years, he said, we and the Samdech enjoyed mutual respect, mutual support and mutual trust and treated each other on equal footing. Wan said that the Chinese Government and the people treasure the friendship with Kampuchea and the Samdech. He said: "At present, the Kampuchean people are resisting heroically the invaders in their sacred territory and are fighting a people's war against the Vietnamese aggressors." The vice-premier assured Sihanouk by saying: "The Chinese Government and people will give their all-out support to the just cause of the Kampuchean people."

He wished Sihanouk still greater achievement in strengthening the unity of various patriotic forces, stepping up the united struggle against the Vietnamese aggressors and winning greater international support.

SHIJIE ZHISHI ON WEST GERMAN-CHINESE RELATIONS

HK041411 Beijing SHIJIE ZHISHI in Chinese No 19, 1 Oct 82 pp 8-9

[Article by Yan Mu [3508 2606]: "China and West Germany"]

[Text] On 11 October 1972 in Beijing, China and the Federal Republic of Germany signed a joint communique establishing diplomatic relations between the two countries. This opened a new chapter in the development of friendly relations between the two nations. On the eve of the 10th anniversary of the signing of the communique we would like to take a look back at the process of normalization of relations between China and West Germany and examine the contact between the two countries over the last ten years, and then take a look at the years ahead and what they might hold.

Review

Both New China and West Germany were founded in 1949, so why were diplomatic relations only established as late as 1972? The answer to this question requires a close look at the changes in the relations between the two countries as well as the international background to these changes.

As everyone knows, as soon as New China was founded it suffered hostility and isolation from the imperialists, mainly the Americans. West Germany at this time was merely being propped up by the United States in order to deal with the Soviet Union and indeed right up until 1955 West Germany was under constant occupation by the United States, Britain and France. At this point the West German Government was still following the U.S. line of embargos against China. On 7 April 1955, on the basis of decision by the Standing Committee of the NPC, Chairman Mao Zedong formally announced the cessation of war between China and West Germany. In May of the same year, after the treaty of Paris had come into effect, West Germany established itself as a sovereign state. The following year Premier Zhou Enlai announced in a CPPCC report that China would welcome the normalization of relations between itself and West Germany. After this, nongovernmental economic and cultural contact increased. In 1956, a Chinese art ensemble visited West Germany, and in 1957 the China Committee for the Promotion of International Trade signed the first nongovernmental trade agreement with West Germany's Oriental Committee for German Economics. Nevertheless, at this point there was still no discussion about bringing about a normalization of relations between the two countries. One of the reasons for this was that after West Germany established diplomatic relations with the Soviet Union in 1955, it immediately brought about problems of Hallsteinism, [Ha'er 'si' san zhuyi] concerning the question of Germany, and thus West Germany refused to recognize any other country which had established diplomatic relations with the GDR. China had recognized the GDR as early as 1950. Another reason was that West Germany's foreign policy vis-a-vis China was still controlled by the United States. An example which might explain this point fairly clearly is that in 1964, during talks concerning the organization of the official trade agreement and commercial exchange agreement signed by West Germany and China, the United States intervened and thus, under U.S. pressure, West Germany had to break off discussions.

In October 1969 the West German elections brought about a change of government and a coalition government was formed with Brandt at the head of the Social Democrats and Scheer as the head of the Free Democratic. This new government expressed its desire to develop relations with China but just at this time the West German newspapers leaked the fact that the country was giving priority to a plan for reconciliation with the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe and was giving precedence to its policy of Ostpolitik and the eastern treaty it had signed, thereby placing normalization of relations with China in a backseat position. Changes in the international situation during the initial years of the seventies saw China's rightful seat in the United Nations returned to it, and President Nixon made his famed visit to China. At this time many people in West Germany, in particular the opposition party, were increasing their calls for the establishment of relations with China.

In July 1972 the deputy chairman of the Christian Democratic Union, which was not in power, and the chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee of the Federal Assembly, Herr Schleuder, visited China to gather support for the establishment of relations between the two countries. At this time West Germany and the Soviet Union's Treaty of Moscow as well as the Berlin agreement signed between the Soviet Union, the United States, Britain and France, had both come into effect and thus West Germany began normalization of relations with several East European countries. Thus under the influence of these internal and external factors, the Governments of China and West Germany began discussions and reached an agreement for establishing relations with relative ease. This was a correct move which corresponded to historical trends at that time.

Development

In the 10 years since the establishment of relations, hard work on both sides has brought about profound changes in the relations between China and West Germany. There has been speedy and comprehensive development in cooperation and friendly contact between the two countries in areas such as politics, economics, science and technology, culture and education.

Unilateral contact by people from both countries has also increased and this is an important sign of the speed of development between the two nations. The last few years in particular have seen frequent visits on both sides by the two countries' leaders and famous political activists including both premiers, committee chairmen or deputy assembly chairmen, vice premiers, regional and provincial leaders, leaders of the West German opposition party as well as many teams of experts and individuals. If one includes tourists in the figures, the total number of people involved in mutual visits every year is well in excess of 10,000.

In 1979 the Civil Aviation Administration of China opened a new air route to Frankfurt, and the following year Lufthansa began regular scheduled flights to Beijing, thereby making conditions much easier for those involved in mutual visits and exchanges. News reports by the media of both China and West Germany have become mutually more penetrating and extensive. Through these direct and indirect means of contact both governments have increased their mutual understanding of one another and friendship between the two peoples has taken root in the general population of both countries.

Another feature of the development of relations between West Germany and China has been the speedy growth in economic and trade relations. In 1972 the volume of trade of the two countries stood at U.S.$275 million and by 1981 had already risen to U.S.$2.34 billion -- an increase of 7.5 times that of 10 years before. Today, West Germany is already China's third largest trading partner and is in the leading position in terms of China's trade with European countries. In 1973 the two countries signed a trade payments agreement, with each providing the other with "most favored nation treatment". In 1975 there were joint exhibitions in Cologne and Beijing designed to introduce and display the economic and technological achievements of both countries. The same year the ocean shipping agreement was signed which was of great significance for the mutual development of trade in both countries.

In 1979 the "Economic Cooperation Agreement" was signed, and the governments of both countries set up the Economic Trade Composite Committee, the Science & Technology Cooperation Composite Committee and the Standing Agricultural Work Organization. China opened import and export offices and technological import corporation offices in both Hamburg and Cologne. In addition, various large West German companies and banks including (Meizuishi, Aotuo, Woerfu, Wude, Benchi, Manneisiman, and Luqi) and Deutsche Bank, Dresdner Bank and the Kommerz Bank opened offices or representative bodies in Beijing. Links were set up between the three Chinese provinces of Liaoning, Jiangxi and Anhui and the German provinces of Baden-Wuertenberg, Hessen and Lower Saxony, and in 1981 Baden-Wuertenberg organized an economic and technological exhibition in Shenyang on an enormous scale.

Ever since West Germany recognized China as a developing country it began in 1981 to provide technological help. At present both countries are establishing new conditions and discussing new channels for further development of economic cooperation.

Exchange and cooperation in such as areas as science and technology, culture, education and sports are increasing day by day. Scientific and technological cooperation between China and West Germany is being carried out on both official and nongovernmental levels with great success and the list of official items of cooperation touch on as many as 10 areas of science and technology. Cultural exchange is also increasing annually and in 1979 the two countries signed a cultural cooperaton agreement, and the list of Chinese performing groups that have visited West Germany to date includes an acrobatic team, a dance troupe, an ethnic music group, a Beijing Opera troupe and a theatre troupe. These performers introduced the West German audiences to traditional Chinese dance, acrobatics and folk songs. Visits to China by West German performers have included the Stuttgart ballet troupe, the Stuttgart chamber orchestra, the Munich chamber orchestra, the Mannheim theatre troupe and the famous Berlin Symphony Orchestra, all of which deeply impressed Chinese audiences.

In addition there have also been several exhibitions in China including an exhibition of books, (Kelehuizhi) prints and German expressionist oil paintings. China has also organized exhibitions in West Germany including exhibits of archeological finds, jewelry, painting and paper cutting. Educational cooperation has been characterized by its accent on inherited and developing traditions. At present there are over 1,000 Chinese students and others working in research institutes in West Germany and there are a total of more than 20 institutes and places of learning in both countries involved in bilateral educational cooperation, of which 10 have signed official agreements. With West German support, Shanghai's Tongji University is gradually bringing back the teaching of German. Sports relations are also increasing every year and in the 3 years from 1979 to 1981, 24 Chinese sports teams traveled to West Germany to compete, an average of 8 every year, while 30 teams visited China from West Germany, an average of 10 a year.

The Future

Although the social systems and ideologies of China and West Germany are different and hence their problems are different, it is still possible to develop friendly cooperative relations. The reasons for this are as follows: First, because there are no conflicts of interests between the two countries at present, nor are there any problems or disagreements dating back to previous times still left unresolved. Of course, historically, from the middle of the 19th century, the German imperialists were involved in invasion activities along with other powers in carving up China, while Fascist Germany also supported the Japanese imperialist invasion of China. However, all this is now the past, and should not hinder the present development of relations between the two countries. And, besides this, the Chinese Government and people make a very strict distinction between a handful of German imperialists and Fascists and the German people in general.

Second, both countries recognize the need to preserve world peace and protect their own country's independent sovereignty and safety and to resist foreign interference, control and threats. The German people have had enough experience of the horrors of war and now want to live in peace and safety while the peoples of China, in their struggle to realize the four modernizations, also understand the urgent need for a long period of sustained peace. The glory and stability of China is in harmony with the interests of the Federal Republic of Germany and hence receives the support and welcome of people from every class of West German society. China supports the move in West Germany and other West European countries to unite in strength, and welcomes their increasingly active role on the international scene. For these reasons the development of cooperation between West Germany and China not only corresponds to the interests of both countries, it is also of benefit to the preservation of world peace.

Third, in economic terms, not only is there a need, but there is potential for both countries to fulfill each other's needs and hence develop cooperation. Although West Germany is a highly developed industrial and technological country, it depends a great deal on imports of raw materials and energy and relies heavily on foreign markets. The vastness and richness of China as well as its enormous population makes it a potentially enormous market, rich in natural resources. But China needs to absorb administrative experience of advanced overseas science and technology, thus in economic terms both countries should and could make great use of each other. In terms of governmental policies, while China is striving for self reliance, it should continue to pursue policies of openness to foreign countries and thus on the basis of equality and mutual profit should develop all kinds of cooperation with foreign countries. Likewise, West Germany also considers foreign economic relations to be extremely important and has made them one of the central points of its foreign policy. Confronted with the present economic slump in the Western world and a bleak general situation, West Germany is extremely interested in expanding its product market as well as seeking new sources of raw materials and energy, and thus both countries have a desire to strengthen economic and technological cooperation.

Fourth, there is a long tradition of friendly exchange between the peoples of both countries. As early as the 17th century, the famous German philosopher and mathematician Leibnitz expressed the highest esteem for Chinese philosophy and advocated the practical application of Chinese philosophy in Europe. Chinese arts and crafts, in particular Chinese porcelain, were extremely popular in Germany for a while and Chinese imitations and copies were greatly in vogue for some time. In the 18th century the famous German poet Goethe came into contact with Chinese prose and poetry and took China as the theme of his "Dawn and Dusk in the Four Seasons of China and Germany". The 20th century has seen the emergence of the brilliant playwright Brecht, who displayed a great love of Chinese culture, and in the creation of his very individual theory of the theatre he drew on the art and skills of Beijing opera theatre style. Likewise, German natural sciences, literature, philosophy and music have all had an enormous influence on China. For example, in the 1620's the German missionary (Tang Ruo Wang Ceng) introduced to China the concepts of astronomical dating. The poems, novels and plays of Goethe, Schiller and Heine and other such famous Germans were translated into Chinese very early on, while the works of (Ke Lehuizhi) received great praise from Lu Xun. And of course the influence on China of German music and the philosophical theories of communism of Marx and Engels are well known. Something else worth mentioning is that between the First and Second World Wars many Chinese travelled to Germany to study or work, and many of these Chinese contributed greatly to the Chinese Revolution, later becoming proletarian revolutionaries, the greatest examples being of course Premier Zhou Enlai and Zhu De. Under the present historical conditions, this tradition of friendly contact both visibly and invisibly promotes cultural exchange and cooperation for mutual benefit between the two countries. Looking back at the past and looking forward to the future, it is reasonable for everyone to believe that there is a solid and objective basis as well as broad prospects for the development of friendly relations and cooperation between China and West Germany.

POLISH OFFICIAL WARNS U.S. OF REPRISALS

[Text] Warsaw, November 4 (XINHUA) -- Polish Deputy Foreign Minister Jozef Wiejacz told foreign reporters here today that further reprisals cannot be ruled out if the United States continues to be hostile towards Poland.

Soon after the United States suspended the most-favored-nation treatment for Poland on Oct. 27, Warsaw took two retaliatory measures: The American Polish-language magazine AMERYKA was banned in Poland and the U.S. Information Agency and other official agencies were asked to direct all offers of scholarships and invitations for Polish citizens to visit the United States through "competent Polish governmental institutions."

Referring to the follow-up meeting of the European security conference due to resume in Madrid on November 9, the Polish deputy foreign minister said there are signs that the United States will make use of the Madrid meeting to intervene in Poland's internal affairs and to make it more difficult for Poland to tide over its crisis.

He made it clear if the U.S. delegation raises the Polish issue at the meeting, Poland "will react".

Jozef Wiejacz said Poland wishes to develop relations with the United States on the basis of international norms, mutual equality and non-interference in each other's internal affairs.

On the question of whether Poland will restrict its relations with the United States in the future, he said it depends on the United States.

ISRAEL'S ECONOMIC CONTROL OF WEST BANK VIEWED

[Article by Le Shan [2867 1472]: "The West Bank of the Jordan River -- An Enslaved Market"]

[Text] Israeli aggressors have occupied the West Bank of the Jordan River for 15 years. During this time, the Israeli authorities have taken a series of measures to turn the West Bank into an Israeli dependency.

This arid and barren region has now become a market for Israeli products, a source of laborers and an important industrial base. Like an octopus using its tentacles, Israel has brought the West Bank under the control of its economic system.

Import and export on the West Bank of the Jordan is completely subject to the jurisdiction of the Israeli customs, and both import and export goods are bound by Israeli customs duty regulations. Shops there are filled with Israeli products. Israeli products can flow freely into the West Bank of the Jordan, but the products of the West Bank cannot easily find a way into Israel or elsewhere. In the early 1970's, Israeli products on the West Bank accounted for 17 percent of Israel's total export volume. Today, 25 percent of Israel's export products (except for diamonds) are marketed on the West Bank.

According to the relevant Israeli regulations, small industries on the West Bank of the Jordan must import materials from Israel and are only allowed to import those materials which Israel cannot supply. As a result, all industries on the West Bank have to rely on Israel for supplies, and without them, industries on the West Bank cannot be maintained.

Profound changes have also taken place in the structure of the 135,000-man labor force on the West Bank over the last 15 years. In 1969, laborers engaging in agricultural production accounted for about 46 percent of the total work force but now, owing to the increasing reduction of arable land and increasing flow of laborers into the construction and other business fields, laborers engaging in agricultural production account for only 26 percent of the total. Unskilled workers are kept at the bottom of the Israeli labor market. At the same time, 65,000 Palestinians are serving as laborers within the territory of Israel and another 15,000 Palestinians are employed in Israeli residential areas and Israeli institutions.

The Israeli authorities are attempting to move to the West Bank of the Jordan the industries squeezed into Israel's coastal areas. They have classified the West Bank as "the development area of the first category" and provide Israeli businessmen moving to the area with favorable terms in the areas of mortages, taxes, land supply and business operations, which the Palestinians on the West Bank do not enjoy. No one has provided funds for local Palestinians or created appropriate employment opportunities for educated Palestinians. The West Bank of the Jordan is becoming Israel's economic dependency with each passing day, constituting an important integral part of the aggressive scheme on the part of the Israeli authorities to occupy the West Bank forever.

RENMIN RIBAO DISCUSSES CLASS STRUGGLE ISSUES

[Editorial: "Correctly Appraise and Handle the Class Struggle in the Current Stage"]

[Text] Class struggle is a major theoretical issue in Marxism, and also an issue of practice with a bearing on the overall situation. Whether or not a scientific appraisal can be made of classes, class contraditions and class struggle determines whether the party's political line is correct or not. In 1956 the eighth party congress made a correct analysis of the changes in classes and class relations in China. Afterward, Comrade Mao Zedong also gave a correct exposition in "On the Correct Handling of Contraditions Among the People." However, these correct conclusions were not upheld. The major errors that afterward occurred in our work sprang from an idealistic erroneous appraisal of the class struggle. Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, the Central Committee has seriously summed up the lessons of history, properly handled the class struggle issue, brought about and developed the political situation of stability, unity, liveliness and vigor, smoothly shifted the focus of party and state work to economic construction, and created a new stage in our country's socialist construction.

In his report to the 12th party congress, Comrade Hu Yaobang reiterated our party's correct appraisal of and basic guidelines for current classes and class struggle. He said: "After the exploiting class ceases to exist as a class, the majority of contradictions existing in our society will not be of the nature of class struggle, and the class struggle will no longer be the main contradiction in our society. In a socialist society, when the exploitation system and the exploiting class have been eliminated, it is wrong to put forward and practice the principle 'take class struggle as the key link.' We must be very careful in distinguishing and handling contradictions between the enemy and ourselves and contradictions among the people, and avoid repeating the mistake of inflating class struggle. However, class struggle will continue to exist for a long time in our society, within a certain scope, and it might intensify under certain conditions."

When studying the 12th party congress documents, some comrades have raised the point: Why should there still be class struggle, since the exploiting class as a class has been eliminated? There are comrades who have continuously raised this question in recent years, holding that it is very difficult to answer. Why should there still be class struggle after the exploiting class as a class has been eliminated? Has not the exploiting class, as a class, already been eliminated in the PRC? We cannot say that the landlord class and the bourgeoisie still exist in the PRC. It is an objective fact that the exploiting class as a class has been eliminated. That a very few capitalists should come here from foreign countries to run joint ventures with us, on account of our open-door economic policy, is beneficial to our country's socialist economic construction. These capitalists are not citizens of the PRC, so we need not count them. However, we should soberly examine the situations we speak of below:

First, the exploiting class has only been eliminated in the scope of rule by the PRC. There is a part of PRC territory (Hong Kong and Macao) that we have not yet recovered, and there is also a part (Taiwan) that has not yet been reunified with us. There are, of course, still bourgeoisie in Hong Kong and Taiwan. Do the bourgeoisie in those places have no affect on us at all? We will certainly recover these places and fulfill the great cause of reunifying the motherland. After we have recovered these places and achieved reunification, we will not, in accordance with party principles, change the social system there, that is to say, the bourgeoisie in those places, of whom the great majority are patriotic, hope for the early reunification of the motherland and desire to make contributions to the motherland's four modernizations; however, there are also some people who apply noneconomic and political methods and also obscene methods, not just economic methods, to influence and corrupt certain unsteady and unpatriotic elements. Taiwan radio stations are continually producing reactionary propaganda, and Taiwan special agent organizations engage in all kinds of activities to sabotage our system and our cause of socialist construction. They are enemies of the Chinese people. Therefore, it is extremely evident that the class struggle in this respect still exists.

Second, it is a fact that the exploiting class as a class has been eliminated in mainland China; however, its remnants are still around. As in the case of an enemy army defeated by us, this does not mean that there cannot or will not be stragglers and disbanded soldiers continuing to snipe at us. There are only a very few exploiting class remnants clinging to their reactionary stand, but we cannot deny their existence just because there are only a few of them. They are still carrying out sabotage activities, and they are still our enemies, so how can we say that this is not class struggle? Some comrades hold that it is not logical to say that class struggle still exists after the elimination of the exploiting class as a class; quite the contrary, with the extinction of the exploiting class, when those fragmentary exploiting class remnants who have not capitulated still exist and still wage struggle against us, it is not logical to hold that this kind of struggle is not class struggle. This is a special kind of struggle, different from the past struggles of class against class, but it is still class struggle. We cannot say that this is not class struggle just because the form of struggle has changed.

Again, there are still the factional remnants of the "gang of four" and other criminal elements who deliberately sabotage the socialist system. They resort to all kinds of counterrevolutionary and hostile means to deal with us. This kind of struggle is of course class struggle.

Moreover, people from capitalist countries produce various different influences on China. Apart from normal influences, there are also abnormal ones, which inevitably possess ingredients of class struggle. Certain foreigners engage in espionage in China, and also carry out espionage against personnel we dispatch abroad. We cannot but acknowledge that this is class struggle.

Finally, in the current development stage of our socialist society, we cannot completely prevent certain people from doing mischief in various ways in the process of production and circulation. Certain people openly preach "people die for money, birds die for food." There are a number of loopholes and weak links in our systems and work which those money-grubbers can use to engage in criminal activities such as graft, embezzlement, smuggling, peddling contraband and so on. This is exploitation of the people, since these persons take without payment the fruit of others' labor without laboring themselves. Is that a type of economic crime class struggle? We cannot say that all criminal cases of whatever type are class struggle. However, these criminal activities that do serious damage to the socialist economy are a kind of class struggle. They are not ordinary criminal offenses, but criminal activities of the nature of class struggle. The aim of these criminal activities is to sabotage the socialist economic system. If we pay no heed to this, the socialist economy will be in danger of changing its nature. In short, in the current stage of development, we cannot yet completely eliminate the conditions for the reappearance of exploiting class elements.

The struggle against people of the categories mentioned above cannot but be regarded as class struggle. This kind of class struggle is not limited to the economic field; it occurs in the political and cultural fields and other spheres of social life. The view that such struggle is not class struggle is actually a gross deception. We should tell the people: This is a kind of struggle. Class struggle has not stopped and we should maintain our vigilance against it.

In the process of studying the 12th CPC Congress documents, some comrades have raised another problem: Since class struggle still exists, were not the ideas advocated before the launching and during the period of "Great Cultural Revolution" that capitalism would be restored, that capitalist-roaders existed at the upper and lower levels and that class struggle was the key link in all work and so forth proven by facts to be correct? The answer to this question is no. All those ideas were completely wrong and history has given its conclusion in this respect.

First, the above-mentioned class struggle still exists now and we must pay attention to it. However, we should not take class struggle of this kind as the key link of all our work and the guiding principle of our work.

If we believe this idea, this means we are falling into a trap laid by the enemy. If we still accept the idea that "class struggle should be taken as the key link," we will not be able to concentrate our efforts to implement the political line of socialist modernization. In that case, it is our enemies who will benefit. They hate to see us carry out our socialist construction. They like to see us fight against one another. The more severe the chaos that is created, the happier they will be.

Second, such class struggle is not a revolution in which one class overthrows the other. The activities of these hostile elements are completely illegal. They have lost the previous economic, political and social foundation on which their existence relied. They are no longer a class and are completely unable to rule us. It is unnecessary for us to overthrow their rule. On the contrary, it is necessary for us to apply state power and legal means to arrest, suppress and punish them. Therefore, this theory cannot be regarded as a "continuation of revolution" characterized by the overthrow of one class by another.

Third, contradictions between ourselves and the enemy are only in the minority. They cannot be confused with contradictions among the people. In our socialist society, most of the social contradictions are contradictions among the people in various forms. In the past, when we "took class struggle as the key link," we not only confused the contradictions between ourselves and the enemy with those among the people, but also turned things upside down in the struggle. Some persons who served the people wholeheartedly were regarded as targets of attack. Therefore, to carry out class struggle within a certain scope, we should not repeat the previous practice because the present class struggle is entirely different from that of the past. In particular, we should on no account determine people's class status according to their ideology. Of course, we should oppose reactionary ideology. However, we should not determine people's class status according to their ideology -- a practice which Kang Sheng and others propagated during the "Great Cultural Revolution."

Fourth, we are now improving our legal system. We should deal with the criminal activities of the hostile elements according to law, no matter how ferocious they are. We should handle their cases according to law in light of the seriousness of their crime. We are not allowed to deal with them by relying on anything except legal means.

Some people have also said: The reason why these enemies carry out various kinds of sabotage activities is because we have not carried out political movements in the past few years. This idea is wrong. For a very long period in the past, political movements never stopped. However, apart from the incessant appearance of false "enemies," the true enemies continued to appear. They never stopped their struggles against us and they were not eliminated. Even during the period of the "Great Cultural Revolution," the "hit one, oppose three" movement was also carried out. Therefore, it is wrong to think that we can wipe out those enemies by launching political movements. Here we do not mean to negate the significance of other political movements of a different nature. What we mean is that the problem of class struggle should be handled within the scope of the state law and according to a strictly legal procedure. Hostile elements should be punished according to law. Of course, we should mobilize and rely on the masses. However, we should not follow the previous method of mass movements to indiscriminately overthrow people. This method should not be adopted.

We say that class struggle exists within certain scopes. Some comrades might ask: What do you mean by certain scopes? The so-called certain scopes refers to the situations mentioned above. The so-called certain scopes mean that they do not involve all people or most people. They only involve a small portion of people and a tiny number of people. Although the scopes are not big, we should not neglect them. If we neglect them, our socialist system will be sabotaged. The report delivered at the 12th CPC Congress regards these people as white ants. They are not conspicuous, but they can bore through the whole house. Therefore, we should not slacken our vigilance against them. This struggle will exist for a long time and we should not expect to eliminate it within 1 or 2 years. We should constantly carry out this struggle.

We should keep a clear head and persist in adopting the Marxist class viewpoint to assess the present situation of class struggle in our country and to deal with it properly. In so doing, we will be able to consolidate and develop the political situation of stability and unity and ensure that our socialist modernization will develop victoriously without any interference.

WAN LI, DENG LIQUN AT RURAL IDEOLOGICAL MEETING

[Text] Beijing, November 5 (XINHUA) -- The challenges and problems of increased prosperity among peasants was the subject of a national rural ideological and political education conference which closed here today.

The rural prosperity is the result of the agricultural responsibility system -- which makes use of initiative and incentives at the household level.

Other objectives of the conference included improving the style of work of cadres and party members at the grassroots through rectification, and improving standards of social conduct and public order in the countryside.

The 10-day conference was sponsored by the Propaganda Department and the Rural Policy Research Office of the Secretariat of the party Central Committee. Wan Li, member of the Political Bureau of the C.P.C. Central Committee and vice-premier, and Deng Liqun, member of the Secretariat and head of the Propaganda Department, spoke at the conference.

Among the 220 participants were: provincial, municipal and regional party committee secretaries in charge of agriculture from across the country; heads of propaganda departments; some prefectural and county party secretaries; and leading officials of related departments under the State Council.

The consensus of the participants was that socialist spirit was necessary for the country's rural areas to flourish economically and politically.

While relaxing some aspects of central planning to enliven the rural economy, ideological and political education among peasants should be vigorously strengthened as they become more prosperous.

The conference noted that significant changes had occurred among Chinese peasants in regard to political, economic and cultural developments in the last three decades:

-- Class alignment in rural areas has fundamentally changed. The peasants had changed themselves from small private owners into socialist producers. Former landlords and rich peasant elements had been transformed into working people who support themselves by their own labor;

-- Division of labor among the peasants had changed with the restructuring of agriculture through diversification and the expansion of rural enterprises and cultural, educational and health services;

-- A "changing of the guard" was taking place in the peasant ranks with middle-aged and young peasants becoming the main force of the Chinese peasantry;

-- The average education level of the peasants had risen; and

-- rising income had improved the living standards of the Chinese peasants as a whole.

The party's ideological and political education in rural areas should, therefore, meet this new situation and its needs, the conference said.

Peasants want the party to continue to maintain the current rural policy, the conference stressed. So it is necessary to explain clearly the differences and connection between the communist ideal and the present rural policies and guarantee that the present rural policy will help in the realization of the communist ideal. The present responsibility system for production will last for a long time and it will not be altered against the will of the peasants.

The conference noted that the thinking of some of the peasants was still influenced by various sources -- capitalist ideas, remnant feudal ideas and the force of old habits and increasing prosperity could generate new problems. This requires vigorous ideological and political work in the countryside, the conference said.

Local party organizations this winter and the coming spring should run training sessions for rural cadres and party members, the conference decided. Then they should explain the essentials of the party's 12th national congress, commend households which earned large incomes through labor and reward peasants who made contributions in agrotechnology.

Raising the education level of the peasants would continue to be an urgent task, the conference was told. New cultural and educational undertakings should be included in the overall local development plan.

Deng Liqun Speech

["Excerpts of Important Speech by Comrade Deng Liqun at National Conference on Ideological and Political Work in Rural Areas" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Beijing, 6 Nov (XINHUA) -- At the national conference on ideological and political work in the rural areas on 1 November, Deng Liqun, member of the Secretariat and director of the Propaganda Department of the CPC Central Committee, made an important speech entitled "Some Opinions on Strengthening and Improving Ideological and Political Work in Rural Areas."

In discussing the situation in the countryside, Comrade Deng Liqun said: The situation in the countryside is quite good and it will surely be better in the future. How has the situation in the countryside become quite good? How can it be better? What are the reasons for this? To discuss these questions, we should first deal with our views on the large numbers of peasants in our country.

He said: Marxism tells us that history is made by the masses. The report to the 12th party congress pointed out: In the final analysis, we have made achievements in various fields since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee because our party firmly trusts the people and relies on them. In compliance with the wishes of the people and the trend of historical development, the party has formulated the correct lines, principles and policies. As a result, we have effected a historic change and opened a new historic period in the countryside. In dealing with the question of the peasants at the later stage of the "Cultural Revolution," Comrade Mao Zedong cited as proof an assessment of individual peasants made by Lenin in the period of new economic policy: "Small production engenders capitalism and the bourgeoisie continuously, daily, hourly, spontaneously and on a mass scale," and this also applies to the situation in socialist China. While correcting "leftist" mistakes, we negated this view. Through socialist transformation and the cooperative transformation of agriculture, the exploiting classes in our countryside have been abolished. Despite the fact that there are still various problems among them, the peasants as a whole should not be treated in the same way that they were before the socialist transformation. A host of facts since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee have repeatedly shown us that large numbers of new peasants have been constantly building a new socialist life, creating new things and making new contributions. This is the tremendous motivational force of a historic change that has taken place in the countryside since the 3d plenary session of the 11th Central Committee.

He said: Comrades, let us look back for a while. The institution of various forms of production responsibility systems and the operation and management reforms in recent years have originated from peasants' initative. After the masses of peasants created these things and party organizations at various levels summed them up, the party Central Committee approved and institutionalized them and began to popularize them step by step. The peasants are teachers while we are students. This situation is essentially quite different from that in the period after the "Great Leap Forward," especially from that in the "Cultural Revolution," during which rural work was guided by erroneous "leftist" ideas. The procedures followed and the methods used now are entirely different from those in the previous period. In that period, what was promoted or popularized was done from the highest level to the grassroots or was imposed down from level to level. When something was finally forced on peasants, they had to act accordingly whether they were willing or unwilling to do so. Such a practice was actually "arranging things among the peasants by compulsion." By following such a practice, even a good thing would be turned into a bad one. As for subjective ideas of higher-ups that were divorced from the masses and reality, they could get us absolutely nowhere. This situation changed completely after the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee.

Under the leadership of our party, the masses, after emancipating themselves, have been first in taking action in pushing our cadres forward step by step, and this has been from bottom to top. In the final analysis, the broad masses of peasants are the motivational force of our advance. In his introductory note to the book "The Socialist Upsurge in China's Countryside," Comrade Mao Zedong said that the masses of peasants have a potentially inexhaustible enthusiasm for socialism. It was indeed so at the initial stage of cooperation transformation of agriculture. Therefore, such enthusiasm was increasingly dampened by "leftist" guiding ideology and the "leftist" method of leadership. Even if some people still had such enthusiasm, it was hardly possible for them to bring it into full play.

Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, we have firmly and bravely corrected "leftist" mistakes and have thoroughly changed all subjective, compulsive and commanding measures, thus freeing the peasants from shackles. As a result, they have been greatly emancipated. Their potentially inexhaustible enthusiasm for socialism has become increasingly noticeable, and they have been bringing it into full play. The production teams have been given greater decisionmaking power, and the masses have also been given greater power to solve their problems. With a stronger sense of responsibility as masters of the country, the masses of peasants have begun to take their destiny into their own hands, thus becoming true socialist masters. They can carry out creative activities and are in fact going all out to do so. They create things themselves, make their own choices, make an appraisal of things and popularize them. This is of course only a beginning, and we should not overestimate it. However, this beginning is praiseworthy and may be said to be of epoch-making significance. Now that hundreds of millions of peasants have begun to take their destiny into their own hands, our agriculture and countryside are bound to be full of promise. So many things have been created in various rural areas that it is not enough to describe such creations with the expression of a hundred blooming flowers. It can be put this way: Flowers of all sorts are blooming in a riot of color.

He said: By saying this, it does not mean underestimating the role of our party leadership, even less does it mean rejecting party leadership, letting things drift along of letting people do whatever they like without taking the overall interests of the state into account. Peasants have carried out all such activities under the party's leadership. We must strengthen and improve party leadership, and we must never waver in this matter. The question here is: How can we really strengthen party leadership? Party leadership cannot simply be summed up as issuing instructions and orders. Comrade Zhang Wentian said that leadership means service and that leading the people means serving them. This view is very profound. "Arranging things among the masses by compulsion" is not strengthening party leadership, but only separating the party from the masses. By leadership, we mean that we should enable the people to understand their vital interests more clearly and to work in unity for their vital interests. In other words, we should enable the people to enhance their political consciousness, to strengthen their determination, to emancipate themselves and to bring their socialist enthusiasm into full play. In a sense, one of the leaders's responsibilities is to help people free themselves from shackles of various kinds, including the spiritual shackles originating from exploiting classes as well as the spiritual shackles that have formed as a result of one's lack of political consciousness.

Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, our party Central Committee leadership has returned to the correct Marxist party it adhered to at the 7th and 8th party congresses. The socialist creativeness of the masses of peasants has been brought into play primarily because the party has effectively set things to rights in its guiding ideology and practical work, overcome "left" mistakes, freed the vast numbers of cadres and the masses of peasants from the yoke of subjectivism and dogmatism and made it possible for them to dare to think, speak and act and boldly create along socialist lines. Without the work done to untie the hands of the peasants, their enthusiasm could not have been brought into play, and they could not have created anything even if they wanted to. The party Central Committee provided the conditions, pointed out the correct orientation and opened up a broad world for the hundreds of millions of peasants to give full scope to their abilities.

He said: The correctness of the party Central Committee's leadership lies in its genuine respect for the masses' initiative. The party Central Committe never suppresses or pours cold water on any new creation by the peasant masses. On the contrary, on the basis of careful investigation and study, it always affirms, sums up and improves what the masses have created and helps the masses perfect and popularize it step by step. In popularizing it, consideration is given to concrete local conditions and the principle of voluntary participation is followed, avoiding any coercive measures while adapting measures to local conditions and work requirements. Many things are first created by the masses and then summed up and improved by the party Central Committe; then they are recreated by the masses and summed up and improved again by the party Central Committee; this process repeats itself in an endless cycle. In this way new things can grow quickly and the party Central Committee's policies can become increasingly better and richer. The party Central Committee supports the things created by the peasants and then leads them in creating more. This cycle fully shows that our party Central Committee has restored the fine tradition of the mass line; really practiced the principle of from the masses, to the masses, taking the ideas of the masses and concentrating them, then going to the masses, persevering in the ideas and carrying them through; and has formulated; tested, revised and perfected its policies on the basis of mass practice. As a result, the masses and the party have advanced together, practice and policies have advanced together and our socialist cause has been thriving. When we say that the party Central Committee's leadership has been correct and wise since the 3d plenary session of the 11th party Central Committee and that these years are one of the best periods since the founding of the People's Republic, the previously mentioned facts should be the most important indications and the most important grounds for us to say so.

On the rural situation, he added: We cannot say that everything is fine in the rural areas because the main aspect of the situation is very good and because the majority of the peasants are doing well. There still is a negative aspect. Two influences remain in the minds of the masses and cadres, which should not be underestimated. One is the influence of the "left" ideas which has not been completely eliminated, especially among cadres, a considerable number of cadres have not yet completely emancipated themselves from the shackles of "left" ideas. The other is that some peasants have not yet cast off the ideas and habits of small producers and small private owners, and that they are still influenced and corrupted by capitalist and feudal things. In addition, there indeed are people who still want to return to the old road of old China. Those who want to return to individual farming are small in number, but this does not mean that they do not exist. In some places, the cadres and masses have joined each other in stealing, even plundering, state property and destroying forests, and these cases cannot be dismissed as not being serious. As for the usual behavior of benefitting oneself at the expense of the public or others, it is quite prevalent among some people. Therefore, we should say that there are two old roads: one is the old road that practices "left" ideas, and the other is the old road of old China. We must lower our guard against the people in the rural areas who want to return to these two old roads. Of course, in most cases, the problems are those among the people themselves, and they should be solved mainly by education. We should also see that while the implementation of the policy of opening up to the outside world and enlivening the domestic economy is entirely correct and must be continued, serious criminal activities do take place in the economic, political, cultural and other spheres of social life and are quite rampant in some places. This proves that class struggle still exists within certain limits and may sharpen under certain conditions. We cannot say that this appraisal applies only to the cities and not to the rural areas. We cannot relax our proper vigilance simply because the main aspect of the rural situation is very good.

On the tasks and contents of ideological and political work in the rural areas from now on, Comrade Deng Liqun said that some time ago when Comrade Hu Yaobang gave a talk on ideological and political work, he quoted Comrade Mao Zedong's remarks: "In our employment of troops we need progressive, flexible strategy and tactics, without which we likewise cannot win victory.

"Nevertheless, soldiers are the foundation of an army; unless they are imbued with a progressive political spirit, and unless such a spirit is fostered through progressive political work, it will be impossible to achieve genuine unity between officers and men, impossible to arouse their enthusiasm for the war of resistance to the full, and impossible to provide a sound basis for the most effective use of all our technical equipment and tactics." Although this was said about the army, the reasoning is applicable to all fields of work. We want to focus our studies at this meeting on how to integrate the general principle of the party's ideological and political work with the concrete situation in the rural area and on how to apply the general principle in the rural areas. Peasants are the most practical-minded people. They will accept our reasoning and our policies not because of our high-sounding words and perfect-looking articles, but on the basis of their personal experience. They accept what they think is in keeping with their intersts and wishes and what sounds pleasing, satisfactory and suitable. Otherwise, no matter how eloquently you may talk, they will pay no attention or turn their backs on you. If they are forced to sit down and listen, they will simply let the words go in one ear and out the other. They will accept or reject our party's policies and our arguments on the basis of their personal experience. We must make this our starting point in considering the tasks, contents and methods of ideological and political work in the rural areas.

Therefore, ideological and political work in the rural areas must focus on various kinds of rural work and on the implementation of current policies, and must not deviate from the current rural policies and the peasants' personal interests and experience. Ideological and political work involves reasoning things out, and it seems that we should talk primarily about what we are doing, that is, to incorporate ideological and political work in economic work. We have done a good deal of work in this area in the past, and it is hoped that we will do more. What should, and what should not, be done in implementing a policy, and why -- what we have said in the past on these very questions is far from adequate. When we say that we often take things as they are and seldom get to the reasons behind them, we are referring precisely to this situation. More often than not we would read a policy document of the party Central Committee item by item from the text, but say very little about why the party Central Committee has made the policy, what the policy is based on, what problem it aims to resolve, and how it should be understood and implemented in light of the actual rural situation. In the course of its implementation, it is still necessary to give pertinent answers to new questions raised by the peasants and explain to them things they need to know in a way they can easily accept. This seems to be simple, but is not easy to do really well.

On the objectives of rural ideological and political work in the next 3 years, Comrade Deng Liqun said: It is planned to spend 3 winters and springs to do a good job in ideological and political work so that a fundamental turn for the better can be achieved in the ideological and political work in the rural areas. The main task of ideological and political work in this winter and the coming spring is to propagate the spirit of the 12th party congress in connection with the actual rural situation. Emphasis should be placed on explaining the congress's decision and guiding principle on rural development and agricultural growth so as to create a new situation in socialist construction in rural areas. Through ideological and political work, we should strive to accomplish the tasks set by the 12th party congress that the responsibility system for production in various forms should be adhered to for a long time to come and that it should be gradually perfected through the summing up of the masses' practical experience. In this winter and the coming spring, it is necessary to conduct education among primary party organizations and party members in the rural areas. The party organizations should effectively strengthen and improve their work in educating and supervising party members and earnestly correct the past mistakes of taking on too much day-to-day work, resulting in the party's failing to take care of itself.

On the relationship between politics and economy, Comrade Deng Liqun said: You comrades have expressed the hope that I will discuss the issue of the relationship between politics and economy. This is indeed a fairly complex issue which requires serious study.

Comrade Mao Zedong argued: "Ideological and political work is the lifeblood of economic and all other work." After repeated deliberations, the 6th Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee decided to reaffirm this argument of Comrade Mao Zedong's. What then does this argument really mean? When this argument was discussed, the party Central Committee pointed out that it means that all economic and other work must have a correct orientation. If one is totally engrossed in economic and other professional work and pays absolutely no attention to politics, more often than not he will lose his bearings either consciously or unconsciously. Without ideological and political work, one will not be able to adhere steadily to this orientation. When we say orientation, we mean socialist orientation. Comrade Deng Xiaoping pointed out on 3 April this year that adhering to the socialist course and realizing the four modernizations requires four political guarantees. Each of the four guarantees he mentioned involves vast amounts of complex work. Restructure the administration and the economic setup; build a socialist spiritual civilization; strike at the serious crimes in the economic and other spheres and consolidate the party -- these are four short sentences, but they involve a great deal of work. If these various tasks are not properly done or not done at all, the question will certainly arise which orientation and which way we are going to follow while carrying out the four modernizations and economic construction.

Comrade Mao Zedong also argued: "Ideological and political work guarantees the accomplishment of economic and technical work and serves as the economic foundation." Our experience shows that if a policy is to be effective, this policy itself is a political task; a series of ideological and political work must be done before we can help the masses implement the policy consciously and voluntarily and give play to their enthusiasm in a still better way. When ideological and political work has been properly done and when the consciousness of the broad masses of cadres and people has been heightened, the implementation of policies and the accomplishment of economic work will be more soundly guaranteed. Ideological and political work is meant to serve the economic foundations; it must not interfere with, obstruct or undermine this foundation. This economic foundation is what we normally call the socialist economic system.

Linking these two arguments enables us to understand better that ideological and political work must be integrated with economic work and that they cannot be separated from one another. Our problem in the past can be described as having two separate skins which were not integrated, or not properly integrated. Our future task is to have them closely integrated like blending water and milk.

On strengthening education on communist ideology and strengthening education on policies and the current situation, Comrade Deng Liqun said: With regard to the relationship between communist ideology and current policies, everybody acknowledges that they are different but interrelated. How should this difference and interrelationship be understood? This issue will be more easily understood if it is explained with something that we often encounter in our daily life. Let me cite the issue of the relationship between the communist attitude toward work and distribution according to work. According to Lenin, the communist attitude toward work means that work quotas are unnecessary and that one who has such an attitude will work consciously and voluntarily regardless of pay. Distribution according to work is known to us as meaning that one who works more gets more pay, one who works less gets less pay and one who does not work gets nothing. The difference between the two is obvious. The interrelationship between the two can also be often observed in our daily life. The current quota and policy is 8 hours of daily work for cadres as well as for workers. But we can also see that many cadres, workers, intellectuals and fighters work more than 8 hours a day. Have we ever haggled over a few more hours of extra work? Have we ever complained that we have worked a few more hours without pay and demanded that we be compensated for the extra hours of work? Do the majority of comrades think that they should be compensated for the extra work? No.

Can this be called a communist attitude toward work? Does our work attitude meet Lenin's requirement? The answer, of course, is affirmative. But can we change our 8-hour quota because of this? Certainly not. This is because most people do not yet have this awareness, and because our productivity is still low.

This shows that adhering to a communist attitude toward work and adhering to the current policies are closely interrelated on the one hand, but should be strictly distinguished on the other. Our newspapers have often reported the stories of certain exemplary people who are ahead of the times. They say that some people have accomplished a year's work within 6 months and that some have accomplished the work for several years within 1 year. Instead of haggling over rewards, these comrades work diligently and selflessly as usual. This is certainly a communist attitude toward work and must be commended. However, if all our factories increase the workers' workload simply because these advanced elements are able to accomplish a year's work within 6 months,the advanced comrades will find themselves isolated because the majority of other workers are unable to attain the same level. The interrelationship and the differences shown by this example are also obvious. Here is another example: For the sake of the communist cause, many of our revolutionary precursors gave up their lives on the battlefields and in our enemy's prisons. Did these comrades ever think of what kind of rewards they would receive? Never! One can never be a martyr if he cannot forget his personal gain. Conversely, however, we certainly cannot formulate a social policy demanding that each and every person in our society ignore and give up his individual interests. While we can demand that the party members, particularly those in leading positions, do so, we cannot demand that the masses follow suit. Our social policy must take the interests of the state, the collectives and the individuals into consideration. Therefore, everyone should understand that in our life a communist attitude toward work and the policy of distribution according to work are strictly distinguished and closely interrelated. When this issue is understood, it will be easier for everyone to accept the explanations for other issues concerning the relationship between communist ideology and the current policies.

On building socialism with Chinese characteristics, Comrade Deng Liqun said: Comrade Chen Yun once presented a very important opinion. He maintained that the occurrence and development of the systems of production responsibility in the rural areas and the systems of economic responsibility adopted by various industrial enterprises are no less significant than the three major transformations [socialist transformation of agriculture, handicrafts, and the capitalist industry and commerce] because these systems have gradually put an end to the situation under which everyone shares from the same big pot and is guaranteed a job -- a phenomenon known as owning an iron rice bowl. Now, the smashing of this iron rice bowl signifies an end to egalitarianism and a solution to the problem that everyone is treated equally regardless of whether he works or how much he has accomplished. If this problem remains unresolved, it will be impossible to bring the workers' enthusiasm into full play. This opinion touches upon the issue of building socialism with Chinese characteristics, including the issue of building a new socialist countryside with Chinese characteristics. Viewed from what has been accomplished during the past several years, particularly the implementation of the various responsibility systems, we can say that our country's rural areas have started taking the path toward building socialism with Chinese characteristics. In his "Introduction to 'Critique of the Political Economy,'" Marx pointed out that production, consumption, distribution and exchange are the four links, or the four essential factors, in production relations. With regard to production, we have already found something with special characteristics that is different from what we had in the past and from what other socialist countries have experienced. In his work Marx discussed consumption of what has been produced and consumption by individual consumers. With regard to consumption, changes have started taking place in the rural areas as a result of production reforms. On the issue of distribution, in particular, we have adopted the responsibility system under which a contract is linked to output. This is certainly of great originality.

What seems to be lagging now is exchange, which is most controversial and problematical. However, this also shows that we can no longer afford to delay solving this issue. Viewed from the trend of development, we have already taken the socialist path with Chinese characteristics and the further we advance, the broader our path and the more down-to-earth our steps have become. We should have this confidence.

Dwelling on the steps to be taken in doing ideological and political work in the rural areas, Comrade Deng Liqun said: Generally speaking, the cadres, the party members and the CYL members must be educated ahead of the masses and those who are not party and CYL members. There are two reasons why ideological and political work must first be done for the cadres. First, there are relatively more ideological problems among the cadres regarding the implementation of the current rural policies and we can no longer delay solving these problems. We must, through our work this winter and the coming spring, strive to help an overwhelming majority of cadres foster a correct understanding so that they can march forward lightly without a burden.

The second reason is that "being educators and teachers, they themselves must first be educated." We cannot do any of our work without the cadres at various levels, or we must do all of our work through them. If their thinking is not straightened out, policies -- no matter how good they are -- can hardly be implemented successfully. When cadres' minds are at ease after their thinking is straightened out or their minds are emancipated, their enthusiasm will run high. Then, correct policies will be successfully implemented; moreover, even policies which have some defects or deficiencies as far as specific local conditions are concerned can also be supplemented or improved in the course of their implementation with the approval of party committees at higher levels. Therefore, we face the question of reeducating our cadres at various levels which is un unshirkable duty of our leading bodies. It may be said that this is a debt we owe cadres because, in the final analysis, the past "leftist" policies were issued from the highest level to the grassroots and they were only the executors of such policies. We should first bear responsibility for this. At the same time, we should also help them improve themselves by correcting their mistakes.

In dealing with the ranks of rural ideological and political workers, Comrade Deng Liqun said: Because tremendous changes have taken place in the countryside, it is no longer approriate for us to continue implementing the class line of the "poor and lower-middle peasants." Then, what is the line for our work from now on? Some comrades have suggested that the line be called one of uniting, organizing and relying on activists in the countryside to do ideological and political work among the broad masses of peasants. I think that we can put it this way before we come up with a better formulation and that we should improve this view by supplementing it with new ideas while putting it into practice. The activists we have just referred to should not be confused with those who became well-off first. We encourage peasants to become well-off through hard work. However, those who become well-off economically are not equivalent to those who are advanced ideologically and politically. The advanced elements should include qualified Communist Party members, qualified CYL members, cadres, peasants who have acquitted themselves well in implementing the party's policies since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, demobilized soldiers, middle and primary school teachers and educated young people. Cadres, party members, CYL members, demobilized soldiers, middle and primary school teachers and educated young people have basically acquitted themselves well, but some of them have yet to be straightened out in their thinking on some questions. We should help them straighten out their thinking practically. As for those who have acquitted themselves very poorly, they naturally cannot be regarded as advanced elements.

In dealing with the methods of doing ideological and political work in the countryside, Comrade Deng Liqun said: It is necessary persistently to use the method of persuasion and education and the method of commending the advanced. We must never use the past method of "clearing the way with mass criticism and repudiation" again.

It appears that three methods can be widely used. First, a system of "a party member establishing contact with several households" should be instituted. Second, commune members and other people should draw up "written pledges" and put them into practice. In drawing up such written pledges, of course, the mass line must be followed. Ideas that are to be written into such pledges should not come from leaders or cadres but from the masses. After drawing up a written pledge according to local conditions and with the consent of all those concerned, they all should follow the pledge and check each other to see if they have fulfilled the pledge. Third, it is necessary to recall the past and contrast it with the present. This was once a good method with which we educated peasants and soldiers. Old people who lived in the old society have now become fewer and fewer in number. In places where three are such are old people, they may recall their sufferings in the old society and compare such sufferings with their present happiness. In addition, there is another way of recalling the past and comparing it with the present -- recalling the situation before the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee and comparing it with the changes that have taken place since then. Favorable reports have been received from places where people have done so. Recalling the old society and comparing it with the new society is different in nature from recalling the situation before the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee and comparing it with the changes that have taken place since then. The former is directed at the enemy while the latter is aimed at drawing a lesson from our own mistakes. This involves the question of the boundary line between Xian and Yanan as Comrade Mao Zedong once mentioned. In recalling the situation before the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee and comparing it with the changes that have taken place since then, we should concern ourselves with facts and not with individuals. Our purpose in doing so is to learn a lesson and make progress together. The most effective way is to give guidance by doing such recalling and comparing from top to bottom. Cadres should first recall what they did in the past and how they became awakened; they should recall how they resolutely implemented what they then regarded as correct and how they came to understand that what they were following was wrong. When the cadres make themselves clear to peasants, the latter will follow suit and become mollified.

Comrade Deng Liqun said: It is necessary to give full play to the role of various organizations, such as cultural centers, broadcasting stations, technical advice stations, youth homes, evening shcools for peasants, political schools for peasants, recreational sports and cultural organizations as well as many new organizations that have emerged one after another. It is particularly necessary to make full use of such propaganda media as the radio, television, films, books and newspapers.

He said: All such activities should be conducted to achieve a general objective, that is, to build a new socialist countryside. Now peasants in some areas are voluntarily carrying out activities to build cultured villages, cultured households and five-good families. Such activities are being conducted with a view to building a new, cultured and prosperous socialist countryside.

Comrade Deng Liqun finally dealt with the question of leadership over ideological and political work in the countryside. He said: What is most important in this regard is to put ideological and political work as an important item on the agendas of party committees. The party committees should regularly discuss ideological and political work and check on it. The principal responsible comrades of the party committees should personally grasp ideological and political work. Party work should be separated from government work, and the party committees should not take on day-to-day administrative work. The new party constitution stipulates that party leadership consists mainly of political, ideological and organizational leadership. In his report to the seventh party congress on the revision of the party constitution, Comrade Shaoqi made some remarks on this question, which are still very profound and have practical significance for understanding the importance of ideological and political work.

He said: "When we Communists, the vanguard of the masses of the people, do any work before the masses acquire a political consciousness, our duty is to use all effective and proper methods to arouse them to acquire such a political consciousness. This is the work we must do well as the first step no matter how difficult it is or how long it takes. This is because we must do the work well at the first step before we can take a second step. When the masses become politically conscious to a certain extent, our duty then is to guide their actions and to guide them to get organized and to wage a struggle. When the masses are organized to wage a struggle, we then arouse them to become more conscious politically. This is the way we should guide the masses step by step to fight for the realization of the basic slogans put forth by the party for them. This is the role we Communists as well as the activists among the masses and all great personages play in the people's cause. Our role is no more than this. If some people attempt to play more roles than this one, they may commit all kinds of mistakes. In that case, heroism, commandism, taking everything into one's own hands and bestowing something on others as a favor would occur." These remarks are very good. When these remarks are followed, mistakes will not be made. In the past, there were indeed many manifestations of commandism and the phenomena of taking everything into one's own hands and many other "leftist" things, in addition the "leftist" guiding ideology.

Comrade Deng Liqun said: To implement this view in our work, it is necessary to grasp conscientiously the successful experiences we have gained since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee. This means that we must uphold the Marxist ideological line and the party's mass line. The masses now have a tremendous enthusiasm and creativeness. In doing any work, including ideological and political work, we should learn from the masses first. The best way to learn from the masses is to investigate and study among them. At a briefing, a comrade made a few remarks which I consider very good. These remarks are: Whoever has investigated and studied among the masses has emancipated his mind, and whoever has failed to investigate and study among the masses can hardly avoid being rigid in thinking.

On the need for the leadership to emancipate the mind, Comrade Deng Liqun said: After the discussion on the question of the criterion of truth began throughout the country, the party Central Committee put forward the slogan to emancipate the mind, and practice has proven its complete correctness. However, there are different understandings to the meaning of emancipating the mind, and some understandings are indeed not very proper and produce an adverse effect. In the past few years, there have been positive and negative experiences and experience in wrongly understanding the meaning of emancipating the mind. To emancipate the mind, one must respect the masses' creativeness. Those who do not respect the masses' creativeness are bound to take a roundabout course in their thinking. Criticizing "left" ideas is conducive to emancipating the mind, so is criticizing right ideas. For a period of time, there has been a misunderstanding: It seemed that criticizing "left" ideas was to emancipate the mind, but criticizing right ideas was bound to shackle the mind. We cannot see it that way. Only by respecting the masses' initiative, frequently conducting investigation among the masses and attentively listening to the voices of practice can we emancipate our minds and embark on the correct path. Those who mechanically cite books and copy foreign experience, or live in solitude and cudgel their brains, cannot really emancipate their minds. In the end, they will become slaves of one kind or another. Real emancipation of the mind comes from maintaining close ties with the masses and keeping in close touch with reality and from the correct understanding of the objective laws. How did socialism develop from utopian to scientific? What is the fundamental difference between utopian socialism and scientific socialism? The former holds that the means to solve social problems is to be contrived from the mind, and that it is necessary to depend on a genius to dream up an effective prescription, which he thinks is entirely new and perfect, to save the world.

In contrast, scientific socialism holds that it is necessary to study accurately all aspects of social realities, and that, as Engels said, the way to solve social problems "should not be invented from the mind, but should be discovered through the mind from existing material facts of production." Our comrades doing practical and rural work, in particular, should go to the grassroots to understand the conditions there and discover the new things and new creations emerging everywhere in the countryside, for this is the only way to help us use our brains and find good ways to solve problems and improve our work.

BEIJING RADIO ON POLITICAL WORK IN RURAL AREAS

OW060121 Beijing Domestic Service in Mandarin 1200 GMT 5 Nov 82

[Station commentary: "Improve and Strengthen Ideological and Political Work in the Rural Areas"]

[Text] Shortly after the 12th party congress, the party Central Committee decided to convene a national conference on ideological and political work in the rural areas to discuss the question of how to improve and strengthen this work in the countryside.

This is of great significance for thoroughly implementing the guidelines laid down by the 12th party congress and developing the excellent situation in the countryside. Party committees at all levels must conscientiously implement the guidelines of this conference and effectively strengthen ideological and political work in the rural areas.

To do ideological and political work successfully, it is first necessary to appraise accurately the present-day peasantry. Since the socialist transformation, the exploiting classes have been abolished in our countryside. The peasants as a whole have now become producers under a cooperative system -- new socialist peasants. A host of facts since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee has repeatedly shown that the new peasants in the vast countryside are constantly creating new things and contributing to building a new socialist life. This is the biggest motive force of the historic change which has taken place in the countryside in recent years.

Of course, it should also be noted that there are still negative aspects in the countryside. There are now two kinds of influence on the minds of masses and cadres. One is the leftist influence; some cadres have yet to free themselves completely from the trammels of leftist ideas. The other is the influence of capitalist and feudalist ideas; some peasants have not yet freed themselves from the habits of small producers or small proprietors or have not yet completely done so. This is why capitalism and feudalism still have a corrosive influence on them.

Only by acquainting ourselves with the situation among the present-day peasnats will we be able to have a clear orientation for our ideological and political work.

The party's ideological and political policy in the countryside is a basic guarantee for the successful performance of our economic and other work in the countryside. The tasks in ideological and political work in the new historical period are to educate the peasants in communist ideology, to enhance their communist, patriotic and collectivist consciousness, to increase their ability to know and change the world, to enable them to conscientiously resist and overcome decadent capitalist and feudalist ideas and to train a new generation of disciplined peasants with ideals, morality and culture.

In doing ideological and political work in the countryside, it is necessary to use persistently the methods of persuasion, education and putting stress on commending the advanced. The content of propaganda should be linked with the rural situation and peasants' vital interests. Currently, propaganda should be used to promulgate the present rural policies, on what is being done, and definite answers should be given to questions raised by peasants. Lectures should be given on what peasants want most to know. We should not only explain things as they stand but also explain the principles of such things.

When you say something which strikes a chord in peasants' hearts, it is pleasing to their ears and they will accept the principles you explain to them. Otherwise, if what you say is not pleasing to their ears, they will just walk away. Even if they reluctantly sit there, they will not pay any attention to what you say.

In strengthening ideological and political work in the countryside, attention should also be paid to solving the problems of propaganda media and personnel. Various rural areas should organize local activists into the propaganda forces and give full play to the role of such propaganda media as the radio, television, films, newspapers and journals. At the same time, vigorous efforts should be made to conduct spare-time cultural activities, to build culture centers and to run various types of schools for peasants.

It is a task of the whole party to do ideological and political work in the country-side. Party committees at all levels should attach grea importance to this work and give it priority. They should enthusiastically support peasants' creative spirit and quickly sum up and popularize the good situation and useful experiences in strengthening ideological and political work in the countryside.

Under the unified leadership of party committees, CYL organizations, women's federations, militia and other departments should coordinate closely in striving to bring about a new situation in ideological and political work in the countryside.

DOCUMENT REGULATES FARMLAND HOUSING CONSTRUCTION

[Text] Beijing, 5 Nov (XINHUA) -- The General Office of the CPC Central Committee and the General Office of the State Council on 29 October transmitted a report on firmly solving the problem concerning unauthorized use of farmland for housing construction made by the Rural Policy Research Office of the Secretariat and the Ministry of Urban and Rural Construction and Environmental Protection, and called on all departments and localities to use it as a guide.

The Secretariat of the CPC Central Committee and the State Council pointed out: In recent years, the situation of using farmland for housing construction has become very serious in the countryside. Moreover, some state construction projects inevitably has to occupy some land each year. Therefore, the contradiction between China's large population and insufficient farmland has become even more conspicuous. This situation will cause serious consequences if we fail to attach great importance to it and adopt resolute measures to stop it. For this reason, the Central Secretariat and the State Council demand:

. It is necessary strictly to control farmland and in the next several years the use of farmland for rural housing construction is prohibited and houses may only be built on vacant lots within existing housing areas. With assistance from people sent by the county departments concerned, each village or township will act as a unit. It must make the best use of time and, on the basis of having conducted a thorough investigation and study, formulate an overall plan for village or township construction. This plan will be implemented after it has been reviewed and approved by the county people's government so that land can be conserved.

2. It is necessary to resolutely stop cadres from taking the lead in building houses on farmland. Like Beijing and Shanxi, all localities must carry out an investigation on the issue of unauthorized use of farmland for housing construction, harshly handle several typical cases and publicize these cases in newspapers.

From now on, propagation and reporting on improvement of living conditions in the rural areas should emphasize propagating and commending those advanced cases which have worked out rational plans, conserved land and improved their living conditions, and not totally emphasize those cases -- which are not favorable for land conservation -- where many houses with large courtyards have been built following the prosperity in the rural areas.

The "Report on Firmly Solving the Problem Concerning Unauthorized Use of Farmland for Housing Construction," submitted to the CPC Central Committee and the State Council by the Rural Policy Research Office of the Secretariat and the Ministry of Urban and Rural Construction and Environmental Protection points out: In the last 2 years, the state has repeatedly issued orders and instructions banning the use of farmland for housing construction in both urban and rural areas. However, unauthorized use of farmland for housing construction still continues. Currently, some urban and rural land is taken over with the approval of the state for use in certain construction projects. However, some farmland in both urban and rural areas is being illegally used for housing construction. This practice is, to a great extent, due to our failure to achieve a fundamental turn for the better in our party style. Some Communists, government cadres, state organs, enterprises and institutions are setting a bad example of unauthorized use of farmland.

According to Shanxi's statistics, there are over 1,200 state cadres in the province who have built private houses through illegal means, and over 2/3 of them built their private houses after the "Several Guiding Principles for Inner-Party Political Life" was promulgated. Beijing's investigation shows that, since 1979, over 17,000 mu of cropland, of which nearly 5,000 mu were vegetable plots, have been illegally occupied by over 900 units, and that an untold number of grassroots cadres and commune- and brigade-run enterprises in the rural areas have abused their authority and built houses on cropland. We suggest:

1. All provinces, municipalities and autonomous regions should follow the examples of Shanxi and Beijing to organize immediately a serious, large-scale inspection of the problem concerning unauthorized use of farmland for housing construction. They must put a stop to any unauthorized use of farmland in violation of "Regulations Governing the Management of Land for Village and Township Housing Construction" and "Regulations Governing the Takeover of Land for State Construction Projects." First, the cases involving certain units' and certain cadres' serious offenses must be dealt with earnestly one by one by departments concerned. These cases must be widely publicized so as to demonstrate that all regulations are to be enforced without fail and that the law does not exist only in name. According to each individual case, all illegal housing must be fined, or dismantled within a time limit, or confiscated. Party and government organizations, enterprises and establishments, state cadres and the grassroots cadres in the rural areas that have illegally seized land for housing construction must, in particular, be harshly handled. Houses whose construction involves serious offenses must be confiscated. No leniency should be granted. Those who are engaged in extortion, giving or accepting bribes and speculation on land-related issues must be punished for committing economic crimes or destroying publicly-owned property. The public security, procuratorial and judicial departments must accept the cases about land disputes.

2. It is necessary to actively work out proper village and township construction plans. Provinces, counties and communes (villages) should rapidly formulate peasants' plans for using land for housing construction. In the rural areas, 10-year systematic housing construction plans should be mapped out by brigades and natural hamlets through the process of repeated reviews and discussions of individual applications. Houses should be constructed according to the housing shortage of each individual household. Meanwhile, as emergency measures, each individual country, commune, village and township must set a general annual quota of land that can be used for housing construction. The quota that can be controlled by a village or township will approved by the county. The quota that can be controlled by a county will be approved by the province, or municpality or autonomous region. This quota system must be strictly implemented. Localities that have not mapped out construction plans will not be authorized to use land for housing construction. The peasants must be urged not to build their houses on good farmland, but on land not fit for crops, such as hillsides and barren land. Positive efforts must be exerted to design housing plans which use small areas and which are rationally laid out. More multistory buildings should be built. Cases in many localities show that good, unified plans are conducive to conservation of farmland, to the mapping out of rational layouts of new villages and to the convenience of the masses' production and livelihood.

We must warmly and effectively help the peasants solve their housing problems with regard to building designs, construction and construction materials so that their living conditions will be improved and land and timber will be conserved.

Housing construction needed in the rural areas by the commune- and brigade-run enterprises, organizations in the urban areas and enterprises and establishments must also be included in the plans. Every effort should be made to utilize old buildings, unused spaces and barren land. In principle, no new acreage should be used. When this is absolutely necessary, it should have the concurrence of the local county government and the plan must be approved by the competent departments of the province, municipality and autonomous region.

3. It is necessary to use economic measures to encourage house builders to use less land. Regulations should be laid down under which the state should grade lands for housing construction by private individuals or units according to their size and quality and levy a tax on their users according to the different grades of such lands. Before a uniform national tax rate is stipulated, provinces, municipalities and autonomous regions may formulate separate regulations in this regard for trial implementation. All provinces, municipalities and autonomous regions should promptly set standards for the sizes of housing foundations. From now on, no one is allowed to go beyond the limits and use more land for housing construction. Those who have gone beyond the limit and built houses with big yards should be instructed to return those portions of land exceeding the limit. Those who refuse to return those portions of land exceeding the limit should be assessed a progressive tax for use of such portions of land.

4. Facts in many localities show that proper land management yields remarkable results. All provinces, municipalities and autonomous regions should adopt concrete measures for land management according to local conditions.

5. The requests for land for housing construction filed by government cadres and cadres of rural grassroots units should be strictly examined. From now on, cadres at various levels who want to build houses in rural areas should submit their requests to local land administration and rural construction departments for examination and approval. In addition, they should submit reports to their own units on the land, building materials and manpower to be used for housing construction. In case of serious violations of the law by cadres at various levels with regard to use of land for housing construction, leaders of the units concerned should stop them in good time from doing so; otherwise, the leaders of the units concerned will be investigated for their responsibility in this regard; in addition, the cadres who build houses in violation of the law will be dealt with severely.

Duan Junyi Speaks

[Text] Beijing, November 6 (XINHUA) -- Duan Junyi, first secretary of the CPC Beijing committee, reviewed the achievements of China's capital at the 5th municipal congress of the party, which opened here today.

Among the things he cited were improvement in the party organization, strengthening socialist democracy and legal system, expanded educational, scientific and cultural undertakings, social morality and improved living standards.

Looking back on the political course in the past 11 years between 1971 which the 4th congress was held and 1982, Duan Junyi said that the Beijing committee had liquidated the "left" influence on guiding ideology and opposed the tendency of bourgeois liberalism.

"We have made tremendous efforts to redress cases wrongly judged and to put right policies for cadres, intellectuals, nationalities and religions, which were misinterpreted or abolished during the Cultural Revolution," he said.

In the past four years, he said, more than 280 middle-aged and young people had been chosen for leading positions at the level of the municipality, county, district and bureau, and another 3,300 at the level of company and rural commune.

Party organizations summed up the past year's work and underwent democratic election last winter and this spring through criticism and self-criticism. Recently an education campaign was conducted among all city party members against the corrosive influence of bourgeois ideas. As a result, Duan Junyi said, "the party style has started to take a turn for better".

Standing committees of people's congresses had been elected in the municipality and its districts and counties to strengthen democracy and the legal system. Deputies to district or county people's congresses had been elected directly, workers' conferences had been established under the leadership of the party in many enterprises and directors had been chosen by democratic election by workers in a number of factories.

With a lower rate of criminal cases and higher rate of solving criminal cases, Duan Junyi said that public security work had improved. "We have waged a struggle against crimes in the economic and other fields since the beginning of this year," he said.

Since the beginning of last year, the city authorities started a series of activities to promote socialist ethics, including the discussion "serving the people and responsibility to the people" among staff members and workers, the clearning of the city and regulations and moral standards for students, workers and staff members. "These have produced positive effects," Duan Junyi said. In addition, he went on, "education, sciences, culture, public health and physical culture, which were seriously damaged during the 'Cultural Revolution', have been restored and developed".

HEBEI ABOLISHES SOME PROVISIONAL ORGANS

[Report: "Provincial CPC Committee Decides To Abolish a Number of Provisional Organs"]

[Text] In order to streamline organization, strengthen the responsibility system and improve the work style of the leaders so that the role of various functional departments can be brought into full play and work efficiency improved, the provincial CPC committee has made the following decisions:

HEBEI'S GAO YANG ON DEVELOPING DIVERSIFICATION

[Report: "Comrade Gao Yang Investigates Mountain Areas, Plains; Gives Three Views on Developing Diversification"]

[Text] The first secretary of the provincial CPC committee, Gao Yang, at a seminar of secretaries of party committees of seven counties in Xingtai District, raised three views on developing diversification. He stressed the need to hold fast to real superiority, the utilization of scientific technology and the study of business management.

From 7-21 October, Comrade Gao Yang visited and investigated mountain areaa such as Zanhuang, Lincheng, Neiqui, Xingtai, and Shahe County and communes, brigades and factories of Xingtai City, Wei County and Nangong. At a seminar of the secretaries of party committees of seven counties in Xingtai District held on October 17, Comrade Gao Yang raised three views on developing diversification.

First, Comrade Gao Yang pointed out, the masses of peasants had already recognized the advantages of diversification and cadres had also understood the importance of developing diversification. The question of whether diversification should be developed had been basically resolved. Next year's attention should be focused on developing the real production superiority of counties, communes and brigades. Items which others could produce and produce better than we could were not really superior. For example, husbandry and the rearing of chickens and rabbits and the growing of apples could be multiplied, but should not be treated as our unique superior function. Attention paid to certain production items which are apparently superior is not enough. For example, the traditional cryptomeria chair of Longyao County is rare today. People in the urban areas would still buy the product of its form were modified. Zisha ceramics of Xingtai are new products and sales can be increased by lowering profit margins. Many people like Zisha bowls and pots which cannot be obtained easily. It is a matter of concern that many cadres regard production items which have unfavorable conditions for production, maintenance and transportation and which are noncompetitive as their own superior function and blindly stress the wide development of such items. We should divide our products into certain categories. One category is self-sufficiency and partial submission. One category is for sale on the local market. One category is for sale on the provincial market or markets permitted within the scope of the state. A limited amount of products is reserved for the international market. It is easy to handle products for self-sufficiency and for submission.

It is also easy to handle products for the local market because of a good understanding of the actual conditions of and changes in the market. Losses may occur if products for provincial, national and international markets, which are difficult to grasp, are not properly handled. Quite a few leading cadres of counties concentrate on diversification but overlook the condition for sales of their products. Some only care about current good sales, overlooking the poor market in 1 or 2 years' time. If the situation remained unchanged, profits would be at risk as the competition for goods became more severe next year. For example, in view of the good profits to be obtained in raising deer, some counties began to raise them. But now, as pilose antlers find no market, deer enclosures have been closed down. Research should be conducted on the production and sales of goods entering provincial, national and international competition. Help should be sought from leading organizations whenever we are in doubt. Feasibility studies should be conducted on new items. We should not start anything just because a request is made by a leader. Past lessons concerning blind production are many. For example, the products of the small-size Shangpingban glassworks are poor in quality and quantity while their cost is high. We should study whether it would be more economical and rational to set up a glassworks which has a stipulated minimum annual output.

Regarding his second view on developing diversification, Comrade Gao Yang pointed out that various counties had paid close attention to farming, forestry, animal husbandry, sideline production, fishery and industrial production this year. Notable results were made in diversification. However, attention paid to the utilization of scientific technology in production is not enough. Importance has to be attached to the development of advanced production methods and technology. Backward technology would result in poor quality and low quantity. In the past, branches of chestnut and apple trees were not cut. But now, production increases as they are cut. Since the quantity of primary products (natural products which do not need processing) for market consumption has increased, it is necessary to organize product processing, for the freight volume will decrease if the products are processed and the output value will increase. We should not only adopt traditional methods for product processing, but should also introduce new and suitable methods in accordance with the market.

Regarding his third view on developing diversification, Comrade Gao Yang pointed out that much had been done by the industrial production units of county communes. Management is, however, generally poor. It seems that many leading cadres are unfamiliar with the management of industrial production. At present, many industrial products, except those which are only for sale in a limited area (such as cottonseed oil and cottonseed cakes after unginned cotton has been processed), are on sale on markets at district, provincial and national levels. It is necessary for us to have an understanding of the supply and demand of products. In the long run, the state's annual total industrial and agricultural output value will triple by the end of the 20th century. We have to be more reliant on industrial (including processing) sideline production. In the future, the proportion of the output value of sideline production in the total industrial and agricultural output value of a county will become greater yearly. Therefore, starting from next year, leading comrades of various counties, or at least some of them, such as secretaries of county committees, county magistrates, and vice magistrates in charge of production, should start learning scientific industrial management in county communes. Learning is not difficult. After reading some books on production management, learning production technology and auditing from technological cadres of various factories and from cadres of finance committees, they will have a pretty good idea of industrial management. During those days when I (Gao Yang) visited various factories, I asked about production technology and the basic market situation. Some leading comrades told me they did not know the answer and had to consult their production cadres. One of the reasons our production has been poor since the founding of the republic is that we have the authority for production management but we do not possess relative production knowledge. Secretaries should take the lead to begin reforms.

Finally, Comrade Gao Yang told us how to implement the above views. Apart from working hard themsleves, secretaries should promote young and middle-aged intellectuals who are experienced and shrewd to leading positions at various levels. Those who are too young, inexperienced and unsuitable for promotion to leading positions should participate in staff officers' classes (offices or study units) so that they can help one study and can be trained at the same time.

HEILONGJIANG'S YANG YICHEN ON REFORMS OF PARTY

SK030809 Harbin Heilongjiang Provincial Service in Mandarin 2200 GMT 2 Nov 82

[Text] According to HEILONGJIANG RIBAO, at the sixth enlarged meeting of the Fourth Provincial CPC Committee, Comrade Yang Yichen, first secretary of the provincial CPC committee, pointed out: We must do a good job in overall consolidation, with the consolidation of party organization as its kernel, and in comprehensively dealing with problems. We must effectively implement the three political guarantees put forward by Comrade Deng Xiaoping to bring about the three fundamental turns for the better.

Comrade Yang Yichen said: Overall consolidation, with the consolidation of the party organization as its kernel, and dealing with problems in a comprehensive way constitute the master switch of our various tasks. And we must firmly grasp this master switch if we want to succeed in our current drive to create a new situation.

1. It is essential to successfully implement organizational reforms. We should change our original plan of implementing organizational reforms simultaneously with the consolidation of party organization. Organizational reforms should start immediately. The various departments at the provincial level should work out an overall plan in November, start to implement it immediately and conclude this work in the first half of 1983. Prefectures and municipalities should work out plans by the end of the year, start to implement them in the beginning of 1983 and accomplish this work in 6 months. Leading bodies at the county level should also make readjustments and arrangements in the coming winter-spring period and carry out organizational reforms on their own. Reforms at the commune level should be carried out in a well-guided way on the basis of trial implementation at selected points and extensive research and investigation. We should educate cadres in taking a correct approach toward organizational reforms. It is essential to pay close attention to the various tasks at present while implementing reforms. In implementing organizational reforms and overall consolidation, it is necessary to select and promote thousands upon thousands of fine young and middle-aged cadres in accordance with the policy that the ranks of the cadres should become more revolutionary, younger in average age, better educated and more professionally competent. It is essential for us to do so in order that young and middle-aged cadres can work with older cadres and take over responsibilities from them.

2. It is necessary to take further steps to attend to overall consolidation. We should strive to accomplish overall consolidation throughout the province in 3 years, beginning in 1983. Large and medium-sized enterprises should strive to accomplish consolidating enterprises. The 1,000 pilot enterprises selected for trial implementation of consolidation this year should execute consolidation well from start to finish. Consolidation of the remaining enterprises, which account for less than one-third, should be fulfilled next year. The various localities may [word indistinct] and call back cadres to attend training sessions who are presently staying at selected units to help and guide work. This training should be completed by the spring festival and the cadres should then return to the selected units. The first batch of enterprises selected this year for trial implementation of consolidation must persist in high standards. Upon completion of consolidation, each of these enterprises, in addition to being checked hard and strictly by higher authorities, should make summing-up reports on the consolidation and work of investigative groups staying at the unit and make suggestions to them. All the selected pilot enterprises should persist in taking the consolidation of party organization as the kernel, with a crackdown on serious offenses in the economic field and the anticorrosion struggle as the substance, and solve problems once and for all in real earnest. We should exert efforts to make 15 percent or more of the enterprises good-in-six ones during 1983. Rural areas should make full use of slack seasons to carry out consolidation, avoiding busy seasons. [passage indistinct]

3. It is essential to implement the consolidation of party organization well and effect a fundamental turn for the better in the party's work style. The consolidation of party organization is a matter of first priority for our party. Party committees at all levels must attend to it earnestly. The consolidation of the party organization and the rectification of the party's work style mean educating the entire party membership in Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought. Ideological consolidation should precede organizational consolidation. We should conduct education in communist ideology both in selected units and the entire area. At present, all units in the province should organize the entire party membership earnestly to study the 12th national party congress documents and particularly the new party constitution. It is necessary to take the consolidation of party organization as the kernel of the overall consolidation, expel the five categories of people in accordance with the criteria set by the new constitution, be sure to solve the problem of three impurities and attain the requirements in the five aspects -- that is, party members should meet the qualifications, cadres should meet the qualifications, party organizations should be combat-worthy, the party's work style should take a fundamental turn for the better and production and work should take on a new aspect. We must execute hard and strictly the registration of party members in line with the requirements set by the 12th party congress. Only those who meet the criteria of the consolidation of party organization should be allowed to register as party members.

4. Make continued efforts to crack down on serious unlawful activities in the economic field and deepen education in countering corrosive influence. We have engaged in this struggle for more than 6 months and have achieved tremendous progress so far. We must foster the idea of carrying out this struggle on a long-term basis and persistently carry it through to the end. While deepending this struggle, it is necessary vigorously to attend to handling the long-pending cases, the major, serious ones in particular. Continued efforts should be made to institute a system whereby leading cadres take responsibilities in dealing with cases, enhance the work forces for dealing with cases and promote coordination to speed up the handling of cases. Cases in the first half of this year should be investigated and concluded by the end of the year. Cases in the latter half of this year should all be dealt with in the first half of 1983. It is necessary to make full use of negative examples to strengthen anticorrosion education.

5. Make persistent efforts to consolidate public security and strive to bring about a fundamental turn for the better in social ethics. Our province started to consolidate public security in 1980 and has brought about great changes in public security and order in the past 2 years. Close to 12 percent of the cities and counties in the province have almost brought about a fundamental turn for the better, about 30 percent of the cities and counties have achieved a decisive turn for the better and about 40 percent of the cities and counties are strengthening their work and are in a good position to achieve a decisive turn for the better. At present, we must continue to stress consolidating public security and order in carrying out public security work and persist in taking the consolidation of public security in urban areas as the focal point, while not ignoring the countryside. The entire party should take part in comprehensively improving public security. It is necessary to strike relentless, prompt blows in accordance with law at serious criminal offenses, economic offenses, breaches of spiritual civilization and the sabotage activities of counterrevolutionaries and hostile antisocialist elements. We should take further steps to help and educate delinquent youths. In implementing the consolidation of party organization and overall organization, we should first of all consolidate the public security organizations and particularly the ranks of public security cadres and policemen.

JILIN CPC OFFICIAL ON ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

SK020643 Changchun Jilin Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 1 Nov 82

A report filed by our reporter (Yao Xiang) on an interview with Comrade Zhao Nanqi, member of the CPC Central Committee and first secretary of the Yanbian Korean National Autonomous Prefectural CPC Committee, entitled "Strengthen Our Confidence To Contributing to the Realization of the Grand Objective Set Forth at 12th Party Congress"]

[Excerpts] After returning from Beijing, Comrade Zhao Nanqi, newly elected member of the CPC Central Committee at the 12th party congress, went deep to the grassroots units to publicize the guidelines of the 12th party congress among cadres and the masses as well as to conduct investigations on how to realize the grand objective set forth at the 12th party congress in line with the reality of Yanbian. In his office one day in late October, Comrade Zhao Nanqi zestfully talked about his reaction to the investigations in rural areas with our reporter. He said: This year the situation in rural areas is really good and is reflected in three prominent signs: 1) increases grain output; 2) increases in income of the commune members; 3) fairly good mental condition of the peasants.

On the question concerning the realization of quadrupling annual industrial and agricultural output value by the end of this century, set forth at the 12th party congress, in line with the reality of Yanbian, Comrade Zhao Nanqi confidently said to the reporter: The objective of quadrupling annual industrial and agricultural output value was formulated in accordance with the experiences in setting high targets and in two premature advances in 1958 and in 1978. The current historical condition is different from that of the past and so is the party's economic work style. The objective of quadrupling annual industrial and agricultural output value was set forth through extensive investigation and study and through seeking truth from facts in the light of internal relations among various economic departments and the reality of our country. On the basis of science, there are possibilities of implementing the objective. So long as we work hard, it must be fulfilled.

He continued: Certainly the objective should not be undertaken all at once; it does not mean to quadruple output value on all fronts. Yanbian is a borderland inhabited by national minorities, but we are full of confidence in the realization of quadrupling our annual industrial and agricultural output value after analyzing the current situation in line with the past experiences and lessons. With regard to the actual conditions of Yanbian, we have four favorable factors:

1) In comparison with the past, we are shifting our focus of efforts. In the past, we took class struggle as a key link and as a result many cadres and people were hurt. From now on we should abandon this approach and work with unity to concentrate our energy on economic work.

2) Approaches to things are correct. Over the years, we took grain and steel production as key links and blindly developed the five small industrial enterprises and as a result the economic development went from bad to worse. Now, through readjustment, we have started all work that should be started and abandoned that which should be abandoned. The economic development has been shifted to concentrate on improving economic results. To promote our economy with correct approaches and orientations is promising.

3) Tap the potential of production. Since the people in rural areas began implementing the production responsibility system, never before have they been so enthusiastic.

4) Bring our favourable conditions into full play. Although Yanbian's agricultural and industrial bases are low, it has great, advantageous potentialities and abundant natural resources.

Finally, Comrade Zhao Nanqi said to the reporter: The grand objective set forth at the 12th party congress is not an idle dream, nor can it be fulfilled without making efforts So we must work hard, overcome fearing difficulties and eliminate the coward's and sluggard's way of thinking. So long as we work hard with enthusiasm and confidence and bring our brains into full play, the grand objective will certainly be fulfilled.

GANSU'S FENG JIXIN SPEAKS ON INTELLECTUALS

HK080621 Lanzhou Gansu Provincial Service in Mandarin 0420 GMT 7 Nov 82

[Text] Comrade Feng Jixin spoke at the provincial conference on work concerning intellectuals on 7 November. He expressed the hope that the province's intellectuals would spontaneously shoulder their heavy historic task.

Feng Jixin said: The 12th party congress attached extremely great importance to the role of intellectuals in the four modernizations. Intellectuals shoulder a heavy task in accomplishing the strategic goal put forward by the 12th party congress; they bear a glorious historic role. Comrade Zhao Ziyang also stated at the national prize giving for science and technology: Without relying on progress in science and technology, the great strategic goal of quadrupling total annual industrial and agricultural output value will be in danger of coming to nothing. I believe that the province's intellectuals are capable of shouldering their heavy historic responsibility, playing a conspicuous role on the province's four modernizations drive and achieving still greater successes on the basis of those already gained.

In his speech, Comrade Feng Jixin expressed the hope that the intellectuals throughout the province would develop faith in the triumph of communism, unswervingly trust the correct leadership of the Central Committee and develop confidence in quadrupling. At the same time, it is necessary to organize the scientists of different units to cooperate in tackling key problems so as to take fullest advantage of our superior features and have the latecomers surpass the oldtimers.

He also stressed: Carrying out the four modernizations is unparalleled in history and a brand-new undertaking. We are bound to encounter many difficult problems. The intellecturals of all sectors and trades must help to solve these problems. In particular, comrades specializing in science and technology work and technical innovation shoulder an especially important responsibility in developing industrial and agricultural production. These comrades must play a still greater role, face the masses and production, attach importance to and step up research in applied science and help to solve key problems in economic returns in the national economy.

Comrade Feng Jixin also hoped that today, when science and technology are leaping ahead, the province's intellectuals will make efforts to study and continually renew their knowledge to suit the rapid development of science and technology.

GANSU'S FENG JIXIN ADDRESSES LABOR MODEL MEETING

[Excerpts] The Gansu provincial representative meeting of labor models and progressive collectives held a full session in the Lanzhou PLA units' gymnasium on 7 November. Provincial CPC committee Secretary and Governor Li Dengying presided. Provincial CPC committee First Secretary Feng Jixin made an important speech.

Can our province achieve the great goal of quadrupling by the end of the century? Comrade Feng Jixin said: So long as we fully rely on the masses, emancipate our minds, make full use of our strong points and avoid the weak ones, take advantage of our superior features and work hard with communist spirit and the socialist attitude of seeking truth from facts, we will be able to overcome the difficulties and achieve quadrupling. Feng Jixin spoke of three favorable conditions for achieving this goal:

1. As a result of 32 years of construction, Gansu has industrial fixed assets worth over 10 billion yuan. We have built 4,400 enterprises of all sizes. In agriculture, the effective irrigated area has developed to 12 million mu. The basic conditions for production have been initially improved. We have 126 specialized scientific research organs and 125,000 specialized technical cadres.

2. There are great potentials in agriculture and still greater ones in industry. Take economic returns in industry. In 1981, the province's output value per 100 yuan of fixed assets and the industrial tax and profit generated were, respectively, 53 and 49 percent below the national average. If Gansu could reach the present national average, its industrial output value and the tax and profits generated by industry would double and redouble.

In agriculture, at present, average yields in Hexi Region are only about 300 jin per mu. If the average yield were raised to 600 jin and if the 5 million mu of barren land suitable for cultivation were used, grain production in Hexi Region could double.

3. The province's area is vast and its land resources abundant. Over 200 million mu of pasture and grassland can be used. The great majority of barren mountains and slopes have not yet been used. There is plenty of room for developing agriculture, forestry, animal husbandry, sideline occupations and fisheries. There are also abundant resources of various minerals. So far, 61 minerals have been found. Water resources, coal, oil reserves and so on await large-scale exploitation.

Comrade Feng Jixin said: Some people are worried that in proposing quadrupling now we are again indulging in high targets and a foreign, rash advance. Viewing the history of 32 years of economic development in Gansu, total value of industrial and agricultural production has risen by an average of 8.4 percent a year, higher than the 7.2 percent needed to achieve quadrupling by the end of the century. Hence, in growth rate, we should be able to do in the next 20 years what we have done in the past 32.

Comrade Feng Jixin said: In creating a new situation in all fields of work in the province, we particularly need to bring into play the communist spirit of selfless labor and devotion our party has consistently shown. In the rural areas we must further perfect and develop the agricultural production responsibility systems. At present, a nonagricultural population of various types has started to appear in the rural areas. There is a gradual increase in the number of workers and people doing various kinds of work there. This is a sign of prosperity. The diversification of the rural population is an excellent thing and a very great step forward.

Comrade Feng Jixin stressed: Grasping scientific and technical progress and staging a march on science are of still greater, decisive significance for achieving quadrupling in our province. In a certain sense, the coming era will be one in which reliance is placed on the development of advanced science and technology. We must apply the key of modern science and technology to unlock the great door of economic advance.

GANSU SCIENCE, TECHNOLOGY EXHIBITION OPENS

[Summary] A Gansu provincial exhibition to promote scientific and technical cooperation in industry and communications, sponsored by the provincial government, opened in Lanzhou this morning. Provincial CPC committee First Secretary Feng Jixin and Governor Li Dengying cut the ribbon. Also present were responsible comrades of the party, government and army including Xiao Hua, Zhang Rusan, Wang Bingxiang, Yang Zhilin, Liu Bing, and Gao Jinchun.

Xiao Jianguang, deputy secretary of the provincial CPC committee and vice governor, spoke at the ceremony. He said: "The 12th party congress has put forward the target for endeavor of quadrupling annual total value of industrial and agricultural output by the end of the century. Gansu's existing industrial foundation is rather weak and its production technology is rather backward. We could not even achieve doubling on our existing foundation. We must therefore make great efforts to develop new technology, equipment, materials, crafts and products." He said that the exhibition would play a major role in stimulating this endeavor.

HK060349 Yinchuan Ningxia Regional Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 5 Nov 82

[Summary] "The work of reforming the administrative structure in the regional organs has now started. QINGHAI'S LIANG BUTING ON LONG-TERM PLANNING

HK050337 Xining Qinghai Provincial Service in Mandarin 2330 GMT 4 Nov 82

[Text] The 5 November QINGHAI RIBAO carries on the front page a recent speech made at a meeting by Comrade Liang Buting, first secretary of the provincial CPC committee, on how to do a good job in long-term planning in the province. He said: To have a complete knowledge of the province's conditions is the basis of making a success of planning.

Comrade Liang Buting first said: The guiding ideology in formulating next year's plan is to persistently concentrate efforts on improving economic returns and also to strive for a definite growth rate. This rate must be soundly and reliably based and must be attainable provided the effort is made. We must not set very low targets just because stress is laid on leaving a margin. There is no positive significance in plans that can be accomplished without any effort.

On long-term planning, Comrade Liang Buting stressed: We must have a thorough knowledge of the province's conditions. This means that, after carrying out meticulous investigation and study and repeated scientific exposition, we must discover the favorable conditions and the unfavorable factors and correct the guiding ideology in planning. In this way our plans will have a scientific basis and a broad mass foundation. Making long-term plans is very meticulous work involving many tasks. It is necessary to organize a special group for this work. In the course of work, we must listen to views of experts in all fields by holding academic seminars. At the same time, we should carry out investigations of typical cases, with focal points and plans.

Comrade Liang Buting said: While formulating long-term development plans for the national economy, we must correspondingly consider problems of social development, so that the two can be integrated and become an organic entity. This question is particularly important in the pastoral areas. In this way we can form a benign cycle and have economic and social development stimulating and complementing each other. Of course, the social development issue is a protracted task and cannot be tackled too hastily. On the one hand, at present we do not have enough investment and cannot take care of all social development problems in the minority-nationality areas. On the other hand, there is the problem of the masses' level of awareness and the development level of the productive force. With regard to methods and measures, in pastoral areas, for instance, social development plans can first be carried out in county and commune seats.

On the question of industry, Comrade Liang Buting said: We must not only focus on new construction projects; more importantly, we must for some time to come change the backward state of the province's local industry, base our efforts on the existing foundation, do a good job in equipment renovation and technical improvements and make great efforts to tap internal potentials.

Comrade Liang Buting stressed in conclusion: It is not enough just to have a good plan. We must also have a good mental approach. At present, some comrades lack confidence in fulfilling the great goal. We must cite the facts of economic development over the past 30 and more years to educate the cadres and masses, so that they will work hard with full confidence and understand that we have absorbed the [word indistinct] and experiences of history and have correct line, principles and policies, so our pace of advance will be steadier and our progress faster than in the past and the great goal can certainly be accomplished. This is the case in the whole country and also in our province.

QINGHAI PEOPLE'S CONGRESS SESSION SCHEDULED

HK290239 Xining Qinghai Provincial Service in Mandarin 2330 GMT 28 Oct 82

[Text] The Qinghai Provincial People's Congress Standing Committee held its 20th meeting in Xining from 26 to 28 October. The meeting decided that the fifth session of the fifth provincial people's congress will be convened in Xining in December.

The meeting listened to and discussed a provincial government report on its scheme for reforming the administrative structure and issued a resolution approving this scheme in principle. The meeting held: Reform of the administrative structure is work that involves many sectors and has a strong policy sense.

Under the guidance of the 12th party congress spirit, the provincial government should strengthen leadership, do a good job in ideological and organizational work and ensure that reform of the administrative structure will be carried out in a planned, measured and orderly way. The cadres, staff and workers must strengthen their sense of organization and discipline. The reform work must not be allowed to adversely affect work or delay production. Units being amalgamated must do a good job in taking stock of and handing over finances, files and so on.

It is essential to do well from beginning to end in reforming the administrative structure so as to meet the goals of streamlining, unification, efficiency, economy and opposition to bureaucratism. The government departments must continually improve their work systems, strive to enhance their ideological and work style and tangibly raise work efficiency.

In accordance with the recommendation of Governor Zhang Guosheng, the meeting decided to appoint (Shenshen Dajie) chairman of the provincial nationalities affairs committee, (Wang Chong) chairman of the provincial capital construction committee, (Fanma Banzhang) director of the provincial public health department, (He Haiyan) director of the provincial finance department, (Zhang Dixi) director of the provincial communications department, (Wang Kelian) director of the provincial education department, and (Hao Zhenhua) director of the provincial metallurgical industry bureau.

The meeting also approved other appointments and dismissals.

MA WENRUI DESCRIBES SHAANXI MODEL WORKER

HK010642 Beijing GONGREN RIBAO in Chinese 25 Oct 82 p 1

[Article by Ma Wenrui, first secretary of Shaanxi Provincial CPC Committee: "Valiantly Advance Under the Banner of Communism]

[Text] We are in an age of heroes and one in which new Communists are growing and reaching maturity. Comrade Luo Jianfu, a special class model worker, an outstanding member of the Communist Party and an engineer at the Lishan Mountain Microelectronics Company in Shaanxi, was an outstanding representative among these heroes. He contributed all he could to the country's cause for socialist modernization. He was like a translucent red candle which burns itself to give off light.

The life of Comrade Luo Jianfu was a glorious life which radiated with the light of communist ideology. He ardently loved the party and socialism; he diligently studied Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought and had gradually built up his communist outlook on life. When he was still young, he copied a passage from "How Steel Is Tempered" to encourage himself: "Life is the most valuable possession of man and we live only once. Man should spend his life in this way: When one recollects the past, one does not feel regret because one has wasted past time or because one has achieved nothing. One should be able to say: 'My life and all my energy has been devoted to the most magnificent cause of the world -- that of struggling for the liberation of man.' " Comrade Luo Jianfu had taken part in the revolution for more than 30 years; he always practiced this passage which glitters with brilliant ideology and which stirs people's hearts. He remained faithful to communism and he worked for the cause of the people and the party with utter devotion. He was not interested in wealth, fame or reward and he worked selflessly. When he was dying, he continued to consciously set strict demands on himself in accordance with the criterion of Communist Party members. What spirit is this? This is communist spirit: The vivid deeds of Comrade Luo Jianfu tell us that communism is not a remote illusion but that it exists in the practice of revolution and construction.

Our daily life includes communism and it cannot be separated from communism. Heroic models such as Comrade Luo Jianfu and the masses of people both inside and outside the party who have sacrificed all they have to strive to achieve the revolutionary ideal, regardless of their safety, are not the ones who take part in the revolution for the sake of wealth, fame or reward. Since the inception of a communist party, there have been no genuine Communist Party members who pursue personal gain. They have a lofty communist ideal and the firm faith that this lofty ideal will be realized. Thus, no matter how fierce the enemy or how rough the road, they are not afraid of sacrifice. They meet difficulties headon, advance wave upon wave and keep on fighting in spite of setbacks. They struggle and strive to win victory after victory. In the revolutionary struggle, "it does not matter if their heads are chopped off so long as the principle is true;" "they are great when they are alive and they gloriously die." In construction, they diligently study, work selflessly, forget their own interests for the sake of public interest and do their best until they die. In our promotion of the communist spirit, this does not mean that we must immediately carry out communist policies or that all members of society are required to immediately become Communists, but that in adhering to the system of distribution according to work and other socialist systems, it is necessary to strengthen communist ideological education so that our party members can consolidate their faith in communism and play an exemplary role in the construction of material and spiritual civilizations: In this way, the masses of young people, workers, peasants and intellectuals will continuously promote their communist ideological consciousness; in this way, our people will always keep their magnificent goal and lofty ideal, are filled with a spiritual force and have the will to fight and gloriously advance under the banner of communism.

The lofty ideal of striving for communism should be implemented in the concrete task of wholeheartedly serving the people. This is another revelation which the deeds of Comrade Luo Jianfu give people. This faithful Communist Party member has not left many bold sayings and he did not feel that he had achieved any earthshaking undertaking. But his humble, trivial and inconspicuous work, his fighting spirit in quietly immersing himself in hard work and in assiduously studying technology, his iron will in bearing the immense suffering caused by cancer and overexhaustion and his solemn and serious scientific attitude of being conscientious and meticulous are related to our great motherland's cause of socialist construction and to our party members' lofty goal of implementing communism. This exposes his sparking, crystal-clear heart for the party, the people and the communist cause. He is like many people who swear to dedicate their lives to communism. He knew that life is short and limited, but it is precisely because he knew that life is limited that he was more aware of the value of striving. Whenever one has such spirit, one would cautiously, conscientiously and wholeheartedly serve the people, regardless of the nature of work and the position in which one is placed by the people and the party. One would contribute all one's talents and wisdom to create glorious results.

Comrade Luo Jianfu was a Red and expert middle-aged scientific and technological worker trained by our party. He had noble scientific research ethics and a selfless attitude toward labor. In salary adjustment, what he thought of was the country's difficulties; in the face of honor, what he thought of was the collective contribution; and in assessing the titles, what he thought of was his shortcomings and he always let others have better titles. He was humble, sincere and forgiving to the comrades. As for work, he did whatever work should be done, regardless of whether it was his duty or not. His deeds, which move people to tears and which arouse people, are the pride of the party and the people. Influenced by the "left" ideology and restricted by the yoke of small-producer mentality, there is still the erroneous concept of discriminating against intellectuals. In some people's minds the advanced deeds of Comrade Luo Jianfu are a strong strike at such erroneous concepts. The deeds repeatedly explain that the masses of intellectuals of our country have a high degree of political consciousness. They are truly the ones who have the most modern scientific knowledge of the working class and are truly the important force on which the four modernizations depend. In the past, they cooperated with the workers and peasants and strived together regardless of hardships to make great contributions to revolution and construction. Now the 12th CPC National Congress has sounded the bugle fight call to create a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization.

We must further implement the party's policy toward intellectuals and strive to create a social environment in which the masses of intellectuals can energetically work and study with a cheerful mood. In this way, they can fully promote their reinforcement role in socialist modernization.

Learning from the heroic models who continuously emerge from among the people is the most practical and vivid method for communist ideological education. In addition, this is an important content of the construction of socialist spiritual civilization. We must train more and more new Commmunists on all fronts and educate the masses through whatever influences them. In this case, it is necessary to demand that party organizations at all levels be good at discovering and seriously publicizing such advanced models. The leading cadres themselves should be the first to study. We must, through all fields of work, help the masses and the ranks of cadres build a communist outlook on life and the world, cultivate the attitude toward labor and the attitude which emphasizes the necessity to wholeheartedly service the people and arouse their immense enthusiasm in building socialism. In this way, there would be revolutionary vitality and youthfulness in our socialist cause and the magnificent program proposed by the 12th CPC National Congress will be implemented.

XINJIANG'S WANG ENMAO ON UNITY OF NATIONALITIES

[Report by Li Xianguo [2621 3807 0948]: "Wang Enmao Stresses Unity of the Nationalities in Developing Socialist Modernization in Xinjiang"]

[Text] At the three-level cadres conference held by the Xinjiang Regional CPC Committee recently, Wang Enmao, first secretary of the Xinjiang Uygur Autonomous Regional CPC Committee, pointed out that in order to create a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization in this region, it is necessary to hold high the banner of the 12th CPC National Congress and further develop the new relationship of equality, unity and cooperation among various nationalities so that all nationalities can achieve common prosperity and progress.

Wang Enmao said that since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, the CPC Central Committee has adopted a series of policies in light of the conditions in the new historical period and the specific conditions of various nationalities which are conducive to the further execution of nationality autonomy, to the economic and cultural developments in the nationality areas and to the unity between various nationalities. We must unswervingly carry out these policies. In the process of implementing these policies it is also necessary to publicize Marxist views on the nationalities problem and educate the whole party in basic Marxist theories and viewpoints in this respect so that our consciousness of the nationalities problem can be raised. There are more than 10 nationalities in Xinjiang. They are all treated as equals in political affairs and are respected by each other. We must resolutely oppose big nationality chauvinism, particularly Han nationality chauvinism. At the same time, we must also oppose local nationalism.

Wang Enmao said that we must forcefully publicize the ideology of unity between nationalities. Central leading comrades pointed out that in developing socialist modernization in Xinjiang the Han nationality cadres cannot do without minority nationality cadres and vice versa. This is entirely correct. Xinjiang is a vast region with rich natural resources but with a small population. Although in the past 30 years Xinjiang's population has increased greatly, it is still small in comparison with other provinces. In order to explore and carry out construction in this vast region, it is not only necessary that the people of various nationalities in Xinjiang work hard in their own efforts, but it is also necessary to have state assistance in financial and material resources as well as manpower resources. Otherwise, a great development in Xinjiang will be impossible or, at least, will meet with many difficulties. Therefore, the rapid development of socialist modernization in Xinjiang can be achieved only by simultaneously relying on the people of various minority nationalities and the Han nationality people.

Wang Enmao pointed out that strengthening the unity between various nationalities and handling their mutual relations well is a matter of importance to the 13 million people of various nationalities in Xinjiang. It is a guarantee and prerequisite for doing a good job in all fields. All comrades, especially leading cadres at various levels, must have a clearheaded understanding of this problem and never neglect our work to strengthen nationality unity. Things will become easier to do when nationality unity is strengthened. Since we have paid serious attention to this problem, the present political and economic situation in our region is very good. We must act in line with the requirements of the 12th CPC National Congress and continue to do a good job in strengthening nationality unity and implementing the party's nationality policy. We must reasure the excellent situation which has already appeared and simultaneously carry out resolute struggles against internal and external enemies who attempt to undermine the unity of our nationalities.

HK230242 Urumqi Xinjiang Regional Service in Mandarin 1300 GMT 22 Oct 82

[Excerpts] The sixth party congress of the Urumqi PLA units opened in Urumqi on 22 October.

The congress is being attended by 378 full deputies, 42 alternates and 1 observer. Comrade Wang Enmao, executive chairman of the congress, declared the congress open. The whole assembly stood up for the "Internationale," and then stood in silence in memory of dead proletarian revolutionaries of the older generation, Mao Zedong, Zhou Enlai, Liu Shaoqi, Zhu De and so on, and comrades who had sacrificed themselves to liberate, defend and build Xinjiang.

Comrade Wang Enmao gave the opening speech. He said: The central task of this congress is to study and implement the spirit of the 12th national party congress and mobilize the PLA units in Xinjiang to create a new situation in revolutionizing, modernizing and regularizing the army and to strive to fulfill the tasks assigned us by the party in the new period.

Comrade Wang Enmao said: The outstanding successes we have gained in work since the smashing of the Jing Qing counterrevolutionary clique, and especially since the 3d plenary session of the 11th Central Committee, are the result of the commanders and fighters working hard together under the leadership of the party Central Committee, the Central Military Commission, and the party committees at all levels. In addition, they could not have been achieved without the great support provided by the party and government leadership and the people of all nationalities in Xinjiang. On behalf of the congress, I extend a lofty salute to all commanders and fighters battling north and south of Tian Shan and along the border. I sincerely thank the regional party and government leadership and the people of all nationalities.

Comrade Wang Enmao said in conclusion: Every deputy attending this congress shoulders a glorious responsibility. We must unite as one to look ahead in strict accordance with the 12th party congress spirit and the demands of the new party constitution and work in concert to make a success of this congress. We must seriously implement democratic centralism. We must bring democracy into full play and also uphold centralization. We must bring our thinking into line with the program, principles and policies laid down by the 12th party congress and concentrate our energy for attaining the great goal and the various tasks put forward by the 12th party congress. We must truly hold this as a congress of unity and of creating a new situation in building the army in the region. After the congress, we must work hard to create a new situation in building the army.

Comrade Tan Youlin delivered a work report on behalf of the fifth CPC committee of the Urumqi PLA units, entitled "Implement the 12th Party Congress Spirit and Create a New Situation in Building the Urumqi PLA Units." After summing up the work of the CPC committee of the Urumqi PLA units since the 5th party congress, and mainly since the 3d plenary session of the 11th Central Committee, he said: We must apply the 12th party congress spirit to unify our thinking and guide our action, unite as one and work hard to implement the principles and tasks of the 12th party congress and the various tasks assigned by the Central Military Commission and strive to create a new situation in revolutionizing, modernizing and regularizing the PLA units in our region. We must further enhance the special capabilities of the units in our region in modern war conditions and defend the motherland and the building of socialist modernization.

He said in his report: To create a new situation in building the units, we must first enhance understanding and apply the 12th party congress spirit to unify thinking and action in the units. We must hold aloft the banner of communism and carry out sustained and in-depth building of socialist spiritual civilization. We must vigorously promote the reform of systems in the units and their streamlining and reorganization and build a revolutionized, younger, better-educated and specialized cadre rank. We must strengthen education and training under modern war conditions and make sound preparations for opposing a war of aggression. We must bring closer the relations between army and government and army and people, strengthen the unity of nationalities, strengthen party building, do a good job in rectifying the party and its work style and improve the party's combat effectiveness.

Comrade Wang Enmao's opening speech and Comrade Tan Youlin's work report were frequently interrupted by warm applause.

TA KUNG PAO NOTES PRC REASSURANCES ON HONG KONG

HK050854 Hong Kong TA KUNG PAO in Chinese 5 Nov p 2

[Special feature by Cheng Yuan [4453 6678]: "Working Together To Ensure Hong Kong's Stability and Prosperity — Results of the Hong Kong Trade Development Council Delegation's Visit to Beijing, Shanghai and Guangzhou"]

[Text] After visiting Beijing and Shanghai, the Hong Kong Trade Development Council delegation headed by Y.K. Kan arrived in Guangzhou yesterday.

While meeting with the delegation in Beijing, NPC Vice Chairman Xi Zhongxun said: China guarantees that all systems in Hong Kong will remain unchanged after China recovers its sovereignty over Hong Kong. He also pointed out that extensive development of economic cooperation between Hong Kong and the interior of China is conducive to maintaining Hong Kong's stability and prosperity and to enhancing China's modernization program. So far, this is the most definite guarantee for Hong Kong's future made publicly by a Chinese leader. What Xi Zhongxun said accurately states the inseparably close relationship between Hong Kong and the interior and expresses the sincere hope of further extending economic cooperation between the two places.

After meeting with Xi Zhongxun, Y.K. Kan said: The goal of the present trip has basically been attained. I deeply feel that great potential exists in economic cooperation between Hong Kong and the interior. The future is bright and I have faith in Hong Kong's future stability and prosperity. He also disclosed that China is ready to offer Hong Kong investors a number of projects in light, textile and food-processing industries. China will also create a better environment and give preferential treatment for these projects.

Economic cooperation and a trade relationship between Hong Kong and the interior are actually relations of mutual benefit and mutual promotion. However, for some time absurd arguments and fallacies have been spread in articles discussing Hong Kong's future. The most common ones usually stress one point while ignoring the rest. They only talk about the positive role played by Hong Kong in the interior's modernization and avoid or distort valuable contributions made by the interior to Hong Kong's stability and prosperity. They laud Hong Kong to the skies, saying that Hong Kong is equivalent to six Daqings and that China cannot continue the modernization program without Hong Kong -- a hen that lays gold eggs. Some even say that the interior provides nonstaple food for Hong Kong citizens at cheap prices so as to "exploit" them. This is indeed extremely absurd!

No reasonable person will try to deny that Hong Kong can make positive contributions to the interior's modernization in economy and technology. Chinese leaders have already set much value on these contributions. However, if we exaggerate things disregarding their actual conditions, we will depart from reality and make mistakes. Subsequently, people will doubt our real motive.

Those who spread the fallacy that China cannot carry on with its modernization program without Hong Kong either lack common sense or at least are like the blind men who groped about an elephant, not seeing the forest for the trees. They either know nothing about or do not want to know about the principles, reforms and scale of China's modernization program or the reliable foundation on which it is based, which ensures the accomplishment of its magnificent goal.

What does China's modernization imply? How does China realize its modernization program? We must first understand the following points:

1. While pursuing a policy of opening to the outside world and actively introducing funds and advanced technology from foreign countries, China has all along stressed that it will proceed from China's reality and adhere to the principle of independence and self-reliance. In his opening speech at the 12th CPC National Congress, Chairman Deng Xiaoping said: "Things in China must be done in accordance with China's conditions and by depending on the strength of the Chinese people. Independence and self-reliance was, has been and will be our standpoint."

2. We must not forget that China today is no longer "poor and blank" as it used to be. Now it has a substantial material foundation with several hundred thousand industrial and mining enterprises. In the scientific and technological field, including advanced science and technology, China has already caught up with the world's advanced level. It has already been able to produce atomic bombs, hydrogen bombs, and medium and long-range rockets and to launch them underwater. When China was "poor and blank," it stressed self-reliance. Today, while maintaining independence and keeping the initiative in its own hands, it pursues a policy of opening to the outside world. Undoubtedly, this is just like a tiger that has grown wings. China has set itself the magnificent goal of quadrupling its gross annual value of industrial and agricultural production by the end of this century. It certainly will attain its goal since it has a solid material foundation.

3. The goal of China's modernization program is first to make China relatively well-off, but the scale of this program is enormous. In his report to the 12th CPC National Congress, Chairman Hu Yaobang said: The general objective of China's economic construction for the two decades between 1981 and the end of this century is, while steadily working for more and better economic results, to quadruple the gross annual value of industrial and agricultural production -- from 710 billion yuan in 1980 to 2,800 billion yuan or so in 2000. Generally speaking, the growth of foreign trade is faster than that of industrial and agricultural production. Even if estimates are based on quadrupling the present figure, the gross export value will reach $80 billion or so.

After making clear the above-mentioned points, we can draw the following conclusions:

In view of China's vast territory and large population, it can only depend on the arduous struggle, wisdom and talent of the Chinese people in carrying out the modernization program. The purpose of pursuing a policy of opening to the outside world is to increase exchanges and cooperation in various fields on the basis of equality and mutual benefit in order to speed up China's modernization program. This does not mean relying on foreign countries and much less relying on Hong Kong. The idea that China cannot go on with its modernization program without Hong Kong and the absurd idea that Hong Kong is equivalent to six Daqings evidently shows a lack of common sense. This puts the cart before the horse. How can the former be compared with the latter?

More and more industrialists and businessmen are clearly aware that economic cooperation and trade development between Hong Kong and the interior is a relationship of mutual benefit and mutual promotion. Since the world economy is in a depressed state, the maintenance of Hong Kong's stability and prosperity depends, to a very great extent, on the economic development of China's interior. In the first 7 months of this year, Hong Kong exports to China's interior was over HK$2 billion, which was 51 percent more than the same period last year, transit goods from Hong Kong to China's interior increased by 5 percent and China's interior has become Hong Kong's biggest market in entrepot trade. With economic development in China's interior, Hong Kong's products will have an even bigger market.

Since China needs Hong Kong to play its role in foreign trade and in economic and technical cooperation with its interior, it will certainly take measures to maintain Hong Kong's prosperity and stability. As everybody knows, Hong Kong's prosperity depends on various factors, but the supply of large quantities of daily necessities, water and other things by China's interior is in fact a major factor. Priority is given to Hong Kong in the supply of some commodities and special arrangements have to be made for this purpose. It can be believed that in the future, China will contribute more and better to promote Hong Kong's stability and prosperity.

Despite the world economic recession, the development of China's national economy is gaining momentum in all fields after 3 years' readjustment. According to information promulgated by China, it will certainly overfulfill its state plans this year in industry, agriculture and foreign trade. China has done away with its financial deficit. The increased number of businessmen participating in this year's Guangzhou autumn fair and transactions concluded there also clearly shows China's political stability and economic turn for the better. Therefore, China's domestic situation rightly deserves to be described as the best since the founding of the PRC.

Discussing the future of Hong Kong's economy, former Hong Kong Governor MacLehose called for "looking toward the north." The more important thing is to look forward. China has already guaranteed that after recovering its sovereignty over Kong Kong, all systems in Hong Kong will remain unchanged. So long as China's interior and Hong Kong cooperate hand-in-hand and give full play to their respective potential and favorable conditions, Hong Kong will surely be able to overcome its troubles caused by world economic recession and continue to maintain its stability and prosperity.

WEN WEI PO ON CHINA'S ECONOMIC STRATEGY

["Special feature" by WEN WEI PO reporter Cheng Hsiang [4453 5046]: "Changes in China's Economic Strategy"]

[Text] After achieving a full understanding of the restrictions to the development of the national economy in the period of the Sixth 5-Year Plan, the Chinese Government has adopted certain measures to overcome them. The most fundamental measure is improving economic results. Another measure is drawing support from foreign countries (such as foreign funds and technology).

After comprehensively analyzing the causes of the gradual decline in economic results over the past 30 years and more (using investment coefficient and energy consumption as norms), government economic advisers have called for increasing economic returns in the macrocosmic and microcosmic fields. In the period of the Sixth 5-Year Plan, the Chinese Government plans to increase the investment coefficient, which is currently on the low side, from the present 0.16 to 0.20. In other words, national income from the accumulation of every 100 yuan should be increased from the current 16 yuan to 20 yuan in 1985. To achieve this target in the macrocosmic field means changing development strategy; to achieve this target in the microcosmic field means carrying out technical transformation and streamlining enterprises.

To improve economic results in the macrocosmic field, China's economic development strategy in the period of the Sixth 5-Year Plan is different from previous ones. The major differences are:

1. With regard to development targets and development speed, the previous strategy put forward impractical slogans and set impractical quotas, while the present one attaches major importance to continuously meeting the growing needs of the people.

2. With regard to production structure, the previous strategy put undue emphasis on developing heavy industry, while the present one attaches major importance to developing consumer goods.

3. With regard to the accumulation and application of development funds, the previous strategy blindly sought a high accumulation rate, while the present one distributes and uses accumulated funds for benefiting the coordinated development of agriculture, light industry and heavy industry.

4. With regard to forms of development, the present strategy not only depends on new construction projects but also depends on giving full play to the potential of existing enterprises.

5. With regard to production relations, the previous strategy blindly sought to make them "bigger in size and of a more developed socialist nature" but the present strategy allows varied management forms to coexist with the system of public ownership which occupies an absolutely dominant position.

6. With regard to the management system, the present strategy allows market regulation to play a certain role. In the view of the Chinese authorities, economization that results from planning is the greatest economization and waste that results from planning is the greatest waste. Making proper changes in the development strategy and formulatig proper economic plans and policies are of decisive importance to achieving good results in all economic activities.

The key to improving economic results in the microcosmic field lies in carrying out technical transformation and streamlining enterprises. With regard to technical transformation, China has drafted a 10-year plan for carrying out technical transformation in all existing enterprises. It is estimated that facilities owned by China's existing industrial and communications enterprises are worth 300 billion yuan (renminbi). If China spends 30 billion yuan annually on the gradual renewal of Chiense enterprises' equipment and facilities for the next 10 years, this renewal will create 60 billion yuan's worth of heavy industrial output value. Moreover, on the basis of the present production scale, the renewal can also provide 20 billion yuan's worth of tax revenue for the state. It is required that following the technical transformation, the general technical level in the 1990's should reach the early 1980's level of developed countries. Some tasks listed in this major 10-year program must be fulfilled in the period of the Sixth 5-Year Plan. It is hoped that economic results can be gradually improved through technical transformation.

With regard to streamlining enterprises, the Chinese Government has decided to streamline an initial group of 9,155 enterprises in the period of the Sixth 5-Year Plan. The total output value of these enterprises accounts for 55.9 percent of the total industrial output value in the budget; profits turned over by them to the higher authorities account for 65.3 percent of the total industrial profits in the budget; and tax revenues from them account for 58.4 percent fo the total industrial tax revenues in the budget. Of these 9,155 enterprises, there are 1,834 large- and medium-sized key enterprises whose total output value, profits and tax revenues respectively account for 45.5 percent, 59.9 percent and 44.6 percent of the total budgetary industrial output value, profits and tax revenues. After successfully streamlining the first group of enterprises, there will be a fundamental improvement in economic returns during the development of our national economy. The following are the major aspects of the streamlining: 1) do well in streamlining and building leading groups; 2) streamline and perfect the economic responsibility system; 3) streamline labor organizations and organize production according to a fixed number of staff members and the quota; and 4) promote the training of all staff members and improve the professional and technical quality of all staff members and workers.

In order to cast off the restrictions that may emerge in the period of the Sixth 5-Year Plan, in addition to changing its development strategy, carrying out technical transformation and streamlining enterprises, China will also implement the open-door policy and draw support from foreign countries.

It is reported that in the period of the Sixth 5-Year Plan, China plans to use foreign funds amounting to 20 billion U.S. dollars. These funds will be spent on the following projects: 1) Exploiting energy resources: In the period of the Sixth 5-Year Plan, emphasis will be put on coal and on basic preparations for exploiting offshore petroleum. 2) Transforming the technical levels of the existing enterprises. The emphasis of the transformation will be put on saving energy and raw and processed materials and also on reforming the structures of products. In the transformation of technical levels, emphasis will be put primarily the light, textile and engineering industries. 3) Quickening the pace of developing new industries (such as electronics, information, nuclear energy, new types of materials and petrochemical industry). On the basis of increasing returns through its own efforts, China hopes to apply foreign funds in order to further cast off the restrictive factors which obstruct economic development.

HONG KONG-BASED FIRM TO RECEIVE PRC COMPANY DATA

HK020154 Hong Kong SOUTH CHINA MORNING POST in English 2 Nov 82 BUSINESS NEWS p 1

[By Ian Markham-Smith]

[Excerpts] Hitherto highly confidential information about Chinese companies will become freely available to the Western world in an astonishing deal being finalised between Hong Kong-based company and the Beijing government.

The new agreement has been thrashed out after five days of intensive negotiations in Beijing between executives of Dun and Bradstreet (HK) Ltd and officials representing two Chinese agencies.

Under the terms of the agreements, Dun and Bradstreet will be able to request comprehensive information about any Chinese company. In return the international organisation will supply the Chinese with company reports on any firm around the world.

Potentially, the information exchanged, which is a multi-million dollar opportunity for Dun and Bradstreet, could dramatically alter a wide variety of future business deals between China and the rest of the world.

Within two years the Chinese intend to establish a computer link with Dun and Bradstreet's headquarters just outside New York so that there will be 24-hour contact between them.

The managing director of Dun and Bradstreet's Hong Kong operation, Mr Derick Cheng, told BUSINESS NEWS in an exclusive interview: "This is an absolutely fantastic deal. It is extremely exciting for the entire business world.

"We are delighted that we have been able to pull it off. The long-term benefits for both sides will be extremely significant.

"We are fortunate to have been able to reach such a marketable deal. China is hungry for information and the whole world wants to trade with China.

"The information we will have at our fingertips could never have been obtained before. We understand we shall get every co-operation from the Chinese authorities about their companies and in return we will supply them with information about Hong Kong companies, companies around the world and foreign buyers and suppliers."

Eventually the Chinese authorities will supply Dun and Bradstreet with a province-by-province breakdown of every company. The initial agreement will last for two years and give Dun and Bradstreet exclusive rights to such information for distribution outside China.

Dun and Bradstreet is the world's leading company dealing in business and credit information.

Dun and Bradstreet (HK) is a 50-50 joint venture between the Hong Kong and Shanghai Bank and American-based Dun and Bradstreet International.

The new deal had taken two years to formulate after a direct approach to Dun and Bradstreet by the Chinese authorities.

However, they had been unable to simply buy into the company's service because they were barred from parting with foreign currency. Instead they came up with the idea of a mutual exchange of information.

The initial approach to Dun and Bradstreet was made by officials of the China International Trust and Investment Corp and one of its subsidiaries, China International Economic Consultants.

Dun and Bradstreet officials are confident that the new agreement will be operating in about six months.

BRIEFS

TRADE DELEGATION TO BEIJING -- A local trade delegation yesterday left for Beijing to exchange information with the authorities regarding the standardisation and preparation of trade documents. The delegation was led by the chairman of Hong Kong Trade Facilitation Council, Ian Tomlin, and included four of its council members. The delegation will also visit Guangdong on the way back to Hong Kong. Mr Tomlin said at the airport that in view of the importance of China trade to Hong Kong, it was to the benefit of both parties that the latest developments in trade facilitation should be examined with a view to mutual understanding and acceptance. He said China had made some improvements in the simplification of trade documents, but there were still problems and that he hoped the experience of Hong Kong could help China. Mr Tomlin said the council had an expanded role which encompassed the international transmission of trade data through the use of electronic data interchange. The concept of paperless trading was no longer a myth in a computerised society, although the actual implementation might take many years of discussion at the international level. And during their visit to Beijing and Guangdong, the interfacing of computer language would be another matter the delegation would raise in its discussions. NATO SAYS USSR HARDENS POSITION ON ARMS TALKS

[Text] Brussels, November 5 (XINHUA) -- "The Soviets have not yet made any move on the central issues of the negotiations" in Geneva but instead they appeared to indicate "a hardening of position," pointed out Chairman of NATO's Special Consultative Group (SCG) Richard Burt today.

Burt, U.S. assistant secretary of state for European affairs, made the statement at the end of today's SCG conference, the sixth of its kind since the U.S.-Soviet talks on Intermediate Nuclear Force (INF) began one year ago.

He noted that the Soviet Union insists on maintaining its present monopoly on long-range INF [LRINF] missiles, which poses "an unacceptable threat" to Western Europe.

By any objective arms control standard, the Soviet position is "inequitable," he said. It means, he pointed out, that Moscow not only wants to preserve its superiority in LRINF but also to eliminate virtually all U.S. dual capable aircraft from Europe, thus undermining NATO's conventional defence as well as nuclear deterrence.

However, Burt said, the best way for the West to achieve any results in negotiations is to continue efforts to implement its December 1979 decision on deploying new U.S LRINF in Western Europe.

FORESTRY, FISHERY PROTOCOLS SIGNED BY PRC, UN

[Text] Beijing, November 5 (XINHUA) -- The Chinese Government and the United Nations/ F.A.O. World Food Program (W.F.P.) today signed protocols on developing forestry and fishery in Beijing.

According to the protocols, W.F.P. will offer food to peasants and fishermen in four counties which need land protection and development of fishery resources. The total value of the projects is estimated at 17.87 million U.S. dollars.

The project on forestry aims at planting fast-growing forest species on land now unused or highly denuded in order to protect neighboring agricultrual areas and to provide timber.

A total of 10,500 hectares are planned to be reclaimed in Shandong and Sichuan Provinces in four years, according to the protocol.

The protocol on fishery states that the purpose of the project is to improve the life of fishermen in Hongze County, Jiangsu Province, near the Hongze Lake, one of the largest in China.

In order to achieve these objectives it is proposed to rehabilitate lake fisheries, increase aquaculture production and reduce spoilage of aquatic products through improved techniques.

The protocols were signed by Kong Candong, representative of the Chinese Government and head of the Department of Foreign Affairs under the Ministry of Agriculture, Animal Husbandry and Fishery, and Nessim Shallon, resident coordinator for United Nations System Operational Activities in China.

ASIAN-PACIFIC CONSTRUCTION WORKSHOP CLOSES

[Text] Hangzhou, November 4 (XINHUA) -- China's 1981 investment in housing accounted for 25.1 percent of the total in capital construction, according to Xu Ronglie of the Ministry of Urban and Rural Construction and Environmental Protection.

He said that housing investment in 1980 accounted for 20 percent of capital construction investment.

The investment increase is part of the nation's effort to solve the housing problem, he told delegates to an Asian-Pacific regional workshop on low-cost building materials and construction systems that closed here today.

"China completed 250 million square meters of urban housing between 1979 and 1981, accounting for about 50 percent of the total built in the 1950-1978 period," Xu Ronglie said.

Attending the 14-day workshop were 52 delegates from Bangladesh, Fiji, India, Nepal, Pakistan, the Philippines, Sri Lanka, Thailand and China.

During the workshop, delegates from the Philippines and India briefed their colleagues on the making of building materials in their countries from industrial and agricultural waste materials.

The following items were decided at the workshop:

-- The establishment of a cooperation network in the Asian-Pacific region, with the Secretariat in Manila, to promote technical exchange in low-cost building materials and construction systems.

-- Work plans for the next two years, which will include running a training course in China on prefabricated concrete and prestressed concrete, a training course in India on brick making and a course in the Philippines on using farm and sideline products as building materials.

The workshop was jointly sponsored by the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization and the Chinese Ministries of Urban and Rural Construction and Environmental Protection, and Foreign Economic Relations and Trade.

DELEGATE SUPPORTS NAMIBIA'S ITU MEMBERSHIP

[Text] Nairobi, November 4 (XINHUA) -- The International Telecommunication Union admitted Namibia as its member at a plenary meeting of this organization's plenipotentiary conference here last night.

This was announced by chairman of the conference after a heated debate on the application by the United Nations Council for Namibia on behalf of Namibia.

During the debate, the United States and a number of Western countries claimed that since Namibia has not yet gained independence and is thus not a sovereign state, the question of Namibia's membership in the I.T.U. should not be considered until it achieves independence.

Chinese delegate and more than 40 other delegates from Third World countries spoke against this assertion. Chinese delegate reaffirmed that China has persistently opposed and denounced the South African authorities' racist policies and their illegal occupation of Namibia. He said China resolutely supports the Namibian people in their struggle for national liberation and independence and resolutely supports the efforts made by SWAPO and other African countries for the independence of Namibia at the earliest possible date. He expressed support for the application for Namibian membership, saying the political rights of the Namibian people are sacred and inviolable.

U.S. PLANS TO CONTINUE MILITARY BUILDUP

[Text] Washington, November 8 (XINHUA) -- The United States today rejected Soviet leader Leonid Brezhnev's accusation of war preparations against the United States as "without foundation" but indicated that it will go on with its military buildup.

The State Department spokesman John Hughes said in a statement that "the speeches made by Soviet leaders during the revolution ceremonies of the past weekend are part of a pattern of recent Soviet statements accusing the United States of aggravating international tensions and even of preparing for war."

He said "these Soviet statements are without foundation" and argued that "the current U.S. effort to improve its defense capabilities is a response to the unrelenting Soviet buildup over the past two decades."

"This U.S. effort will continue," he stressed.

The spokesman also said President Reagan has "pledged that the United States will negotiate in good faith and consider seriously any proposals the Soviet Union puts forward."

"If the Soviet Union is truly interested" in reducing the risk of war, he added, "it should concentrate its efforts on negotiating seriously in Geneva toward real arms reduction agreements."

WEINBERGER COMMENTS ON USSR PACIFIC PRESENCE

[Text] Wellington, November 8 (XINHUA) -- The Soviet military presence in the South Pacific region is large and growing, said visiting U.S. Defence Secretary Caspar Weinberger at a press conference here today.

The Soviets are deploying an increasing number of surface warships, have a large submarine attack force and a lot of air strength, and are developing new submarines and bombers, Weinberger said.

The acquisition of all this offensive military strength constitutes a threat that cannot be ignored, he said.

He said the best way of dealing with the Soviet threat is to maintain deterrent strength. He said nuclear-powered ships comprise a large part of the U.S. fleet and are a very essential part of the "defence" of the South Pacific.

Weinberger arrived here yesterday for a discussion of mutual security issues with the New Zealand Government. His separate talks with Prime Minister R.D. Muldoon and leaders of the New Zealand Defence Council were said to have focussed on defence cooperation between members of the Anzus Pact (Australia, New Zealand and the United States) and their security interests in the Pacific and Indian Oceans.

Weinberger was here on the last leg of his 10-day tour which has taken him through Singapore, Thailand, Indonesia and Australia. He left here for Honolulu this afternoon.

REAGAN, ITALY'S SPADOLINI DISCUSS USSR TIES

[Text] Washington, November 3 (XINHUA) -- President Ronald Reagan stressed here today that the West's trade and economic relations with the Soviet Union "must take into account the nature of the Soviet conduct toward its neighbors."

After his talks with visiting Italian Prime Minister Giovanni Spadolini, Reagan said that the two leaders agreed that the Atlantic allies "must pursue discussions aimed at establishing a broad transatlantic consensus" toward their economic and trade relations with the Soviet Union.

Spadolini, who arrived here yesterday for a three-day visit, discussed with Reagan "a wide range of important issues" including the Soviet pipeline sanctions.

The differences between the United States and its West European allies over the pipeline issue have reportedly been narrowed but the issue still remains unresolved.

During their talks, Spadolini offered some ideas, such as limiting credits and technology to the Soviet Union and reducing dependence on the Soviet Union for raw materials and energy products. These ideas are close to the U.S. position.

A U.S. official said Reagan and Spadolini also reached agreement in principle "for the Italians to participate with us in a discussion and see if we can work out all the problems" to change the roles and mission of the multinational force now on duty in Lebanon.

Spadolini met Secretary of State George Shultz this morning before discussing with Reagan in the White House. He is scheduled to meet Treasury Secretary Donald Regan, Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige and Deputy Secretary of Defense Frank Carlucci.

WASHINGTON POST ON NATO'S TURKISH AIRFIELD PLANS

[Text] Washington, November 7 (XINHUA) -- The United States and its NATO partners will modernize the Turkish airfields at Erzurum and Batman and build a third base at Mus to put NATO fighter-bombers within easy striking reach of Soviet forces nearest to the Persian Gulf.

THE WASHINGTON POST today reported that this plan comes under an agreement initialed last month and will cost the United States and its NATO partners millions of dollars.

U.S. Assistant Secretary of Defense for International Security Policy Richard Perle, who took part in the negotiations, said that the bases will strengthen NATO's southern flank, which is now confronted by 17 Soviet divisions.

THE WASHINGTON POST quoted Pentagon and Turkish officials as saying that the Soviets have about 150 airfields that pose a threat to Turkey and that they have recently strengthened their forces and constructed airfields in the region.

The paper revealed that the U.S. Government had sought Turkey's permission to use the three airbases for the rapid deployment force in an emergency. But Ankara had refused to go along with this part of the proposal.

Official's Greetings

OW081411 Beijing in Russian to the USSR 1800 GMT 7 Nov 82

[Address to Soviet radio listeners by Xie Bangding, vice president of the Chinese People's Association for Friendship with Foreign Countries and responsible official of the Sino-Soviet Friendship Association, on the occasion of the anniversary of the Great October Socialist Revolution -- initial words in Mandarin fading into Russian translation]

[Text] Dear Soviet radio listeners, dear comrades and friends: Allow me on behalf of the Sino-Soviet Friendship Association to extend warm greetings to the Soviet people, who have glorious revolutionary traditions, on the occasion of the 65th anniversary of the Great October.

The Great October Socialist Revolution, accomplished by the Russian proletariat under the leadership of the great teacher of the revolution Vladimir Ilyich Lenin, opened up a new era in the history of mankind, and greatly contributed to the theory and practice of world proletarian revolution and the cause of the oppressed peoples' struggle for their liberation.

The Chinese people always remember that precisely in the victory of the October Revolution they found the path to their liberation. Since then the Chinese people found Marxism-Leninism -- that universal truth that is right for the whole world -- and the Chinese revolution began to transform. The Chinese people have always considered the Chinese revolution a continuation of the Great October Socialist Revolution. Proletarian revolutionaries of the older generation, of whom Comrade Mao Zedong was a representative, implementing Marxist-Leninist theory brought to us by the October Revolution and coordinating it with the practice of the Chinese revolution, creatively resolved the fundamental problems of the Chinese revolution. They led the Chinese people during the most protracted, difficult and complex revolutionary struggle and revolutionary war in the history of world proletarian struggle. The people's revolution gained victory in China, an important power in the east. A New China was born, which in 33 years has gained important success in socialist revolution and socialist construction.

The Chinese people cherish profound feelings for the Soviet people. A long-term traditional revolutionary friendship exists between them, with the Chinese and Soviet peoples rendering each other solidarity and assistance. The Chinese people greatly value friendship with the Soviet people. The Sino-Soviet Friendship Association has always considered consolidating and developing friendship with the Soviet people as an important task. We have always tried to advocate and develop friendship with the Soviet people and have performed large-scale practical work in this sphere. The Sino-Soviet Friendship Association will, as before, be making enormous efforts in advocating and developing the traditional friendship with the Soviet people.

It will be organizing various measures and marking important historic dates in the history and life of the Soviet people. We will be acquainting the Chinese people with the history, culture and life of the Soviet people and their achievements in construction.

We believe that our friendship will certainly further consolidate and develop through the joint efforts of the peoples of our two countries.

During these festive days we wholeheartedly wish the Soviet people new successes in the construction of their motherland. We wish you happiness in life. Long live friendship between the Chinese and Soviet peoples!

GOSR Impact Examined

OW081201 Beijing in Russian to the USSR 1800 GMT 5 Nov 82

[Text] Dear Soviet radio listeners: On the occasion of the 65th anniversary of the Great October Socialist Revolution, we will broadcast today an article entitled "Dissemination and Influence of the October Revolution in China" especially written for our radio by Liu Xianzhen, junior scientific worker of the Institute of World History of the PRC Academy of Social Sciences.

The 65th anniversary of the Great October Socialist Revolution will be marked on 7 November. The Chinese people, together with the Soviet people and the working people of the whole world, are marking this glorious occasion with joy and enthusiasm and conveying their warm festive greetings to the Soviet people.

The October Revolution, carried out under the leadership of the great Lenin and the party of Bolsheviks, is an epochal event in the history of mankind. It launched a new era for mankind of transition from capitalism to socialism and communism.

The October Revolution elicited a strong response in China, which was then still in a semifeudal and semicolonial state, and exerted a great influence on it. Progressive people in China seeking truth and salvation of the motherland and the people watched with great attention the revolutionary developments in Russia. The October Revolution inspired the long-suffering Chinese people. Many Chinese newspapers and journals reported on the October Revolution as it marched across Russia.

On 10 November, 3 days after the victory of the armed revolt in Petrograd, the then leading newspaper MINGUO RIBAO which had a significant influence on political circles of old China reported on the Kerenskiy provisional government being overthrown in Petrograd by workers and soldiers with big headlines and in bold print, "Sudden Great Political Coup in Russia -- Provisional Government Deposed." On 11 November SHENG BAO, SHI BAO, XIN ZHONG BAO and other newspapers published in Shanghai also reported on the victory of the October Revolution. The Chinese press not only reported on the victory of the October armed revolt but also introduced to readers the political program of the newly created Soviet Government, its laws and other important aspects.

Initially the influence of bourgeois information agencies was felt in MINGUO RIBAO reports on the October Revolution. However, the newspaper soon realized the real situation in Russia, enhanced its understanding of the significance of the October Revolution and began to provide sympathetic reports and accept the new Soviet Russia on a friendly basis.

On 1 January 1918 MINGUO RIBAO wrote in an editorial article: We have big hopes for the great transformation of our close neighbor Russia. What are the demands of the Russian revolution? They are human rights and people's rights. In order to ensure human rights it is necessary to improve the living standards of peasants and workers.

In order to ensure people's rights it is necessary to eliminate the despotic tsarist dynasty and the nobility and build a democratic policy. The demands of the revolution in our country are similar.

MINGUO RIBAO was the organ of the Chinese revolutionary party, the Kuomintang, and was created on the initiative of the great revolutionary democrat Sun Yat-sen. The above-mentioned article reflected Sun Yat-sen's views. It clearly approved of the October Revolution and pointed at its fairness and progressive significance.

The article also compared the Chinese revolution of that time with the October Revolution in Russia. This is hardly a suitable comparison because the two revolutions had different characteristics. Nevertheless, all this obviously reflected approval of the October Revolution by Chinese revolutionaries -- the Democrats headed by Sun Yat-sen.

Dr Sun Yat-sen himself later said: Humanity sees great hope in the October Revolution. There is no other way for success in future revolutions except by copying Russia. In 1918, Sun Yat-sen sent a telegram from Shanghai expressing warm congratulations to Lenin and the Soviet Government. The telegram said: The Chinese revolutionary party expresses its high respect for the undoubtedly persistent struggle of the members of the revolutionary party in your country and wishes that the revolutionary parties of the two countries, China and Russia, join ranks and struggle together.

Because of the obstacles created by the imperialists it took a long time for the telegram to get there. Nevertheless, it ultimately reached Soviet Russia. The first Chinese journal which published an article on the October Revolution was TAIPING YANG [PACIFIC OCEAN]. An article entitled "The Armed Uprisings in Russia After the Revolution" -- meaning the February revolution -- was published in the 8th issue of the first volume of the journal which came out on 15 November 1917. A journal unknown at that time, DONG-FANG ZAZHI, in its issue published in March 1918 was the first to introduce to its readers in detail the October Revolution headed by Lenin.

The first issue of TRUD, published in March 1918, included a brief biography entitled "Lenin: Vanguard of the Socialist Revolution in Russia." The article said: China's neighbor Russia has openly and honestly initated a social revolution for equality between the rich and the poor. Many feel frightened when social revolution is mentioned. In fact, this is a natural tendency in the world. The reasons of the inadequacy of the present society will be continuously revealed, but there is nothing unusual in this.

These journals were not Marxist, of course. They reported on the October Revolution not from the proletarian viewpoint. They did not evaluate Lenin on the basis of Marxist theory. The authors of the articles in these journals used inaccurate and unscientific terminology and concepts. Nevertheless they quite objectively and with great interest reported on the development of the October Revolution and on the Soviet Union's political program.

It is especially noteworthy that one of the participants of the Chinese Communist movement, Li Dazhao, published in 1918 a number of important articles in which he ardently glorified the October Revolution carried out under the leadership of the Bolshevik Party. In an article comparing the French with the Russian revolution, he wrote: The Russian revolution is a revolution which occurred at the beginning of the 20th century, a revolution which was carried out on the basis of the principles of socialism, a social revolution which contains bright prospects for the world revolution. The Russian revolution is not only a sharp indication of the change in the Russian people's sympathies but also in the psychology of all mankind in the 20th century. Observing the current events in Russia we can see the dawn of a new civilization in the world. We must attentively watch for news from the New Russia which is being built on the basis of freedom and humanism in order to keep pace with these new events of world importance.

In October 1918, Li Dazhao also published two articles in the NEW YOUTH journal: "The Victory of the Common People" and "the Victory of the Bolsheviks." The articles said: The October Revolution is the victory of labor, a precursor of the world revolution of the 20th century, a new dawn for mankind. Although the word "Bolshevism" was created by the Russians, its spirit is understood by all the people on earth, therefore, the victory of Bolshevism is the victory of the new spirit filling the hearts of all mankind in the 20th century. Henceforth, the triumphant banners of Bolshevism will be seen everywhere. The triumphant hymns of Bolshevism will also be heard everywhere. The bell of humanism has rung. The dawn of freedom has risen. Just wait and see how the whole world is going to be enflamed by Red banners. These were the sincere words Li Dazhao used to report on the October Revolution and glorify the victory of Bolshevism. Soon after this the journal MEIZHOU PINGLUN published the Li Dazhao article, "The New Era", in which he said he believed that China would definitely take the October Revolution path. Li Dazhao then was chief of the Beijing University library and a professor of economic sciences. He was a known scientist. Prior to this he worked as chief editor of the newspaper XIN ZHONG BAO and supervised the editing of the journal MEIZHOU PINGLUN. He commanded great authority among the public. Therefore the articles he wrote glorifying the October Revolution had a great influence in China.

Cai Yuanpei's approach to the October Revolution also warrants comment. Cai Yuanpei was a known revolutionary, a democrat and a teacher. From 1917 he was the head of Beijing University. In November 1918, on the first anniversary of the October Revolution, he made a fiery speech at a meeting in which he first promoted the slogan: Glorify Labor. This slogan reflected the sympathy of the leading Chinese intellectuals for the working masses and their new understanding of the historical role of the working class under the influence of the October Revolution. From all this we can see the significant influence the October Revolution exerted on the Chinese public and the leading intellectuals. The launching of the patriotic May 4th Movement in 1919 was a concrete manifestation and a direct consequence of this influence, a step to revolution and the dissemination of Marxism-Leninism in China. As Comrade Mao Zedong correctly pointed out: The gun salvo of the October Revolution has brought to us the Marxism-Leninism. The May 4th Movement was born in response to the call of world revolution, the call of the Russian revolution, the call of Lenin. It gave an impetus to the world proletarian revolution.

Under the influence of the Great October Socialist Revolution, a truly socialist ideological trend appeared in our country. China's leaders, a representative of whom was Comrade Li Dazhao, quickly accepted the ideas of Marxism-Leninism. The 16th issue of the journal MEIZHOU PINGLUN, published in April 1919, included extracts of the Chinese translation of the Communist Manifesto. In May of the same year a special issue of the NEW YOUTH journal was published. A special rubric on studying Marxism was included in the supplement of the newspaper (CHENG BAO). In July 1919 Comrade Mao Zedong published in Changsha City in Hunan Province a journal, XIANGJIANG PINGLUN, which popularized Marxism and the spirit of the October Revolution. In 1918 Comrade Li Dazhao organized a society for studying Marxism through which he united foremost intellectuals and headed their studies of Marxism in conjunction with concrete questions of the revolution in Russia. The May 4th Movement, which was born under the influence of the October Revolution, was not only an anti-imperialist and antifeudal movement but also a movement for a new culture and new ideas. Since the May 4th Movement, thanks to the initiative of a number of intellectuals who adopted communist ideas, our country not only marched forward studying science and democracy but also, more significantly, studying Marxism and the experience of the October Revolution. This movement gradually changed to Marxist propaganda from the initial propaganda of bourgeois democracy. Thanks to the development of the May 4th Movement and the dissemination of Marxism in China, conditions were created for founding the Chinese Communist Party in 1921.

Speaking at the rally, Wu Lengxi said that President Kim Il-song, the great leader of the Korean people, visited China last month. His visit has promoted the true friendship between the parties of the two countries and between their people. In the past few years, friendly exchanges between the radio and television circles of the two countries have increased. He said that the visit will certainly strengthen and develop the militant friendship, solidarity and cooperation between the radio and television workers of the two countries.

Yi Yong-ok also addressed the rally. He said: We have visited Beijing, Shanghai, Guangzhou, Kunming, Suzhou, Wuxi and Nanjing. Wherever we went, we witnessed the true friendship of the Chinese people for the Korean people. We shared weal and woe with the Chinese people during our struggle against U.S. imperialist aggression. Today, the Korean and Chinese people are supporting one another and closely cooperating in safeguarding independence, sovereignty and socialist construction. The traditional friendship between the people of the two countries is developing to a new level from generation to generation. Yi Yong-ok said that the Korean radio and television workers will do their best to further promote the great friendship and solidarity between the two countries.

Musical programs were performed by the Chinese broadcasting art troupe and the youth's chorus of the Central People's Broadcasting Station.

UN ENVOY BLASTS VIETNAMESE AGGRESSION IN DK

[Text] United Nations, November 8 (XINHUA) -- China said today that at present the greatest obstacle to the realization of peace, stability and cooperation in Southeast Asia was the armed invasion and military occupation of Kampuchea by a foreign country.

Addressing the General Assembly on the item "question of peace, stability and cooperation in Southeast Asia", Chinese Permanent Representative Liang Qing asserted: "Vietnam's military occupation of Kampuchea has not only violated the sovereignty and territorial integrity of that country, but also menaced the peace and stability of Southeast Asia."

Vietnam had threatened Thailand's security not only by its frequent incursions into the Thai territory but also by causing massive exodus of refugees into that country, he continued.

Furthermore, Ling Qing added, Vietnam even engaged in naked bullies [as received] against ASEAN and China. He said one Vietnamese leader threatened to retaliate or be in confrontation with ASEAN countries for five or even twenty years if the latter continued to support Democratic Kampuchea. Vietnam also clamoured, so long as what it called "Chinese threat" was not removed, it would consider permitting the Soviet Union to set up military bases there.

"As a matter of fact," Ling Qing said, "Vietnam has long since permitted that superpower to use the military bases in Vietnam and Kampuchea. Vietnam's aggression and expansion in Indochina are closely tied to that superpower's strategy of driving southward."

Ling Qing stated: "China has always pursued a foreign policy of peace. We endorse the ASEAN proposal for the establishment of a zone of peace, freedom and neutrality in Southeast Asia and support the Southeast Asian countries in strengthening their cooperation through consultations on an equal footing."

"In supporting the just struggle of the Kampuchean people against Vietnamese aggression, China proceeds from its position of safeguarding the basic principles of the United Nations Charter and the norms of international relations, and opposing hegemonism and safeguarding peace in Asia and the whole world," he went on.

"As to what political system or what kind of government Kampuchea may choose to establish after the withdrawal of Vietnamese troops," he noted, "that is entirely the internal affairs of Kampuchea and should be left to the Kampuchean people themselves to decide on."

He said: "The Chinese Government wishes to see the Kampuchea of tomorrow an independent, peaceful, neutral and non-aligned country. China does not seek any selfish interests on the question of Kampuchea, still less does it intend to include Kampuchea in its fictitious sphere of influence. China only hopes that after regaining its independence and liberation Kampuchea will maintain friendly and good-neighbourly relations with all its neighbours, including Vietnam."

Speaking on the possibility of improving relations between China and Vietnam, Ling Qing said: "There do not exist any obstacles on the Chinese side. The Chinese people cherish a traditional friendship with the Vietnamese people. We wish to maintain and develop this friendship. If only the Vietnamese authorities renounce their policies of aggression and expansion, withdraw all their troops from Kampuchea, abandon their hostility towards China, relations between China and Vietnam can be normalized in no time."

CHINA DAILY DISCUSSES VIETNAM, KAMPUCHEA

HK090058 Beijing CHINA DAILY in English 9 Nov 82 p 4

["Opinion" column by CHINA DAILY commentator: "Justice Will Triumph"]

[Text] The advent of a new dry season in November -- the fifth since the Vietnamese invaded Kampuchea in January, 1979 -- finds the aggressors on the brink of another desperate attempt to dislodge the Kampuchean resistance forces from their entrenched positions near the Thai border.

Seven full infantry divisions of invading troops have been deployed along a 800-kilometre-long front, backed by 20,000 fresh reinforcements from Vietnam and hundreds of T-54 tanks, 155 mm long-range artillery and other Soviet weapons. Meanwhile, Vietnamese detachments continue armed provocations against Thailand and China and launch harassing intrusions into the territories of these two neighbouring countries.

Like a beast at bay, the Vietnamese aggressors are getting ready for a new adventure aimed at gaining on the battlefield by brute force what they failed to attain at the United Nations by political intrigue. This new Vietnamese move, in the wake of their crushing defeat at the world organization, must be viewed as a challenge to the UN majority that upholds international justice.

UN Majority

Samdech Norodom Sihanouk, attending the 37th session of the UN General Assembly for the first time as president of the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea, was received in a manner befitting a head of state. More than 100 delegates congratulated him following his September 30 speech, reiterating Kampuchea's determination never to give up armed struggle for liberation until the invaders totally withdraw from his homeland.

On October 25, the General Assembly, by a vote of 90 to 29, rejected for the fourth time in as many years Vietnam's plan to unseat Democratic Kampuchea or leave the seat vacant. Three days later, it passed by an even larger majority -- 105 against 23 -- its fourth successive resolution demanding the withdrawal of the invading forces from Kampuchea and restoration of its independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity and the right of the Kampuchean people to determine their own destiny.

All this has demonstrated beyond doubt that the coalition, formed last summer with Samdech Sihanouk as president, Khieu Samphan as vice-president in charge of foreign affairs and Son Sann as prime minister, enjoys the sympathy and support of the international community. And the Heng Samrin regime is regarded as nothing more than the group of puppets it is, installed and propped up by Vietnam's armed force.

Popular Support

Perhaps more important in the long run is what is occurring inside Kampuchea itself. Hundreds of soldiers have deserted the puppet Heng Samrin army in the past months. Many, including a regimental commander, have crossed over and joined the Kampuchean National Army.

Meanwhile, the national army is receiving increasing support from the people who were for a time alienated because of past errors by Democratic Kampuchea. The army can now depend on villagers to supply them with food and information, take care of their sick and wounded and, in general, help in their guerrilla activities. Many people in the Vietnam-occupied areas have organized themselves into guerrilla units to coordinate with the national army in resistance efforts.

This new development since last year is significant. What decides the final outcome of people's warfare inevitably is the will of the people and which side they support.

The road to victory of the Kampuchean people's struggle for liberation will be long and tortuous. While they must and can rely on themselves to win out, like others have done before, the world should not sit idle till aggression is defeated.

KHIEU SAMPHAN CALLS ON SIHANOUK IN BEIJING

KHIEU SAMPHAN VIEWS UN VOTE ON DK'S SEAT

[Text] Phnom Malai, Democratic Kampuchea, November 5 (XINHUA) -- The resolution maintaining Kampuchea's U.N. seat and calling for the pull-out of Vietnamese troops from Kampuchea adopted at the 37th session of U.N. General Assembly represents a bitter loss to the Hanoi regime and a victory for all the peace-loving and justice-upholding countries, said Khieu Samphan.

Receiving correspondents from XINHUA and the PEOPLE'S DAILY here yesterday, the vice-president of Democratic Kampuchea, who has just returned from New York after attending the U.N. session, said that the U.N. resolution fully demonstrates the achievements of the Kampuchean people in the military, political and diplomatic fields. This, he said, is also the result of the efforts made by the delegation of the Democratic Kampuchean Coalition Government headed by Samdech Norodom Sihanouk.

He pointed out that in the past four years, the international community entirely denied the Vietnam-backed Phnom Penh regime and refused the Vietnamese proposal to leave Democratic Kampuchean's U.N. seat vacant. These were just actions of the world's people who are united in the struggle to uphold international law and to safeguard peace and stability in Asia, he said.

This was the fourth time that the U.N. General Assembly adopted a resolution urging the Vietnamese troops to pull out of Kampuchea. Once again, the Vietnamese invasion of Kampuchea was denounced.

He said the Kampuchean problem can be solved only after the complete withdrawal of the Vietnamese troops from his country.

Khieu Samphan appealed to the peace- and justice-loving countries in the world to continue their support to the just struggle of the Kampuchean people and the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea against Vietnamese aggression.

UK PRIME MINISTER BLAMES USSR FOR ARMS EXPANSION

OW071721 Beijing XINHUA in English 1617 GMT 7 Nov 82

[Text] Paris, November 6 (XINHUA) -- Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher put the blame on the Soviet Union for the armament expansion in the last ten years.

She said in a speech published in FIGARO-MAGAZINE today that the Soviet Union has dispatched to Afghanistan 100,000 troops and intensified its pressure on Poland.

She said: "We are all confronting the same menace and a supreme necessity to defend ourselves, despite the different political colors of governments of our European countries."

She said international stability and world peace demand more self-refrainment of the Soviet Union and its responsibility.

The prime minister said: "The partners of Europe and the United States are fully aware of their identical interests in security and their political duties subject to no doubt."

Mrs. Thatcher also underlined the importance of the unity of Europe. She said: "The European Community is far from realising its potentiality. We have spent much time in solving our internal conflicts but failed to develop the community for new challenges and new opportunities."

On the Middle East, the prime minister said that negotiations are necessary to seek genuine and long-lasting solution of the problems and the solution will have to base itself on the reciprocal recognition of the rights of both Palestinians and Israelis.

POTENTIAL IN SINO-CANADIAN TRADE EXAMINED

[Article by Qin Benli [2953 2609 4539] and Yu Ming [0060 2494]: "Efficiency and Potential -- Third and Last in a Series of Random Notes on a Visit to Canada"]

[Text] When visiting the (Hills) Company, we had an interview which made a deep impression on us. The deputy general of the company received the "two foreign reporters." After talking for about 20 minutes, the vice president of the general office who was accompanying us directed our attention to a board on the desk of the deputy general manager, on which was written: "Excuse me, some customers are waiting for me." So we had to say goodbye. "A customer is a king and time means gold." What we experienced is a vivid footnote to this motto. It is said that such a practice is very common there so nobody will be offended.

No wonder the Canadians very often say that we Chinese seldom take the initiative in making contacts with them. As a customer, a Canadian importer complained that it was a "test" of his patience to make contacts with China's trading organizations because a great deal of time and energy was needed to do so. Some Canadian friends said that when they negotiated with representatives of China's trading organizations in Beijing, they found the Chinese representatives very cordial but once they returned to Canada, they could no longer get in touch with them. They did not receive any reply to their letters or telegrams. They could only find the people again in Beijing. They said: "It has been a longstanding problem that some Chinese export corporations do not answer letters from Canadian firms. Many Canadians find it difficult to understand this phenomenon and consider it a big obstacle to trade development."

Some of the management policies and methods of enterprises in Western countries are a direct reflection and inevitable result of socialization and internationalization in production. We can make use of them. Stressing efficiency and time saving, for example, was regarded by Marx as "the most important economic law based on collective productive forces, and even the most superb law." Socialist economy and trade should have a stronger sense of responsibility and better professional knowledge. Of course, we cannot lay blame on any particular department or any particular individual. What needs immediate reform is the management system. An irrational system will dampen people's enthusiasm in improving various links in export.

A Canadian importer said to us: "Rice is sent from China in large sacks weighing 100 jin each. How can we expect a Canadian consumer to buy one whole sack? Consequently, after rice is imported, it has to be repacked manually into smaller bags of 20 jin each. This inevitably raises the retail price of the rice. Can you use small bags for export? In so doing, China will profit by the cost of the labor involved, lower the price and increase sales. Such "trifles" can be done very easily but will produce very good results. Why is it that nothing has been done in this respect?"

This proves from another angle that structural reform can tap enormous potential in links similar to this. (Kou Wein Yi) [1379 0251 5030], executive chairman of the Sino-Canadian Trade Council, said that he has recently been informed that relevant departments in China have adopted some new measures, such as fixed time limits on making replies to foreign firms. This is a good phenomenon. In expressing his comments and hopes on Sino-Canadian trade, this noted figure in Canadian trading circles who has visited China more than 40 times said: "China has made much progress and obtained many good results in exporting foodstuffs, consumer goods and handicrafts products. Its light industry has the brightest prospects. China will make greater achievements if it strengthens its plans systematically."

In a sense, shortcomings and gaps in our work mean potential for us to tap. It we pay attention to problems exposed in responses from various trading channels, further improve our work and carry out structural reform, we will centainly realize the goal of increasing our total import and export volume to $160 billion by the end of this century.

RENMIN RIBAO ON PARTY WORK AMONG PEASANTS

HK070752 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 7 Nov 82 pp 1, 4

[Editorial: "Do a Good Job of the Party's Work Among the 800 Million Peasants"]

[Text] Not long after the 12th party congress, a national conference on rural ideological and political work was convened. The conference analyzed the excellent situation in the rural areas, summed up and exchanged experiences in rural ideological and political work since the 3d plenary session of the 11th Central Committee, discussed the tasks, contents and methods of rural ideological and political work in the new situation, and made concrete arrangements for rural ideological and political work this winter and next spring. This is an extremely important meeting convened by the central authorities, following the 12th party congress. It is of far-reaching significance for implementing in depth the 12th party congress spirit, developing the excellent situation in the rural areas, and proceeding to solve the strategic focal issue of agriculture. The rural party organizations at all levels must seriously implement the spirit of this meeting and strive to create a new situation in rural ideological and political work.

Comrade Hu Yaobang pointed out in his report to the 12th party congress: "Doing a good job of party work among the 800 million peasants is an important condition for achieving the goal of modernization." The 12th party congress clearly stipulated that it is necessary to build both material and spiritual civilization when engaging in socialist modernization. For the building of the two civilizations to develop interdependently fully accords with the laws of socialist construction. Since the third plenary session the rural party organizations at all levels have seriously implemented the series of Central Committee principles and policies; in particular, they have gotten a good grasp of setting up various types of production responsibility systems, putting them on a sound basis, stabilizing and perfecting them. As a result, an excellent situation of economic prosperity and political stability and unity has emerged throughout the rural areas. In this historic change, great successes have also been gained in the party's ideological and political work in the rural areas. However, compared with the building of material civilization in the rural areas, the building of spiritual civilization there has not yet been given sufficient attention in certain places and in the work of certain leading comrades. This is shown not only in insufficiently effective ideological education in socialism and communism, in the failure to solve thoroughly the problems of ideological understanding among cadres and peasants in implementing the party's principles and policies, and in the failure to improve rural educational, scientific and cultural standards rapidly; it is also shown in the growth in some places of negative phenomena such as gambling, stealing, fighting, beating people, feudal superstitions, arranged marriages and so on. Hence, in the course of creating a new situation in agricultural development, we must pay great attention to ideological and political work in the rural areas and strive to do a good job in building spiritual civilization there, so that the 800 million peasants will further enhance awareness, gradually shake themselves out of cultural and educational backwardness, and become new peasants with ideals, morality, culture and discipline who love the country, the collective and socialism.

The targets of ideological and political work in the rural areas are the peasant masses, including the grassroots cadres. Correctly understanding the ideological and political state of the peasants in the 1980's is the precondition for doing a good job in rural ideological and political work. Overestimating or underestimating the socialist awareness of the peasants do not benefit our work. The current main tendency is that many comrades underestimate the peasants' awareness. A few comrades babble that the peasants today are "materially rich but spiritually poor," and that "they have become more selfish following the increase in their incomes." These notions are incorrect.

We should realize that, compared with the initial post-liberation period, fundamental changes have occurred among the peasants in every respect: They are producers under the socialist cooperative system, their social and economic status is closer to that of the working class, there is much greater mutual identity of interests among them, and they are more closely linked to the destiny of the socialist motherland. They have already broken through the narrow limits of small producers, and their vision is much broader. Since the 3d plenary session of the 11th Central Committee, under the guidance of the party's line and principles, the peasants' initiative and activism have been brought into full play, and they are working all the time to create a new socialist life, continually making new contributions and undertaking new creations. The various types of production responsibility system instituted in the rural areas in recent years, and the various management forms that have emerged suited to the actual conditions were in most cases created by the peasants. The party has supported and led the peasants' socialist creative activities and adopted the method of concentration and persistence to guide the peasants to advance step by step. From positive and negative practice the peasants have felt all the more that they absolutely cannot do without party leadership, and they demand that the party have the correct line and policies and maintain their continuity; as a result of studying the 12th party congress documents, their labor enthusiasm is still greater and their affection for the party still deeper. This is the main aspect of the matter, and we must first of all affirm this. Of course, we must also soberly realize that today's peasants were yesterday's private owners, and many of them have been tainted by feudalist and capitalist ideology and habits; and the anarchism and extreme individualism and other poisons spread by Lin Biao and the "gang of four" during the 10 years of turmoil still have a certain effect on them. There are still certain negative phenomena among a few of the peasants.

For instance, they enthusiastically support the policies since the third plenary session, but fears and worries about "change" cause them to hesitate and move cautiously along the road of advancing toward affluence and even to engage in certain things that only take account of immediate interests and not of long-term ones. They work hard at production and look forward to a good life, but sometimes they only care about themselves in handling relations between the state, the collective and the individual. They believe in the power of science and technology in production, and work hard to learn and apply science, but they cannot resolutely break down feudal superstitions and bad customs and habits in matters such as birth, aging, death, marriage and so on. We must not neglect these problems that exist among some of the peasants, nor should we exaggerate them. We must certainly not, just because of these negative phenomena, deny the tremendous progress made by the peasants under party education in recent decades, nor should we lose confidence in being able to lead the peasants to continue advancing along the socialist road, and still less should we doubt the current excellent rural situation and the correctness of the rural economic policies since the third plenary session.

This winter and next spring, on the basis of studying well the documents of the 12th party congress, the rural areas throughout the country must all conduct education in three main aspects. This should be arranged first for the party members and then for the masses.

First, we must carry out education in the party's current policies, to eliminate the misunderstanding and apprehension among certain of the cadres and masses regarding the rural economic policies since the 3d plenary session of the 11th Central Committee, and especially on the question of the responsibility systems. We should clearly explain to them that the contract responsibility system linking remuneration to output is a new form of socialist cooperative economy and a great creation in the party's leadership of the peasants in socialist practice. They will thus believe that the whole series of principles and policies, including the contract responsibility system linking remuneration to output, will certainly not be lightly changed against the masses' wishes.

Second, we must conduct education in taking account of the interests of the state, the collective and the individual, and help the masses to get right the relationship between the interests of the state, the collective and the individual as they advance to affluence through hard work, and correctly handle the relationship between decision-making powers and subordination to guidance by state plans.

Third, we must conduct education in communist ideals, morality, spirit and disposition, and mobilize the peasants to struggle against bad things like gambling, stealing, feudal superstitions and so on, so as to bring about a further turn for the better in party work style and social mood. It must be particularly emphasized that when conducting education, we must correctly and fully explain and clarify the relationship and distinction between the party's current policies and the communist ideal.

On the one hand the peasants should see the bright future, establish lofty ideals, stress communist beliefs, morality and disposition, and carry out their labor in the attitude of socialist people. On the other hand, they must understand that the party's current policies are policies for the low-level stage of communism, that is, the historical period of socialism, and that implementing the current policies is the concrete practice of accomplishing the communist ideal in the current stage. No matter what, the current policies cannot be shaken, nor may we do things now that can only be done in the future. We must absolutely not repeat the "leftist" errors of the past, such as blowing a wind of communism, making everything public property, instituting the egalitarian distribution system, taking away the peasants' private plots, closing down the rural trade fairs and so on.

In an important speech that Comrade Hu Yaobang made last April, he emphatically pointed out that the cause for the widespread neglect and lack of skill in doing ideological and political work lies in the fact that we have failed to satisfactorily, systematically and profoundly sum up our experience in our previous ideological and political work. In order to create a new situation in our ideological and political work in the rural areas, we should make great efforts to sum up our historical experience in doing rural ideological and political work and, on the basis of these experiences, carry forward the fine traditions, study the new situation, develop new experience and chart a new path. Our historical experiences and lessons teach us that in doing our rural ideological and political work, we should pay especially great attention to adhering to the mass line and should never forget our party's aim of serving the people wholeheartedly. We should adopt a correct attitude toward our peasants and treat them as equal to us when carrying out propaganda among them. We should persistently adopt the method of persuasion, discussion and consultation to solve the peasants' ideological problems. We should ban the adoption of any coercive means or pressure in solving ideological problems. We should combine the method of carrying out ideological work generally and publicly with that of carrying it out individually through private talks. We should do a good job of carrying out ideological education among our cadres and party members and train a large number of activists. Thus we will be able to use these cadres, party members and activists to carry out our ideological work. We should focus on solving the key ideological problem at a given period which is closely related to the actual needs and the immediate interests of the masses then and there. All malpractices of exaggeration, lying, subjectivism, dogmatism and formalism must be resolutely discarded. Furthermore, we should pay attention to combining ideological education with cultural and scientific education and to combining our ideological and political work with various kinds of cultural activities that our peasants are fond of. We should motivate the broad ranks of peasants to educate themselves by means of carrying out the activities of formulating "village regulations," establishing "civilized villages" and evaluating and selecting "five-good families." By so doing, we will spread our ideological and political work to all the hundreds of millions of households.

Doing a good job of rural ideological and political work is a task for the whole party. Our party committees at all levels must pay sufficient attention to this work. They should include this work in their routine agenda and periodically discuss it and check its progress. They should organize all youth, women, militia and other mass bodies and the cultural, educational, broadcasting, publishing, science popularization, sports and public health circles to coordinate closely and cooperate and jointly do rural ideological and political work satisfactorily. During the past few years, the party's policies have brought about many benefits to our peasants. This has greatly raised the party's prestige among the peasants and greatly strengthened the influence of the party and the socialist cause among them. Along with the improvement in our peasants' material lives, our radio and television, film shows, books and the press have entered their daily life. This creates favorable conditions for us to continue to satisfactorily do our ideological and political work in our rural areas. As long as we conscientiously and soundly do our work in accordance with the spirit of this rural ideological and political work conference, we will certainly be able to create a new situation in building spiritual civilization in our rural areas.

RENMIN RIBAO ON COMMUNISM, CPC MEMBERS

HK051538 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 5 Nov 82 pp 1, 4

[Commentator's article: "Communist Party Members Must Have Firm Faith"]

[Text] The 12th party congress requests that ideological education consist of communist ideals, beliefs and moral values, pointing out that the socialist character of our spiritual civilization is determined by ideological education and demanding that Communist Party members, first of all, play an exemplary role morally and ideologically. This is a solemn call made by the party to its 39 million members in the great struggle of creating a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization.

The great majority of our party members are good and relatively good. They have firm belief in communism and aspirations for fighting all their lives for the cause of communism by wholeheartedly serving the people and sacrificing their own interests. They have the determination to carry out the party's decisions and accomplish all tasks of all work in defiance of difficulties and in spite of all setbacks. And they have the moral attributes of maintaining close ties with the masses, listening to people's criticism with an open mind and conducting criticism and self-criticism. It is precisely the tens of millions of such Communist Party members who are, with their exemplary role, uniting and leading hundreds of millions of people to continuously push forward the cause of socialism.

However, it is no secret that there are not a few very bad Communist Party members. Answering to the name of "party members," they in fact have no conviction in communism or have wavered in their faith. A female cadre in Zhejiang Province wrote a letter to the party Central Committee, complaining about a veteran party member for his indulgence in pleasure seeking, ostentation and extravagance and his practices of accepting bribes and seeking jobs for his children through the back door. When she said to him that he had changed, this veteran party member even said: "Do you still remember a statement that 'power means happiness and lack of power means bitterness?' I think communism is a fantasy. Who knows what the future society will be? There is no need for you to be so serious."

The confession of this "Communist Party member" is greatly distressing. More's the pity that more than one or two "party members" also have the same ideas. Their words and deeds have sullied the image of our party and have produced very bad influences among the people. For this reason, it was absolutely necessary for the 12th party congress to request that all party members play an exemplary role in cultivating communist ideals, beliefs and moral values.

Looking back at our party's history, we can find a regularity of phenomena: Whenever the revolution came across great setbacks or a great turn, the weak-willed would inevitably lose confidence, cast aside beliefs and leave the party. After the failure of the great revolution in 1927, some people left the army, some absconded, some were dejected and some betrayed the revolution.

At the time when the anti-Japanese war broke out, our party set up a united front. At this time, a few of our party members thought that it was an honor for them to be officials of the KMT, so they deserted to the KMT side. After the smashing of the "gang of four," a jumble of difficulties and problems cropped up and the turnabout in our policies was great. Under such circumstances, once again some party members lost their faith in communism. If these people straightforwardly say that they would like to withdraw from the party, then things will be simple. However, the problem is that some people have already lost their faith in communism, but they are yet unwilling to lose the "benefits" which a member of a ruling party might have and they are reluctantly hanging on in the party. This has made the work of differentiating and educating party members more complicated and difficult. Those who are incorrigible and are proved by facts to have betrayed communism must be cleared out of the party. But after all, these people are not many. What we must do is to educate the wavering ones. We must help them clear up some confused ideas and wrong concepts and strengthen their fatih in communism through repeated and serious study of the 12th party congress documents.

"Communism is at once a complete system of proletarian ideology and a new social system." Our party is precisely, with communist ideology as its guide, striving for the goal of building up communist society. In different periods of time, the revolutionary movement led by our party is divided into different phases according to actual situations and tasks. However, in nature they are all part of the communist movement. The long and big Chang Jiang is also divided into different big sectors, as Tongtian He, Jinsha He and Chang Jiang. The name of each sector is different, as is the situation in each sector, but all of them are an integrated part connected with each other. The long Chang Jiang zigzags, but its mighty and irresistible torrent follows eastward to the sea. With this view in mind, we must educate the vast numbers of party members not only to see the historic tasks of the present stage clearly, but also to remember the inexorable trend of social development. We must also educate them not only to be fully cognizant of all kinds of difficulties and problems awaiting the, but also firmly believe in the bright future of communism. Without the goal of communism, the Communist Party will become nothing. If a party member thinks that communism is "dim" and an "illusion," if he fails to uphold the communist ideals and beliefs, then he is no longer a Communist Party member.

In the historical period of socialism, it is necessary to carry out the principle of distribution according to work. This principle is applicable to all members of society, including Communist Party members. However, if the ideological consciousness of a Communist only stays at the level of working according to the amount distributed to him, his consciousness would lag too far behind the level that he should reach. If he believes that "the power in hand should be utilized in time or it will be invalid after the specified date," then he would lose nearly all the true qualities of a Communist. As for a Communist, the purpose of taking part in revolution is not to take a share of benefits according to his work; rather, it is, first, to put the principle of distribution according to work into effect in the entire society and then realize the communist system. Distribution according to work is a principle for distribution in a socialist society and this principle has basically come into effect. But the implementation of this principle is not yet perfect and there are still a lot of things for us to do in order to carry it through to perfection. It is for realizing communism that a party member joins the Communist Party. The principle of distribution according to work is one that must be enforced in the present stage of our socialist system, but it cannot be a substitute for our ultimate objective of realizing communism. In any event, a Communist should have a higher ideological level than the ordinary masses. He must have the communist ideology of seeking well-being for the people of China and the world and have the communist spirit of being the first to bear hardships and the last to enjoy comforts and being devoted to public service so as to forget his own interests. He should take a communist attitude toward work, which is manifested in serving the people heart and soul without considering his pay.

We should also note that in actual life it is quite common that the quality and quantity of people's work are difficult to measure in an accurate way. In this case, workers' consciousness is of more importance. If all our Communists can take a communist attitude toward their work, this will exert great influence over the masses and speed up the advance of our socialist cause.

As far as Communists, especially party cadres, are concerned, the faith in communism must be embodied in their deeds as well as words, must be maintained consistently in their outward behavior and inner thoughts. That is to say, their practice must tally with the theory they advocate. At present, some party members and cadres speak of communism at meetings while practicing individualism after meetings. They even encroach upon the interests of the state and the masses. In this way, how could the "communism" they advocate be convincing and attractive? Moreover, a very small number of party members and cadres cannot withstand the inroads of capitalist ideology and degenerate into betraying communism. For example, there were Wang Weijing, who practiced smuggling and arbitrage and speculation; Cheng Zhanbiao, who was eager to marry his daughter to a capitalist as a concubine; Sun Xiaoquan, who was bribed and took heaps of cultural relics, calligraphy and paintings by illegal means; and Li Zhenhua, who used his power to resell liquor at a profit. They were all "old party members" and "old cadres" and all had been in the revolution for several decades. They were not totally ignorant of the theory about communism. But they just deliberately ran against it. It is certain that they have come to a disgraceful end of being cleared out of the party. The overturned cart ahead is a warning to the carts behind. All comrades who are bent on being true communists should draw lessons from their cases.

In our party's fighting course in the past 61 years, thousands and thousands of good party members and cadres have emerged. They fight for the lofty ideal of communism all their lives. Their brilliant thoughts and achievements will shine through the ages. In order to fulfill the historical mission of creating a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization put forward by the 12th party congress, we need more such good party members and cadres, and it is certain that more and more good party members and cadres will emerge.

10TH CYL CENTRAL COMMITTEE HOLDS 4TH PLENUM

Wang Zhaoguo First Secretary

[Text] Beijing, 8 Nov (XINHUA) -- The 4th Plenary Session of the 10th Central Committee of the Chinese Communist Youth League issued the following communique on 8 November 1982:

The 4th Plenary Session of the 10th CYL Central Committee was held in Beijing between 4 and 8 November 1982. Attending the session were 176 members and 85 alternate members of the CYL Central Committee. Thirty-three persons attended the session as observers.

The plenary session decided to convene the 11th CYL National Congress on 20 December this year.

At the plenary session, the CYL Central Committee Secretariat relayed the instructions of the leading comrades of the CPC Central Committee on CYL work and on how to do a good job in convening the 11th CYL National Congress. It also reported on the preparatory work for the convocation of the 11th CYL National Congress. After earnest discussions, the session examined and approved in principle the work report of the 10th CYL Central Committee to be submitted to the 11th CYL Central Committee and the "Constitution (revised draft) of the Chinese Communist Youth League." It also unanimously agreed to submit these two documents to the 11th CYL National Congress for examination and approval.

After extended deliberation and consultations, and through a secret ballot, the session added Wang Zhaoguo [3769 0340 0948] to the CYL Central Committee and elected him a member of its Standing Committee and first secretary of the Secretariat of the youth league. This election will be submitted to the coming 11th CYL National Congress for approval. Comrade Han Ying, [former first secretary of the league], has been given another job assignment by the party Central Committee as required.

Hu Qili, member of the Secretariat of the party Central Committee, delivered an important speech at the session.

Prior to the session, the Standing Committee of the CYL Central Committee held an enlarged meeting to deliberate and discuss topics for discussion at the plenary session.

The session called on the CYL organizations at all levels and all the CYL members and youths of various nationalities throughout the country to implement the guidelines laid down by the 12th CPC National Congress conscientiously, score remarkable achievmeents in doing various forms of work and greet the coming 11th CYL National Congress with actual deeds.

Hu Qili's Address

[Text] Beijing. 8 Nov (XINHUA) -- Hu Qili, secretary of the Secretariat of the CPC Central Committee, spoke at the 4th Plenary Session of the 10th CYL Central Committee on 7 November. He urged the CYL members, the CYL cadres and the broad masses of youth throughout the country to be full of confidence and work hard to accomplish excellently the historical mission assigned them by the party and the people.

Hu Qili said: The central task of the CYL is to work in accordance with the guiding principles of our struggle put forward by the 12th CPC National Congress and in cosideration of the realities of the CYL and the youth throughout the country to guide, educate, mobilize and organize the youth so that they can take part in the great struggle to create a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization and consciously have themselves tested and tempered, and that we can thus bring up millions of well-educated revolutionary successors who have ideals and moral sense and observe discipline.

Hu Qili said: The party Central Committee and the revolutionaries of the older generation show particular concern for the CYL and attach great importance to it. Let me cite a recent example. Since Comrade Hu Yaobang proposed that the 11th CYL National Congress be convened as scheduled in his conversation with the comrades of the CYL Central Committee on 7 October 1981, the CYL congress has become an important item on the daily agenda of the Central Secretariat, and the party Central Committee and the central leading comrades have repeatedly discussed it and issued relevant instructions.

Hu Qili said: To train generation after generation of revolutioanry successors is a very pressing matter. In order to develop the communist cause forever and pass it on from generation to generation in China, we must not only have worthy middle-aged successors, it is even more important to have worthy young successors. We may say that the youth of the present generation are the key to accomplishing the motherland's four modernizations and to carrying on the communist cause.

On the situation of the present generation, Hu Qili pointed out: Judging from the majority and the general tendencies, the youth of the present generation have the courage to explore, the vigor to make progress and are full of promise. At the same time, we cannot deny that they are of the generation which tasted to the full the bitter fruit of the 10 years of domestic turmoil. Therefore, the youth of the present generation must bear with and overcome the temporary difficulties in material life, cleanse their minds of pernicious influence and take makeup lessons on modern culture and sciences at the same time in order to accomplish their historical mission.

Hu Qili said: While our party is firmly pursuing the policy of opening to the outside and the policy of enlivening the domestic economy, the youth of the present generation are facing a new historical test and tempering -- how to uphold the four cardinal principles, learn foreign advanced experience in science, technology and management, constantly enhance their own communist consciousness and immunize themselves from the corruption by capitalist thinking at the same time.

Hu Qili reviewed the work of the CYL in the past 4 years.

He said: The four years since the 10th CYL National Congress happen to be the four years since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee. During that period, our party and our country have achieved a historical change in the course of setting things to rights and the CYL has followed the CPC in advance amid the historical change. The CYL has gradually become active in its work focusing on the four modernizations and has made great achievements in the campaign for "vying to be shock workers in the new Long March." It has constantly deepened the education in communist morality among the youth and the children. The CYL has particularely showed its initiative in the activities to promote civility and courtesy with "five stresses and four beauties" and thus helped in building socialist spiritual civilization and in improving the standards of social conduct. It has also gradually opened up a new prospect in improving the condition of the youth's study, life recreation and rest, in building youth's and children's centers and in building the CYL organizations and the contingent of cadres. In short, the CYL has kept pace with the process of the historical change, completed in the main its task of setting things right and paved the way and opened up broad prospects for still greater development of its work.

Hu Qili said: In affirming the achievements of CYL work, it is necessary to realize that CYL work still falls short of real life requirements. A most urgent task at present is to strengthen ideological and political work that fits in with the young people's mentality, trying to cultivate friendship with all types of young people, priming their enthusiasm with patriotism and communist ideology and pointing out to them the orientation for advancement. To accomplish this, it is necessary to be good at adapting to the youth mentality and to display youthful vigor in doing youth work. Comrade Deng Xiaoping has always stressed that CYL cadres should "discuss major issues, concentrate on their own professions." That is to say, while implementing party policies and principles in CYL work, we must also show concern and solve problems of study, physical labor, employment, love and marriage for the youths and enhance the CYL's fighting capacity and promote independent CYL activities while trying to solve their problems.

Hu Qili said: The 4th Plenary Session of the 10th CYL Central Committee is an important meeting for making all-round preparations for the 11th CYL Congress. A successful 11th CYL Congress will surely enable us to better mobilize and organize all CYL members and other young people of the nation to rally closely around the party Central Committee, to be vanguards in opening up new vistas for socialist modernization and to work hard for the realization of the general tasks in the new era as proposed at the 12th CPC Congress. The whole party, the whole army and the people of various nationalities of the whole nation have shown their great interest in this congress. Realizing their heavy responsibilities, comrades attending the plenary session have demonstrated a very high consciousness. Leading comrades of the central organs are quite satisfied with the work of the plenary session.

Hu Qili said: As a result of the 11th CYL Congress, a large number of young comrades will join the leading body of the CYL Central Committee, and a majority of comrades of the 10th CYL Central Committee will "graduate" from this big school and take up new posts. The change is a natural phenomenon and is good. It explains at least two things: first, the CYL has fulfilled its role as the party's reserve force and, second, the CYL has made progress in implementing the program of the four changes for cadres.

Hu Qili urged the CYL cadres to take a correct attitude toward their "job transfers." He said, as communists, they must take a correct attitude toward whatever jobs or work they are being transfered to. Being Communist Party members, our "entire lives are subjected to the party's arrangements," and we must obey the party's orders of job assignments. Even if for some individuals, their job arrangements may be unsuitable, they still must make strict demands on themselves and stand the tests.

We must have the firm conviction that the party's cause will grow and flourish, and that we can surely serve the interests of the people if we wholeheartedly devote ourselves to our work and the party.

Hu Qili said: All comrades sitting here today, whether they will continue to work in the CYL or be transferred to other work, must answer a difficult question: In this historical era when we are carrying forward the revolutionary cause and forging ahead into the future, what must be done in order to write our own history well and how should we fulfill the historical mission assigned us by the party and the people?

Hu Qili stressed that we should do at least three things:

First, we must have full confidence in our party's cause and in the future of our motherland. But how do we go about establishing this firm conviction? This is a question that concerns our faith and our way of thinking. Faith means a firm belief in our party, firmly believing that it is fully capable of shouldering the historical task of leading the people in carrying forward the revolutionary cause and forging ahead into the future and in opening up new vistas for socialist modernization. It is not a blind faith nor superstition but a scientific conclusion based on our revolutionary practice over the past 60 years or more and particularly since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee. This scientific belief is our foothold and foundation for building up our faith. By stressing this way of thinking, we mean that in observing and trying to grasp a situation, first, we must view it from all sides instead of from a particular angle, and secondly we must observe its development instead of focusing our attention on a particular problem. Whether or not we can quadruple our annual industrial and agricultural output in 20 years, whether or not we can fundamentally improve our party's work styles in the next 5 years, and whether or not our young people can become reliable successors to the revolutionary cause -- the answer to these questions can only be found by making an overall analysis of the situation, by studying their historical development and by comparing the domestic situation with situations abroad. Through various social phenomena we must see the essence and main trend of things, establish full confidence, follow the party's footsteps in orderly and actively fulfilling all tasks in a planned way, and propel the magnificent task of the four modernizations on a continuous course.

Second, we must display a spirit of carrying on a tenacious struggle and doing solid work. In his recent conversation with the comrades of the CYL Central Committee, a central leading comrade urged the CYL cadres to learn from the spirit of tenacious struggle displayed by the Chinese women's volleyball team. He said: "The Chinese women's volleyball team could not have been successfully trained without real efforts. One who does not display the spirit of tenacious struggle should not come (to work for the CYL)." We should regard his word as an alarm. The youth of the Qinghua University have proposed a very good slogan: "Proceed from myself now." The slogan embodies the spirit of setting strict demands on oneself and doing solid work. We surely can find nice things nearby, the light of hope in our real life will shine over us everywhere, and we will be inspired constantly by the masses' wisdom and creativeness, if we set more demands on ourselves, do hard and solid work and conduct investigations and studies by going deep into the realities of life. When we have the masses' support, we will have the strength, the ways and means and the measures and it will be easier for us to solve various problems.

Third, we must truly have the ability to undertake the four modernizations and set high standards and strict demands for ourselves to undergo a hard and thorough training in basic skills. The comrades doing CYL work should make real efforts to get near, understand and become one with the youth. They should truly know the law of youth work. The CYL cadres should scientifically learn how to do youth work well, do away with outmoded general appeals and formalistic style and methods of work and cultivate real ability to attract and guide the youth.

Hu Qili said: The CYL will have fulfilled its sacred historical duty when it accomplishes the task of uniting and educating the young generation and training and bringing up millions of revolutionary successors under the party leadership. Then, our party and the people will be at ease, and so will the revolutionaries of the older generation.

Wang Zhaoguo's Closing Address

[Text] Beijing, 8 Nov (XINHUA) -- At the closing ceremony of the 4th Plenary Session of the 10th CYL Central Committee held today, Wang Zhaoguo, first secretary of the CYL Central Committee, said: The CYL organs and cadres at all levels must work hard on the foundation that has already been built for CYL work, go all out to make the country strong, and valiantly create a new situation for doing CYL work.

Wang Zhaoguo said: To create a new situation in doing CYL work, the league's leading cadres at all levels must, first of all, be mentally prepared to dare to create a new situation, work painstakingly and diligently, press forward in the face of difficulties and courageously blaze new trails. It is necessary to display a good work style by going to basic-level units to maintain close ties with the masses and carry out work in a down-to-earth manner. Efforts must be made to strengthen investigation and study, keep abreast of new developments, do a good job in grasping typical examples, sum up experiences and strive to change, as soon as possible, the problem of CYL work failing to keep up with reality.

Wang Zhaoguo said: Working for the CYL Central Committee, I fully realize that my responsibility is extremely heavy and feel tremendous pressure. This is because the party Central Committee has shown grave concern for CYL work and pins great hope on the CYL. The broad masses of CYL members throughout the country earnestly hope that CYL work would become even more active and suited to the youths' characteristics. The CYL cadres hope that they would be able to make their contributions to the youth movement and grow and temper themselves in the course of developing this movement. The party organizations at all levels and all the people in the country demand that we do our work well in dealing with the young people and help them play an even greater role in social life and economic construction.

Our tasks are glorious and arduous. At present, we are still faced with many difficulties and problems. We need to work even harder, because we are encountering difficulties. Pressure on our young cadres is not something bad. Actually it is something good. An oil well will not produce oil without pressure, and steel will not become rolled steel without pressure. Pressure is actually a motivating force. We must courageously expose ourselves to pressure, and consciously turn pressure into a motivational force.

In his speech, Wang Zhaoguo analyzed the good foundation and conditions in doing CYL work at present. He said: I have full confidence in doing CYL work well. Just like those veteran CYL cadres, I am determined to remain loyal to the cause of the party, cherish CYL work and China's younger generation, and closely follow the steps of the party Central Committee. I am determined to study and work hard to meet the requirements set by the leading comrades at the central level for the CYL cadres, to carry forward and give full play to the good work style and good traditions of the CYL, and to make my own contributions to youth work.

Wang Zhaoguo said: Now, as the party's assistant, the CYL must thoroughly study and implement the guidelines laid down by the 12th CPC National Congress, make vigorous preparations for the convocation of the 11th CYL National Congress, and actively take the initiative in blazing new trails for CYL work.

Wang Zhaoguo Interview

[Text] Beijing, November 8 (XINHUA) -- China's young people should be encouraged to raise questions and solve them to help with the four modernisations, said Wang Zhaoguo, newly elected first secretary of the Chinese Communist Youth League, in an interview today.

The 41-year-old youth leader said he believed that China's modernisation can only be wrought through the Chinese people's own diligent labour, not by copying others, nor could it be bought with money. Young people in particular would have to be trail blazers. Their ideas would have to be tested in practice. It might be easier to go by conventions, but convention alone cannot create a new situation.

Wang Zhaoguo, who was also newly elected to the party Central Committee at the recent 12th party congress, was elected youth league secretary from numerous people recommended by grassroot levels. Both Hubei Province and the First Ministry of Machine-Building Industry under which he worked recommended Wang Zhaoguo. Opinions were widely solicited among the ranks and files before the election.

Everything in China had been changing since the end of 1978. He cited as examples the responsibility system in the rural areas and the readjustment in industry. Changes posed new problems. "That is where the young people come in," he noted; "the young people should be encouraged in their creativeness, rather than be cast in the same mould."

"I have full confidence in our young people," he stated. His faith, he explained, is founded on his association with them ever since his student days. He had been a student leader all through his middle school and college years and a youth league activist among factory workers.

He noted that China now had over one million young shock brigaders. He himself had been one. He was assigned to work at the number two motorcar plant in Hubei two years after graduation from the Harbin Engineering College in 1966, and later became vice-director of the plant which had a staff of 50,000.

In the days of the "Cultural Revolution" when the label of "revisionism" threatened all who were keen on production work, Wang Zhaoguo led young workers in the factory to do their utmost in promoting production and fought back on matters of principle.

Speaking on progress of the peasant youth in recent years, he supported the responsibility system "which had a big role to play in developing and applying technology to agriculture."

College students, he said, had sharp eyes. Some who had become sceptical later recognised that as members of society, they should help improve things by their creative and diligent work, instead of carping like a bystander. Students nowadays were keen to conduct investigations into real problems during their vacations. Seeing is believing. As a result, growing numbers of students had applied to join the Communist Party and even greater numbers were studying Marxism. "They should acquire firsthand knowledge in order to judge and propose changes," he said.

He had been an engineering student and his new work demanded wider knowledge, he said, pointing to some volumes on world history, literature and English he was reading.

"Chinese youth", he said, "want to make more friends with other young people all over the world." The youth league now has friendly exchanges with 300 youth organizations throughout the world. "We want to join hands with young people around the world to struggle for world peace and a brighter and better future," he said.

LI DESHENG ON UNDERSTANDING CONGRESS SPIRIT

[Text] Li Desheng, member of the CPC Central Committee's Political Bureau and Commander of the Shenyang PLA units, told a group of reporters from Beijing today: In order to create a new situation in army building, it is necessary to have a correct and comprehensive understanding of the spirit of the 12th party congress and prevent interference from both "left" and right.

This group of Beijing reporters consisted of 17 people from 11 news units in Beijing, and at the invitation of the PLA General Political Department, they visited a number of outposts of border guards and coastal defence forces under the Shenyang command, covering 4,000 li on their journey which started 12 October. They arrived at Shenyang on 6 November.

Li Desheng gave the reporters a warm welcome. While receiving all the reporters, he said: The Shenyang units are going in for the study of the 12th congress documents with the emphasis on understanding the essence of the documents' spirit. In order to do so, we must have a comprehensive and correct understanding of the spirit of the 12th party congress and prevent interference from both "left" and right. At present, it is still necessary to continue to eliminate "leftist" influences.

Li Desheng said: For this reason, it is necessary to understand correctly the following relationships:

1. We should understand correctly the relationship between material civilization and spiritual civilization and continue to eliminate the influence of the fallacy that "spirit decides everything" and the "prominence must be given to politics." We should clearly realize that the building of the two civilizations are mutually conditional, and each constitutes the aim of the other.

2. We should correctly understand the relationship between strengthening communist ideological education and implementing the party's current economic policies, and continue to eliminate the influence of "egalitarianism" and "large in size and collective in nature." We should overcome the erroneous idea that the introduction of the responsibility systems in production will make the realization of communism still more distant, and clearly understand that the party's economic policies are indispensable measures leading us to a communist society.

3. We should correctly understand the relationship between the cultural and ideological aspects of spiritual civilization, continue to eliminate the erroneous idea of belittling education, science and culture and discriminating against intellectuals, and clearly understand that cultural education is an important condition for our army to revolutionize, regularize and modernize itself.

Li Desheng said: So long as we comprehensively and correctly master the essence of the 12th party congress spirit, we will surely be able to lay the ideological foundations for the creation of a new situation in our socialist construction.

ZHANG TINGFA ON SELECTING, PROMOTING CADRES

[Text] Beijing, 8 Nov (XINHUA) -- According to JIEFANGJUN BAO reporter Liu Congli and XINHUA reporter Cai Shanwu: Zhang Tingfa, member of the Political Bureau of the CPC Central Committee and first secretary of the air force party committee, recently stated at a plenary session of the air force party committee that party committees at all levels must continue to eradicate the influence of "leftist" ideology. He said: Under the premise of upholding the political criteria, cadres with education at college or senior middle school levels and cadres who are professionally and technically competent.

He said: This is the key to creating a new situation of military modernization.

Zhang Tingfa said: Following the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, the air force has exerted earnest efforts to eradicate "leftist" influence, implemented the policies on intellectuals and energetically encouraged the study of science and culture. Consequently, a great improvement has been made in the situation under which many cadres were old and lacked cultural knowledge. However, there is still a big gap between what has been achieved and the requirements set by the 12th CPC National Congress. We must realize that, following our country's ecnomic, scientific and technological development, the air force's weaponry will be gradually improved. The more modernized the air force's weaponry becomes, the more it is necessary to heighten the cadres' scientific, cultural, professional and technical levels. If we do not work hard now, we will not be able to keep up with the developments in military modernization and will not be able to meet the needs in a modern warfare in the event of a war.

Zhang Tingfa stressed: The viewpoint that education is unnecessary in building a spiritual civilization is extremely wrong; and the misconception that we can manage without knowledge and education is extremely harmful. Such "leftist" influence must be further wiped out. From now on, all leading groups must pay attention to selecting and promoting those cadres whoseeducation is up to the college or senior middle school levels and cadres who are professionally and technical competent. Leading groups at all levels must pay special attention to this task of strategic significance in accordance with the requirements set by the 12th CPC National Congress.

Zhang Tingfa continued: Utilization and promotion of cadres from now on must be based on the cadres' records of formal schooling and records of academic achievements, as well as their experiences and work achievements. Those cadres who are ethically and intellectually competent and who are educated and trainable must be given further training in schools so that the cadres with college- or middle school training will become the backbone strength in the air force. For those cadres who have not been educated and trained to do what their jobs require, we must, by organizaing training units and by means of on-the-job training, improve their knowledge of political theory, professional operation, command ability and scientific and cultural knowledge. At the same time, we must, starting from the grassroots level, be strict in selecting cadres, making sure that those who are selected are qualified in terms of political thinking, professional and technical competence, education level and physical health so that we can build a good foundation for making the ranks of cadres more revolutionary, younger in average age, better educated and more professionally competent.

ULANHU ARTICLE ON BROADCASTING, TELEVISION

OW021253 Beijing Domestic Service in Mandarin 0400 GMT 30 Oct 82

[Article by Ulanhu for the ZHONGGUO GUANGBO DIANSHI [CHINA RADIO AND TELEVISION] journal: "Radio and Television Programs Should Better Serve the People of All Nationalities" -- issue number not given]

[Text] On the occasion of the 42d anniversary of the founding of our people's broadcasting service, the Ministry of Radio and Television and the State Nationalities Affairs Commission have decided to solicit articles on the unity of various nationalities throughout the country in order to promote the work among various nationalities, to bring about a new situation in this regard and to strengthen the unity of all nationalities. This is a major happy event, to which I extend my warm congratulations. I hope that this meaningful activity will be completely successful.

Ours is a unified multinational country with a large population. In addition to the Han nationality, our country has 55 minority nationalities with a total population of over 60 million distributed over more than 50 percent of the vast area of our country. With the development of socialist construction, tremendous developments have been made in our people's broadcasting service according to the needs of various nationalities over the past 42 years. There are now broadcasting and television stations at the seat of the central government as well as in various provinces, municipalities and autonomous regions. A wired broadcasting network has been set up in the countryside. The Central People's Broadcasting Station and some provincial and autonomous regional broadcasting stations have started a number of minority language programs.

The broadcasting and television services have played an important role in publicizing the party's principles and policies, promoting the unity of all nationalities, strengthening the economic relations and cultural exchanges among various nationalities, encouraging the people of various nationalities to carry out socialist construction and consolidating our national defense. Now broadcasting and television programs have increasingly become an indispensable nourishment for the minds of the people of various nationalities in their daily life.

In his report to the 12th party congress, Comrade Hu Yaobang emphatically pointed out: Unity, equality and common prosperity among the nationalities are of vital importance to the destiny of China as a multinational country.

In bringing about a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization, accelerating the economic and cultural development of the areas inhabited by minority nationalities is an important part of the efforts to achieve socialist modernization in our country.

For historical reasons, the majority of our minority nationalities live in vast border areas where transport facilities are poor and economic and cultural conditions are rather backward. The task of building a high degree of socialist material and spiritual civilization in those border areas is more arduous than that in the interior. Therefore, they need support and assistance from the state and the interior in various aspects.

As modern effective propaganda media, broadcasting and television can directly reach thousands of distant households on a timely basis. Broadcasting and television can serve the people of various nationalities faster and more extensively than other propaganda media. Therefore, better broadcasting and television services should be provided for the people of various nationalities in order to publicize the party's nationality policy, to further conduct education on the unity of all nationalities, to increase the exchange of experiences by various nationalities in undertaking the four modernizations, to promote the economic and cultural development of the areas inhabited by minority nationalities and to build a high degree of socialist material and spiritual civilization. To this end, I earnestly hope that comrades on the broadcasting and television front, inspired by the guidelines of the 12th party congress and under the leadership of the party Central Committee and party committees at various levels, will further heighten their revolutionary spirit, strengthen their ranks, improve their technology and equipment and solve as soon as possible the problem of unavailability or poor quality of broadcasting and television services in some remote areas inhabited by minority nationalities. They should make their broadcasting and television programs richer and more colorful in content in order to meet the urgent needs of minority and other nationalities throughout the country as well as the requirements of the developing situation in socialist construction in the new period. This is an important and glorious task in bringing about a new situation in the broadcasting and television services.

ZHU MUZHI TALKS TO CADRES ON CPC DOCUMENTS

[Excerpts] Beijing, 5 Nov (XINHUA) -- To create a new situation in cultural work it is necessary first to create a new situation in thinking. On this understanding, the Ministry of Culture has assembled, by groups, leading comrades at the ministry and bureau levels and of units directly under the ministry to conscientiously study documents of the 12th party congress, increase their understanding of the essence of the documents and unify their thinking on the line, principles and policies of the 12th party congress.

The Ministry of Culture adopted the method of releasing leading cadres from their regular work so that they could be the first to be trained by rotation. The first two rotational training classes have been run for leading cadres at the ministry and bureau levels and units directly under the ministry, each lasting 11 days, and more than 200 people have been trained. The minister and vice ministers personally presided over the two training classes, eating, living and studying together with the trainees. The study has produced fairly good results.

At a training class meeting, Minister of Culture Zhu Muzhi said: The party calls for efforts to create a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization. A new situation should be brought about in cultural work too, for only in this way can we make greater contributions to accomplishing the party's general task in the new historical period. For this reason our thinking cannot remain what it was in the past.

Now is not the period when the "gang of four" was just overthrown, not the period between the 3d plenary session of the 11th party Central Committee and the convocation of the 12th party congress, but a period after the 12th party congress to create a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization. Our thinking must keep abreast of the new situation and tasks, and new thinking has to come from studying the documents of the 12th party congress.

He stressed that it is necessary to achieve unity in thinking through the study and really indentify ourselves politically with the party Central Committee. He said that many comrades feel that it is difficult to work in cultural departments. If we can achieve unity in understanding and thinking, can anything be difficult to do?

According to the party Central Committee's circular, the two rotational training classes run by the Ministry of Culture are only the first stage of study, which emphasizes grasping the essence of the 12th party congress documents. The ministry leadership has decided that the leading cadres who have attended the classes should, after returning to their posts, organize and direct studies of cadres and party members in their own departments. It is necessary to spend some time to enable all comrades at each level who can take part in study to attend study classes by stages and groups. At the same time, it is necessary to earnestly conduct investigations, gather materials and prepare for attending the second stage of study so that in the course of study the comrades can really keep closely in touch with reality, solve the question of how to implement the guidelines of the 12th party congress in cultural work and lay the groundwork for creating a new situation in cultural work. The second stage of study will also be conducted in a concentrated way.

HENAN'S LIU JIE SEES PRODUCTION POTENTIAL

[Excerpts] Zhengzhou, 6 Nov (XINHUA) -- After a recent inspection of the rural areas, Liu Jie, first secretary of the Henan Provincial CPC Committee, held that Henan Province still has much potential for developing production. He expressed much confidence in implementing the guidelines of the 12th CPC National Congress and in creating a new situation of socialist construction in Henan's rural areas.

Throughout his inspection tour, Liu Jie publicized the party congress' guidelines among the cadres and masses. He also exchanged views with and listened to the opinions of the prefectural and county leaders, grassroots cadres, scientific and technological personnel, commune members and store salesclerks on how to create a new situation of socialist construction in Henan's rural areas.

When Liu Jie learned that some comrades of the Xinxiang Prefectural CPC Committee do not have much conifidence in creating a new situation, he said: They lack confidence because they do not understand what the masses are thinking and doing. They should go among the masses and see things for themselves.

Seeing the lush windbreaks in Boai Country and the dense woods along the banks of the Huang He in Yuanyang County, Liu Jie said that Henan Province has great potential in developing forestry.

Liu Jie also said that the Henan Province has a bright prospect for developing the processing industry for agricultural and sideline products. He said: Henan produces some 20 billion jin of wheat straws annually. If a quarter of them are used for paper making and the same amount for making cardboard boxes, a total output value of over 900 million yuan would be produced. However, less than 600 million jin of wheat straws are currently used by the province's over 1,000 commune-and brigade-run papermaking plants.

Since all these activities already constituted a crime, he was sentenced to 3 years' imprisonment and all his bribes were confiscated. The other six accomplices were also sentenced to imprisonment, and their bribes were confiscated.

Both the Anyang Suburban district material supply center and the (Gaozhuang) Commune material supply center of Anyang County were illegally established without tha approval of the industrial and commercial departments concerned. In establishing these two material supply centers under the pretext of helping the communes and brigades in the suburban district to realize mechanization in transportation and to develop commune- and brigade-run enterprises, their founders violated state regulations governing financial control, state regulations governing industrial and commercial administration and the regulations governing the unified distribution and administration of the first and second categories of mechanical and electrical products. By making use of personal relationships, they illegally reproduced official seals, opened bank accounts and operated the material supply centers without licenses. They actively engaged in speculation and profiteering by means of buying long and selling short, reselling goods at a profit, concluding a sale before replenishing their stock, collecting advance payments for goods, fixing different prices for a single piece of goods and so on. From January 1980 to March 1981, the two material supply centers resold 192 cars and tractors of different makes and their total turnover amounted to 15.34 million yuan. Thus they illegally made a staggering profit of at least 1.21 million yuan, including the profit they made in reselling other materials.

In these transactions, criminal (Chen Xihai) gained 52,400 yuan by practicing corruption, taking bribes, privately dividing profits and embezzling funds. He confessed his guilt before the court. Criminal (Tao Zhenshan) obtained on one occasion a so-called bonus, in fact ill-gotten profit, which totaled at least 17,000 yuan. In addition, (Tao) privately drew public funds totaling at least 9,000 yuan from other units and was in arrears with his payment for 11 years. The court considered this case a crime of corruption. In their speculation and profiteering activities, criminals (Chen) and (Tao) also offered bribes, including television sets, radio-recorders, sewing machines, cameras, bicycles, watches and so on, to a small number of state officials and even to responsible cadres of the units concerned, attempting to make them their economic supporters and political backers. Their bribes totaled at least 24,000 yuan within a short period of 1 year and 7 months.

It was under the encouragement and direct participation of some principal responsible people of the Anyang Suburban District CPC Committee and the Anyang County (Gaozhuang) Commune CPC Committee that these two material supply centers in the Anyang area promoted their speculation and profiteering activities. When holding the post of Anyang Suburban District CPC Committee secretary, (Yao Guangyu) and (Wang Shulin) supported (Chen Xihai) in his speculation and profiteering activities and thus obtained profits. Found guilty, (Yao Guangyu) was sentenced to 2 years' imprisonment and 3 years' probation; and (Wang Shulin) was sentenced to 2 years' imprisonment and 2 years' probation. (Li Fulin), former district CPC committee deputy secretary, encouraged and engaged in speculation and profiteering activities in collaboration with criminal (Chen Xihai), and thus gained profits. Found guilty, he was sentenced to 1 year in prison. (Zhao Shouzhong), former responsible person of the material supply section of the Anyang Suburgan District Industrial and Communications Department, actively engaged in speculation and profiteering activities and thus gained profits. Found guilty, he was sentenced to 3 years' imprisonment. (Zhou Cunli), former CPC committee secretary, and (Zhu Jinrong), former administrative committee deputy director of the (Gaozhuang) Commune of Anyang County, encouraged and engaged in speculation and profiteering activities in collaboration with (Tao Zhengshan). Found guilty, (Zhou Cunli) was sentenced to 1 year in prison and 2 years' probation and (Zhu Jinrong) was sentenced to 1 year in prison. Some other people, including (Li Hai), (Tao Yong) and (Qian Shihai) of the (Gaozhuang) Commune of Anyang County, were exempted from prosecution since they, although having committed minor crimes, sincerely confessed their guilt and promptly returned the money they had received as bribes. The broad masses of people applauded the verdicts given to the above 10 criminals.

Station Commentary

[Henan station commentary: "A Shocking Case and a Profound Enlightenment"]

[Text] The 10 criminals including (Chen Xihai), (Geng Zhenghua), (Tao Zhenshan), (Chen Junyi) and so on who were involved in the case of the illegal sale of cars in Anyang have been penalized by the law. They really deserve the punishment.

This important case involved more than 130 organs and plants of 15 provinces and municipalities and caused the state to suffer serious economic losses. The criminals (Chen Xihai) and (Tao Zhenshan) are merely two nobodies who stopped at nothing in doing evil. How could they have such a remarkable ability?

As Comrade Hu Yaobang pointed out in his report to the 12th CPC Congress, apart from the lawless people in our society, a handful of degenerated elements within our party, government and army who have been corroded by capitalist ideology are also engaged in criminal activities. Involved in this particular case were 97 state cadres and 43 party members, some of whom violated the discipline of the party and the government and some of whom offended the law of the state. Failing to resist the bourgeoisie's attack with sugarcoated bullets in the new historical period, these party members and cadres have become so terribly degenerate that it is really shocking and calls for deep thought.

A small leak can sink a great ship. The fall into decadence of a handful of cadres always starts from their negligence of trivial matters. This is a really profound lesson. A great deal of facts have shown that lawless people in our society, in order to secure personal gain, always try every means to cater to degenerate cadres' likes and tempt them with money and material interest. In publicizing his ideas, the criminal (Chen Xihai) said: Money can get you anywhere and food and drink are the cure-all. It is not surprising that the weak-willed people in our ranks can always be conquered by sugarcoated bullets. And once their spiritual defense line is broken, they will be completely overwhelmed.

An electric shaver or a few pots of flowers can make those who seek petty advantages ignore and forget the party's principles and the people's interests. The gift of a television set can turn some cadres blind and make them respond to every criminal plea regardless of the law and regulations of the state. From hankering after personal gain, (Geng Zhenghua), former vice president of the Henan branch of the Agricultural Bank, a veteran cadre who joined the party in 1939, degenerated into a lawless man. As a public servant, every state cadre and every party member should carry forward our fine revolutionary tradition, wholeheartedly serve the people, cherish the honor of his title, preserve his virtue and take the lead in observing discipline and abiding by the law. We must build up a strong defense line against corrosion and withstand all temptation.

As Comrade Hu Yaobang pointed out in his report to the 12th CPC Congress, we can never regard these activities merely as everyday crimes and everyday antisocial behavior. They are actually the important reflection of the class struggle under new historical conditions as our country carries out the policy of opening the door to the outside world and enlivening the economy at home. Our party members and cadres, in particular responsible cadres, must make a sober reckoning of and take a firm attitude toward this situation, correct some people's distortion of the policy of relaxing restrictions and, especially, be on guard against those criminals who deliberately undermine the party's policy and brazenly engage in speculation and profiteering activities. We must resolutely stop all illegal activities of sabotaging the socialist economy under the name of enlivening the economy and seeking profit for the collective. We must overcome bureaucracy and selfish departmentalism, conscientiously resist the corrosion of the bourgeoisie's ideology of liberalization and be on the alert against the attack of sugarcoated bullets.

From this case, we must also clearly see that in order to curb serious criminal activities from sabotaging the socialist economy, we must put the stress on investigating and handling those major economic criminal cases involving state officials and responsible cadres. In dealing blows at criminal activities in the economic field, we must strictly implement the policy, correctly carry out the principle of integration of punishment and education and seriously penalize by law a handful of state officials, high-ranking or low-ranking, senior or junior, powerful or powerless, who have engaged in severe criminal activities. We must also properly deal with those who have committed ordinary economic mistakes. However, we should differentiate between the former and the latter. For the latter, we must emphasize the role of education. Only in this way can we attain our aim by punishing one to warn a hundred, deal blows at a small bunch of criminals to educate the majority, redeem our cadres, purify the contingent of cadres and maintain the proper function of our party organs. Only in this way can we attain the goal of preventing and eliminating crimes. This is an essential principle of the socialist legal system as well as an important guarantee for upholding the socialist road. Under the leadership of the CPC Central Committee and the provincial CPC committee, we must enhance our understanding, take a firm stand and unswervingly carry through to the end the struggle of dealing blows at the serious criminal activities in the economic, political and cultural fields.

HENAN RADIO COMMENTARY ON RECENT PLA EXERCISE

HK040301 Zhengzhou Henan Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 3 Nov 82

[Station Commentary: "Like the PLA, Create a New Situation"]

[Excerpts] A recent PLA exercise was precisely held under the encouragement of the 12th party congress spirit. In order to reach their predicted aim, the commanders and fighters seriously studied the 12th party congress spirit and Comrade Mao Zedong's military thought. In light of the characteristics of modern war, they improved their training and set themselves strict goals, with the result that the unit achieved great improvements in political quality, command techniques and tactics and technology. This exercise was not only a great review of this unit's achievements in strengthening army building since the 3d plenary session of the 11th Central Committee and especially since Comrade Deng Xiaoping presided over the work of the Central Military Commission; it was also a grand oath taking for responding to the call of the 12th party congress and creating a new situation in training for preparedness against war.

To learn from the PLA is a good tradition. In learning from the PLA, we must cherish the PLA still more and further promote the work of supporting the army and giving preferential treatment to its dependents. We must also deal with our work, production and study with the lofty patriotism, outstanding technical skills and fine morality displayed by the PLA commanders and fighters. With the 12th party congress spirit as our motive force, we must work well at our posts, brace our spirits, forge ahead and unswervingly strive for still greater achievements and be full of confidence in creating a new situation in socialist modernization.

HUNAN TRIES, SENTENCES JIANG QING FOLLOWERS

HK080329 Changsha Hunan Provincial Service in Mandarin 2310 GMT 7 Nov 82

[Text] According to HUNAN RIBAO, the Changsha Municipal Intermediate People's Court recently held a public trial, according to law, of the main Hunan criminal followers of the Jiang Qing counterrevolutionary clique, Tang Zhongfu, Hu Yong, Ye Weidong and (Zhang Hou). Tang Zhongfu was sentenced to 10 years imprisonment and deprived of political rights for 3 years; Hu Yong was sentenced to 15 years' imprisonment and deprived of political rights for 3 years; Ye Weidong was sentenced to 13 years' imprisonment and deprived of political rights for 3 years; and (Zhang Hou) was sentenced to 8 years' imprisonment and deprived of political rights for 2 years.

After the special tribunal of the Supreme People's Court had delivered its judgment on the 10 main culprits in the case of the Lin Biao and Jiang Qing counterrevolutionary cliques, the Hunan Provincial and Changsha Municipal Public Security Departments organized personnel specifically to investigate and prepare the case against the chief criminals of the Jiang Qing counterrevolutionary clique in Hunan, Tang Zhoungfu, Yu Yong, Ye Weidong and (Zhang Hou). The evidence was then sent to the provincial and municipal people's procuratorates for examination. The procuratorates determined that the facts of the crimes of the four main criminals was clear and the evidence against them ironclad and ample and that they should face criminal charges according to law. Prosecution proceedings were then sent to the provincial higher people's court and municipal intermediate people's court. The provincial higher people's court handed over the accused Tang Zhongfu, Hu Yong and Ye Weidong to be dealt with by the municipal intermediate people's court, which also accepted the municipal procuratorate's prosecution of the accused (Zhang Hou). The court organized 4 collegiate benches and held 17 public hearings. The four criminals were publicly tried by the different collegiate benches.

During the cross-examinations, the collegiate benches produced volumes of written and material evidence and listened to evidence of witnesses concerned. A number of victims and dependents of victims also gave evidence in prosecution.

Volumes of evidence showed: Tang Zhongfu, Hu Yong, Ye Weidong and (Zhang Hou) actively followed the Jiang Qing counterrevolutionary clique and committed serious crimes in plotting to overthrow the government and usurp party and government leadership in Hunan. They had violated criminal law and were given the above-mentioned sentences.

However, the accused Hu Yong and Ye Weidong refused to accept the sentences and appealed to the provincial higher people's court. The provincial higher people's court carried out an all-round investigation of the facts and the application of law in the cases and the sentences. The court held: The facts of the crimes and determined are clear, the evidence is certain, the verdict accurate and the sentences appropriate. The legal procedures have been followed. The court rejected the appeal and upheld the original judgment.

The accused Tang Zhongfu appealed on the issue of whether the time he had spent laboring under the supervision of the masses was counted in his sentence. The provincial higher people's court rejected this appeal.

The written judgment of the municipal intermediate people's court and the written ruling of the provincial higher people's court expound in detail on how the accused Tang Zhongfu, Hu Yong, Ye Weidong and (Zhang Hou) seized the chance of the 10 years' turmoil of the Great Cultural Revolution to actively follow the Jiang Qing counterrevolutionary clique, create counterrevolutionary public opinion, lay false charges against leading party, government and army cadres in the province, plot to usurp party and government leadership in the province and attempt in vain to overthrow the regime of the people's democratic dictatorship and the socialist system.

After their arrest, the accused Tang Zhongfu and (Zhang Hou) confessed their crimes and showed signs of repentance. However, the accused Hu Yong and Ye Weidong refused to admit their crimes in the face of ironclad evidence. The provincial and municipal people's court sentenced the accused according to the facts, nature and seriousness of their crimes, the degree of harm they did to society and their attitude in admitting their crimes.

After this news became known, the masses happily applauded and expressed resolute support for the stern court sentences. The 8 November HUNAN RIBAO carries a commentator's article on the affair, entitled "The People's Victory, the Triumph of the Legal System."

YUNNAN RADIO RELATES CASE OF LIU YINNONG

HK010331 Kunming Yunnan Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 31 Oct 82

[Excerpts] The shocking so-called case of the special agent Zhao Jianmin, concocted by Kang Sheng, Huang Zhaoqi and Liu Yinnong, was one of the great crimes committed by Liu Yinnong. They vigorously grabbed so-called "Zhao Jianmin and his ilk," thus stirring up sinister winds everywhere and fabricating a large number of miscarriages of justice, 13,162 in Kunming alone. Of these, 1,743 people were persecuted to death and 9,661 were crippled through beating. Comrade Zhao Jianmin was imprisoned for as long as 8 years.

There is no numbering the towering crimes committed by the Liu Yinnong. The court investigation showed that during the 10 years of turmoil, Liu Yinnong consistently followed the Lin Biao and Jiang Qing counterrevolutionary cliques and engaged in conspiratorial activities to usurp party and state power. Liu Yinnong did whatever his masters said. A henchman of the Jiang Qing counterrevolutionary clique in Qinghua University incited him, saying: We must seize power for the second time from those in the party who are still following the capitalist road. We must bring about qualitative change and a flying leap in the leadership groups at all levels, from the central down to the local authorities. Liu Yinnong also wildly clamored that, from the central to the local levels, the leading party, government and army cadres were the most reactionary bunch and that violence must be used against the bourgeoisie in the party.

In 1974 and 1976, when the Jiang Qing counterrevolutionary clique speeded up their pace of usurping party and state power, Liu Yinnong, Huang Zhaoqi and company also stepped up their power-seizing conspiracies in Yunnan. They organized a factional secret command organ headed by Huang Zhaoqi and Liu Yinnong, created counterrevolutionary public opinion in a big way and viciously attacked Comrade Deng Xiaoping. Liu Yinnong slandered Comrade Wang Bicheng as the general representative of reversal of verdicts in Yunnan and the vanguard of the restoration forces. He attacked the provincial and municipal CPC committee leaders as a returning legion and restorationist fanatics, openly proposed that the provincial and municipal CPC committees be reorganized, shouted that the leadership groups of many party committees must be paralyzed, and instituted a principle of "promoting, supplementing, admitting and transferring," by which he supplemented leadership groups at all levels with so-called "new-born forces."

Apart from this, they also openly clamored for "breaking open the jails to find the leftists," stormed the organs of dictatorship and forced the provincial and municipal CPC committees to release detained criminals.

After the Jiang Qing counterrevolutionary clique had been smashed, Liu Yinnong partnered Huang Zhaoqi and others in plotting an armed rebellion in a vain attempt to force a final trial of strength with the people.

The court investigated these serious crimes of Liu Yinnong and others. The presiding judge, (Li Shanghua), asked: Liu Yinnong, in October 1976 when you heard that the Jiang Qing counterrevolutionary clique had been smashed, how did you go about plotting an armed rebellion? Liu Yinnong replied: On the evening of 13 October I, Huang Zhaoqi and others gathered at my home to analyze the situation. We held that if matters really went so far, we should go up to the mountains to fight a guerrilla war. The rebels are strong in Yunnan, which is also a good place for guerrillas

Let us see how Liu Yinnong and Huang Zhaoqi made their plans. The time: The evening of 13 October 1976; the place: Liu Yinnong's bedroom; those present: Huang Zhaoqi, Liu Yinnong, (Tu Xiaolei), (Xi Baoxing) and(Zhang Kuilin). According to Liu Yinnong's testimony, they learned that evening that the Jiang Qing counterrevolutionary clique had been grabbed. This news came like a clap of thunder out of a clear sky. They began busily plotting armed rebellion. Huang Zhaoqi, the commander of the Lin Biao and Jiang Qing counterrevolutionary cliques' conspiratorial activities in Yunnan, incited his confederates to make full ideological preparations and undergo severe trials since they might be arrested or jailed. He viciously attacked the Central Committee's smashing of the Jiang Qing counterrevolutionary clique as a rightist coup. Huang Zhaoqi and company plotted a counterrevolutionary armed rebellion.

The court trial proved that after making plans, Liu Yinnong, Huang Zhaoqi and company had decided to make contact with Shanghai; the moment there was action in Shanghai they would muster their forces for action themselves. The trial also proved that in plotting their armed rebellion, Liu Yinnong, Huang Zhaoqi and company had made plans for manpower and material, for cooperation with PLA units, for finding someone to play the role of Tai E, and for sources of weapons. They had chosen bases, made transport preparations, set up liaison with certain provincial and municipal units and made ideological, organizational and material preparations. They engaged in numerous criminal activities.

Liu Yinnong admitted his crimes in court. He said: Today I stand on trial in the dock; it is very proper that this should be done.

Bad are the consequences of evil. The course of history pushed Liu Yinnong into the people's dock.

PRC PILOT DEFECTOR MEETS FOREIGN REPORTERS

OW041419 Taipei CNA in English 1358 GMT 4 Nov 82

[Text] Taipei, Nov 4 (CNA) -- The talks between Red China and the Soviet Union will not produce any substantial results because both Peiping and Moscow are only engaged in struggle for power and leadership in the communist bloc as well as the Third World, freedom-seeker pilot Wu Jung-ken said Thursday.

In a meeting with foreign correspondents in Taipei, Wu said the conflict between Peiping and Moscow is like "dog bites dog," and that the two communist powers are only interested in gaining more spheres of influence for themselves.

"The aim of Red China's rapprochement with the United States is to isolate Taiwan, and the Peiping regime is attempting to use the United States as a stepping stone to attain its purpose of aggression against the Free World," he said.

Wu called on the Free World not to entertain any hope of appeasing Red China because the Peiping regime can never change its aim of communizing the free nations.

On the other hand, Wu praised the United States for its high ideals of freedom and democracy, adding that America can serve as a shining example for other peoples of the world to emulate in their efforts toward modernization and economic development.

"The people on the China mainland admire the achievements made by the American people in the fields of science, technology and high standard of living," Wu added.

He also gave an analysis of the war between Red China and Vietnam which broke out in 1979.

In appearance, Red China may seem to have won the war, but actually it had lost a lot of equipment and manpower and had to withdraw its forces quietly without gaining anything substantive, he noted.

Notes Corruption in PRC

[Text] Taipei, Nov. 4 (CNA) -- Corruption among the high ranking cadres of the Chinese Communist regime is widespread and taken for granted, freedom fighter Wu Jung-ken said Wednesday.

Talking to reporters at the Broadcasting Corporation of China yesterday, Wu cited the case of an "air force commander," Chang Ting-fa. Wu recalled the time Chang visited the unit to which Wu was assigned for an inspection tour. The biggest part of the time Chang was there, the men were scrambling about the countryside in search of delicacies such as fresh turtle, dog meat and shrimp. After the inspection, Chang published an article saying that cadres should not receive special treatment while on inspection tours. "An egg should be sufficient fare," he said in the article.

But what really disgruntled the men in the unit, Wu said, was that everyone knew that the son of "Deputy Commander" Ho Ting-yi was using air force planes to run smuggling trips from Canton.

According to Wu, similar publicly known cases would be too many to mention.

The recently escaped defector from the Chinese mainland also said that the military under the communist regime is in deplorable shape. Suffering from low morale and shabby equipment, it is not uncommon for military units to refuse to obey transfer orders. With low pay and no security or pensions to speak of, Wu said, morale is at rock bottom and a general disturbance could flare up at anytime.

PRC Air Force 'Backward'

[Text] Taipei, Nov. 5 (CNA) -- The people in mainland China have lost faith in the Peiping regime, and they are living a life without hope and counting only day by day, freedom-seeker pilot Wu Jung-ken told the foreign press here Thursday.

"For the Chinese people living under the Peiping regime, to do or not to do work is the same because they see no future for themselves. This is the prevailing attitude among the compatriots on the mainland" he said.

Many people have lost the traditional virtues of diligence and thrift, and they even spend what they have earned on anything, Wu said. In comparison, he said the Republic of China is a nation of freedom, democracy and prosperity. "That's why many people there are aspiring to come to seek freedom in Taiwan."

Wu continued, "After attaining the aim of gaining freedom here, I will work for the cause of anti-communism and mainland recovery."

Turning to the subject of four modernizations on the mainland, Wu said that the Peiping regime lacks qualified personnel, capital and technology, and that it is hopeless for the Chinese Communists to try to achieve their aim of modernization within this century.

Wu also talked about the backwardness of the Red Chinese Air Force, adding the pilots are spending more time in studying politics than in learning how to fly the jet fighters. "Many of the air force planes are old and have cracks which are repaired only with tapes due to lack of spare parts," he said.

Commissioned Air Force Major

[Text] Taipei, Nov 8 (CNA) -- Gen Hau Pei-tsun, chief of the General Staff, today called on Chinese Communist pilots to follow the example of Wu Jung-ken to fly to freedom. "This is the fastest and most decisive act to fight communism without incurring bloodshed," said the general.

Hau also urged all military personnel in Red China to join "the great column of the three principles of the people" by taking actions against the communist regime.

The general made the appeal while presiding over a ceremony marking the commissioning of Wu as a major in the Chinese Air Force and presentation of 5,000 taels of gold worth U.S. dollars 2.75 million plus the military medal Kan Cheng (Fortress) in recognition of his daring act.

Noting that the 25-year-old former MIG-19 pilot had declared he did not come here for material reward, General Hau said the young man's dashing to freedom is worth far more than several thousand taels of gold in its spiritual value.

Wu's flight to freedom, he said, proved once again the failure and bankruptcy of the communist system and the general awakening of the young generation in mainland China.

General Hau also praised Wu for his courage and his intelligence he displayed during his preparation for his defection.

Appearing in the air force uniform wearing his new rank, Wu formally renounced communism and announced his participation in the ROC Air Force. In an oath administered by General Hau, Wu vowed to destroy the Chinese Communist regime so as to achieve national reunification under the banner of the three principles of the people.

FURTHER REPORTS ON SECURITY COOPERATION CONFERENCE

U.S. Policy Criticized

Taipei, 2 Nov (CNA) -- An expert on China mainland affairs said Tuesday the United States has gained nothing from its policy of associating with Red China to constrain the Soviet Union.

Speaking at the Conference on Security Cooperation in the Western Pacific, Gen Chang Shih-chi said: "Washington's antagonism to the Soviet Union is still the same. The partial superiority it seeks in its anti-Soviet drive has not increased even with Peiping's joining the anti-Soviet camp."

Instead, he said, the Chinese Communists, with higher prestige created by their "Alliance with the U.S.," have made prominent their position as leader of the Third World, and their growing influence becomes a new stumbling block to the U.S. in handling international affairs.

Gen. Chang, convener of the Mainland China Affairs Study Section under the Society for Strategic Studies, also said that the Chinese Communists are apparently shifting from individual leadership to collective leadership.

But he said many power-holding leaders, such as Yen Chien-ying, Li Hsien-nien, Chen Yun, and Teng Hsiao-ping, are all men of advanced age, and anyone's death will influence the current balance of power, especially in the case of Teng.

Prof. Hans Indorf of the U.S. and South Korean National Assemblyman Chong Won-min presented their comments on Chang's report. In another topic discussion session, the participants from 13 countries heard reports on the Soviet challenge in east Asia.

Prof. Robert Horn from California State University in the U.S. analyzed Moscow's response to the changing conditions in east Asia and evaluated the factors blocking the establishment of Soviet influence in east Asia.

Pi Ying-hsien, research fellow at the Institute of International Relations, said in his paper that to dominate east Asia is a traditional goal of Russia, and its principal strategic goal in the region is to expel American influence out of the area.

In order to realize this strategic goal, he said, Moscow has to realize a series of preliminary goals: to neutralize Red China, to split the U.S.-Japanese alliance relationship, to curb enlargement of Japanese defenses, to unify the Korean Peninsula under communist rule, to win over Southeast Asian countries, and to prevent any anti-Soviet organizations or bloc from emerging.

This session was chaired by Michael O'Connor (Australia). The discussants were Kouzaburo Kawazu (Japan), Dr. Sin Hui-sok (South Korea), and Lim Joo Jock (Singapore).

In the afternoon topic discussion session, American defense analysts Donald Cotter and Dr. N.F. Wikner presented their reports on new weaponry development in Asia.

The three-day conference will conclude Wednesday afternoon following two more topic discussion sessions and special reports by Gen. Wego Chiang and Dr. Craig Chi-yen Wu. Premier Sun Yun-hsuan is scheduled to deliver a speech at the closing ceremony.

Sun Addresses Closing Session

[Text] Taipei, Nov 3 (CNA) -- Premier Sun Yun-hsuan yesterday called on the Free World to cooperate in establishing a collective security system against communist aggressors. "The Republic of China will do its best for this cause," the premier declared at the closing ceremony of this Conference on Security Cooperation in the Western Pacific.

"Collective security is not an empty dream. It has worked, and it can be made to work again," he said, adding that if collective security has a somewhat checkered history, the fault is always the insufficiency of cooperation. "Vietnam was lost because the collective effort was incomplete," he pointed out.

The prerequisite for collective security, the premier said, is an agreement that aggression is aggression wherever it is found and that we must pool our resources to prevent or combat it.

This does not mean that we have to agree with each other on each small point of our foreign policies. The indispensable requirement is cooperation against the aggressors."

Premier Sun said: "We have the NATO collective effort in Europe, and the ASEAN states have also banded together... But in Northeast Asia, we have no security arrangement among Japan, the Republic of Korea, and the Republic of China, and, therefore, East Asia is in greater danger than Europe."

"The aggressors are not content with a little territorial nibbling. They want to gobble up everything in sight."

He said, "If we are to be free, it will have to be in a world of freedom for all. We must help each other... Those who are ready to fight together may not fight at all," adding. [sentence as received]

"Not to make up our minds now is to risk piecemeal destruction. The communists will pick us off one by one."

The conference, which opened at the Taipei Armed Forces Heroes House last Monday, was attended by some 170 scholars and experts from 14 countries.

Dr. Gerald Steibel, director of national security studies, the National Strategy Information Center, U.S.A., also delivered a speech at the closing ceremony. Japanese upper house member Masao Horie read a closing message on behalf of Shin Kanemaru, former director general of the Japan Defense Agency and director of the Japanese Center of Strategic Studies.

Dignitaries invited to the closing ceremony included Kuomintang secretary-general Tsiang Yien-si; Defense Minister Soong Chang-chih; and James Lilley, director of the Taipei office of the American Institute in Taiwan.

In the past few days, the participants exchanged views on security problems and perspectives in Northeast and Southeast Asia, the Soviet challenge in East Asia, United States security policy in East Asia, and policy proposals for security cooperation in the Pacific basin.

In his report to the conference yesterday, Prof. Ting Chung-chiang proposed the establishment of organizations for the promotion of economic cooperation and cultural interchange in the Pacific basin.

Other scholars who presented their papers Wednesday included Jacqueline Davis (U.S.A.), Rosendo Cruz (the Philippines), Ryohei Ohga (Japan), Harry Gelber (Australia), Chandran Mohandas Jeshurun (Malaysia), Gen. Wego Chiang (ROC), and Craig Chi-yen Wu (ROC). The last two topic discussion sessions were chaired respectively by Chandran Mohandas Jeshurun (Malaysia) and Jun Tsunmda (Japan).

Wednesday evening, Defense Minister Sung Chang-chih gave a dinner in honor of all delegates to the conference which was sponsored by the Society for Strategic Studies (ROC) and the National Strategy Information Center (U.S.A.) with the assistance of the Japanese Center for Strategic Studies (JAPAN), the Heritage Foundation (U.S.A.), and the Institute for Foreign Policy Analysis (U.S.A.)

The delegates will make courtesy calls on government leaders and visit this nation's cultural and economic establishments starting today.

FOREIGN MINISTER VIEWS U.S. PUBLIC OPINION

[Text] Taipei, Nov. 4 (CNA) -- American people have discerned and become disgusted with the Peiping regime's blackmailing tactics of negotiations, Foreign Minister Chu Fu-sung said Wednesday.

Speaking at the Overseas Chinese Affairs Committee of the Legislative Yuan, Chu said that the public opinion in the U.S. has become more sympathetic to the Republic of China because American people have seen through the ugly face of the Peiping regime in trying to blackmail the U.S. during negotiation of the "Washington-Peiping joint communique" signed on Aug. 17.

He said that foreign affairs cannot be separated from the overseas Chinese affairs because overseas Chinese can serve as a bridge helping the government to promote cooperation and friendship with other nations.

"The new generations of overseas Chinese have become more assimilated than ever into the foreign communities of their residence, and they have also been able to make great contributions to the development of foreign nations," he pointed out.

Chu also analyzed the current international situation in various areas of the world to the legislators.

DEFENSE MINISTER DISCUSSES MILITARY PREPAREDNESS

[Text] Taipei, 27 Oct (CHUN WEN SHE) [MILITARY NEWS AGENCY] -- In his report on military affairs delivered to the National Defense Committee at the 70th meeting of the Legislative Yuan this morning, National Defense Minister Sung Chang-chih pointed out: The key points regarding the construction of national defense are aimed at building an independent national defense system; bringing up scientific and technical personnel in a positive manner: speeding up the research, production and development of precision weapons; building a strong, all-round national defense power; strengthening ideological education among the officers and men in the country's armed forces in a positive manner in order to counter the current communist bandits' united front conspiracies; cultivating confidence among the officers and men that tyranny is bound to collapse and that benevolence is invincible in order to encourage them to intensify their study of combat techniques and raise their combat capabilities; and performing the work of planning the mobilization of reservists so as to be ready at all times to counterattack the communist bandits' challenge and safeguard the security of Taiwan, Penghu, Kinmen and Matsu, the bases of reconstruction.

Minister Sung stressed: To deal with the repercussions of the international current of appeasement, the country's armed forces, bearing the mission of safeguarding the survival of the country and the people, began many years ago to adopt positive measures on the basis of independence, such as dispersing their procurement areas and carrying out self-reliant research and production of weapons and equipment in order to have adequate sources of supplies and continuously raise their combat capabilities. At the same time, they have spared no effort to arrange and establish various measures of combat readiness and have made preparations for guaranteeing victory in all possible changes of world situation in the future.

SEMINAR VIEWS U.S. ELECTIONS, FOREIGN POLICY

[Text] Taipei, Nov. 5 (CNA) -- A group of experts and scholars predicted Thursday that there will be little change in the Reagan administration's foreign policy, especially its China policy, in the next two years.

They expected the U.S. Government to follow its present course and there will be no major shift in its policy towards the Republic of China. However, the scholars and experts also expressed their concerns over Chinese Communist subterfuge to force the United States to revise the Taiwan Relations Act.

Commenting on the Democratic Party gains in the U.S. mid-term elections, Henry Mao, professor of Tamkang University, noted that it is normal for the ruling party to lose in the mid-term elections with very few exceptions. For the Republican Party, Mao said, the result is better than expected.

The Republican victories in the Senate would assure that the Reagan administration's foreign policy in the next two years will remain intact, Mao said. On the other hand, the Republican set backs in the U.S. House of Representatives was a signal that the Reagan administration's conservative economic policy has not been effective in the short run and has disappointed the voters.

Chang Teh-kuang, professor of political science at Ball State University, Indiana, pointed out that judging from the outcome of the elections, President Reagan will have a very good chance to win should he run for reelection.

Commenting on the U.S. foreign policy, Chang predicted that the United States will be politically tough but economically soft on the Soviet Union. As for U.S. relations with the Republic of China, Chang said there will be no change on the surface but will be improved substantively.

James Hsiung, professor of politics of New York University in New York City, predicted the United States will continue to play the Communist China card, will limit increase in the U.S. defense budget, and will help Latin American countries to improve their social and economic situation and to curb the expansion of communism.

Cheng Ming, professor of Tamkang University, urged the government and the people of this country to keep an eye on the Chinese Communist attempt to further pressure the U.S. Government towards revising the Taiwan Relations Act.

The experts and scholars made the remarks at a symposium on the U.S. mid-term elections and American politics at Tamkang University in the afternoon. The meeting was presided over by Clement C.P. Chang, president of the university.

CHUNG YANG JIH PAO DENOUNCES PEACE TALK IDEA

[Editorial: "The Idea of Holding 'Peace Talks' With the Bandits Runs Counter to the Constitution and National Policy"]

[Excerpts] The Legislative Yuan's general inquiry session ended successfully the day after yesterday. During the inquiry session, most legislators raised specific and constructive issues for the government to answer and implement.

But, regrettably, Legislator Fei Hsi-ping again put forward his so-called "three principles for peace talks" and a "six-point formula for reunification" during the session. The people earlier censured Legislator Fei for raising this kind of question in violation of the constitution and national policy by taking advantage of the Legislative Yuan's inquiry session.

In answer to Legislator Fei's inquiries the day before yesterday, Premier Sun Yun-hsuan of the Executive Yuan said sternly: "Any talk about holding peace talks with the Chinese Communist regime at any time and in any place is in violation of the constitution and overall national policy." Premier Sun's conclusion in such a firm tone deserves a round of applause from the people. As a legislator, Fei should naturally realize the seriousness of the question of violating the constitution and understand the people's concern.

The so-called "peace talks" issue is actually one of the "united front" tactics of the Communist Party. Our late President Chiang once reminded us: "The essence of united front work is a 'political murder project,' constructed precisely by the communist bandits on the needs of struggle, utilizing enemies from all strata to strike down their principal foes and then eliminating the enemies who became their allies."

This indeed is a very sharp remark. We believe that while Legislator Fei might not have personally experienced or witnessed the "united front" tactics used by the communist bandits on the Kuomintang on numerous occasions and the many "peace talks"held between the communist bandits and the government before we left the mainland, he must have read about them in the newspapers and heard about them from radio broadcasts when he was on the mainland.

Why is he so infatuated with the idea of holding "peace talks" and so sure of success that he keeps putting forward the so-called "three principles" and the "six-point formula"? If this is for the purpose of fooling ourselves, then we will become the laughing stock of the communist bandit spies. If it is intended to fool others, then, except for a three-year-old child, who would dare to admit that he has the ability to "talk peace" with the communists?

The so-called "nine-point principle for realizing peaceful reunification" issued by bandit Yeh Chien-ying last year on the eve of the bogus "national day" in his capacity as "NPC chairman," was a trick to deceive the people of the world at a time when the internal struggle of the Chinese Communist circles was at a most serious juncture. Is Legislator Fei putting forward the "three principles" and the "six-point formula" to echo "Yeh's nine points," presented by bandit Yeh Chien-ying from across the sea? If this is practicing demagogy to find favor with the people, how can Legislator Fei's "three principles" and "six-point formula" find any favor if the army and people in this bastion for mainland recovery snubbed and ignored "Yeh's nine points"? Furthermore, to win favor from whom?

Premier Sun reminded us: We should not forget the many similar views expressed by so-called "democratic personages" before the fall of the mainland. We believe that those who learned a tragic lesson on the mainland will never forget the clamoring of Lo Lung-chi, Li Pu-tung and the like at the Legislative Yuan at that time. Nor should they forget the lesson of Lo and Liu who were later purged and eliminated under Communist Party rule. While it is conceivable for the inexperienced young generation of today not to know about these lessons, for a man of experience like Legislator Fei to forget the lessons of the past 30 years is quite incomprehensible.

Premier Sun said: "The communist bandits have incessantly schemed to attack, occupy and disintegrate Taiwan. We must further fortify our confidence, strengthen our unity and avoid taking the same disastrous road that led to the fall of the mainland. Therefore, any talk about holding peace talks with the Chinese Communist regime and establishing relations with the communists at this time is in violation of the constitution and overall national policy. This is tantamount to a suggestion that we must surrender to the communists. We should never be fooled."

Premier Sun has made his point clearly and firmly. We hope that our people at home and overseas will cast away the idea of holding "peace talks." We must abide by the constitution and adhere to national policy. Those who want to spread the capitulationist fallacies for "peace talks" are deliberately seeking to harm us and we should not be taken in!

PRC TO CONSIDER CUTS IN U.S. COTTON IMPORTS

HK090218 Hong Kong SOUTH CHINA MORNING POST in English 9 Nov 82 BUSINESS NEWS p 1

[By Julie Auyeung: "U.S. Moves May Prompt Peking Countermove"]

[Text] China will consider cutting its imports of U.S. cotton if America proceeds with threats unilaterally to quadruple the number of categories of exports it restricts.

The United States has proposed to increase the restricted list from eight items to 33. Most of the new ones are man-made fibre products, whereas items already restricted are cotton goods.

An official of the China National Textile Import and Export Corp. (Chinatex), Mr Liu Shuixing, called the move unreasonable, particularly as the level the U.S. would then allow the Chinese is much less than what it is now exporting.

Mr Liu Shuixing was also speaking in his capacity as liaison officer for the textile committee of the American Chamber of Commerce. Its delegation was in Canton last week for a seminar in which 80 Chinese representatives from the textile industry participated.

China's textile industry wants to increase its share of the U.S. market, Mr Liu Shuixing said. It was one of the largest customers for U.S. textiles and the U.S. Government should therefore cooperate in allowing more Chinese textile imports.

The managing director of Jenston International (Hong Kong) Ltd, Mr Liu Yuensung, said China can move up market and manufacture items with no quotas, such as silk, linen and ramie (jute) products during such difficult periods when market expansion is limited by quotas.

He observed that China had made improvements in its industry and was aware of the problems still to be solved, even if no instant solutions were readily apparent.

Problems identified by the Chinese include poor domestic transport links, which could lead to delayed delivery; long lead times, and concepts of fashion.

The chairman of Amcham's textile committee, Mr Carmer Robinson, said the main interests demonstrated by the Chinese at the seminar were in the areas of fashion, garment merchandising and quality control.

"In the past two seminars, the Chinatex delegates just came and listened. This year, a lively discussion followed the presentations. This exchange of ideas made the seminar extremely successful for both sides.

"We see this as a sign of the growing sophistication of the textile industry in China. In addition they understand that in order to increase their share of the U.S. market, they need to solve problems such as quality control, documentation, shading and sizing of garments and delivery schedules," Mr Robinson added.

The co-ordinator of the seminar, Mr Ira Kaye, observed that the Chinese delegates were more aware of fashion and its importance in the marketplace than they had been previously.

DETENTION OF HONG KONG CITIZEN BY PRC CONFIRMED

HK080056 Hong Kong SOUTH CHINA MORNING POST in English 8 Nov 82 p 1

[Text] The Hong Kong Government has confirmed that China has detained a Hong Kong citizen and regarded him as a national of the country.

In a letter to friends of Lau Sanching (29), a local activist who disappeared during his trip to Canton last Christmas, the secretary for security, Mr Louis Davies, said that the British Embassy in Peking had sought information on his whereabouts.

The Chinese authorities said Mr Lau had been "detained for unlawful deed," the letter said.

Also, the Chinese authorities stated that Mr Lau is regarded by them as a national of the People's Republic of China since he travelled to China on a "compatriots certificate" -- a re-entry permit issued to residents of Hong Kong and Macao by the Chinese Government -- the letter added.

Mr Chan Cheong, a friend of Mr Lau, said the Hong Kong Government should clarify its stand on the matter.

China's reply suggested that the Hong Kong Government has no "rights" in treating the case.

"It means other compatriots certificate-holders may be detained like Mr Lau when they are travelling in China and receive no political protection from the Hong Kong Government," Mr Chan said.

He reiterated the responsibility of the Hong Kong Government in the matter as Mr Lau is a Hong Kong-born legal citizen.

He said that friends of Mr Lau would expand the signature campaign to the public and seek more support from social organisations.

From April till now, they have collected 300 signatures among friends of Mr Lau, Mr Chan said.

HSIN WAN PAO ON CHINA'S RECOVERY OF HONG KONG

HK060857 Hong Kong HSIN WAN PAO in Chinese 6 Nov 82 p 1

["New Talk" column: "The Social System in Hong Kong and Macao Will Not Be Changed"]

[Text] The Beijing RENMIN RIBAO published an editorial today dealing with the question of how to appraise and handle the class struggle in the current stage correctly. The editorial mentions the question of Hong Kong and Macao, a small portion of which was quoted by ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE. There were three main points:

1. China will definitely recover sovereignty over Hong Kong and Macao.

2. The social systems of Hong Kong and Macao will not be changed after China has recovered them.

3. The social system of Taiwan will not be changed either after it has been reunified with the mainland.

The RENMIN RIBAO editorial confirms what was said earlier by NPC Standing Committee Vice Chairman Xi Zhongxun. He dwelt on this question in his talk with the visiting Hong Kong Trade Development Council delegation.

"The systems will all remain unchanged." This news has won quite a favorable reaction in Hong Kong. It has helped to calm people's minds and pierce through irresponsible rumors. Hence it has also helped to revive the faltering and disturbed economy.

Certain people often say that when dealing with the question of Hong Kong's future, it is essential to consider the wishes of Hong Kong's inhabitants and look after their interests. That is quite right. However, on the other hand, similar importance should also be attached to the wishes and interests of the 1 billion people of China, the sovereign power.

The wishes of the 1 billion and the 5 million can be identical, and there may also be some differences of opinion. Of course it would be ideal if they were identical. If there are some differences of opinion, then they will need to be harmonized, but in the end the 1 billion cannot submit to the 5 million!

The words of Xi Zhongxun and the passage in the RENMIN RIBAO editorial reflect the wishes of the 1 billion. A very few of the 5 million inhabitants of Hong Kong are opposed to China recovering sovereignty, thus going against the wishes of the 1 billion. This cannot be done.

The RENMIN RIBAO editorial goes a bit further than Xi Zhongxun. This the first mention of Macao. The Macao issue, it says, will be handled in the same way as Hong Kong. Likewise, after the reunification of Taiwan with the mainland, the social system in Hong Kong and Macao will remain unchanged.

It is very difficult to fix a timetable for the return of Taiwan to the motherland's embrace, and determine if this will be before or after the solution of the Hong Kong and Macao issue. Nevertheless, the principles and policies for the return of Taiwan to the motherland have already been set out with extreme clarity in the nine-point scheme put forward by Ye Jianying, points three and four of which state that Taiwan can be a special administrative region enjoying a high degree of autonomy. Taiwan's current social and economic systems will not be changed, nor will its way of life, nor will its economic and cultural relations with foreign countries.

Hong Kong, Macao and Taiwan each has its own historical background and special circumstances, and not everything can be done in an identical way. However, the principle that "the social system will not be changed" applies to all of them.

HONG KONG PAPER REVIEWS PLA COMMAND CHANGES

HK060356 Hong Kong SOUTH CHINA MORNING POST in English 6 Nov 82 p 5

[By foreign affairs editor David Chen]

[Text] A major reorganisation of the military commands in China's 4.2 million People's Liberation Army is well underway with the dismissal, retirement and transfer of no fewer than 170 officers so far, according to reliable sources.

Already three top commands -- in the Guangzhou and Nanjing Regions -- have changed hands and by the close of the reorganisation no fewer than six, and possibly as many as eight of the 11 regions, will see changes in the top command.

Guangzhou's regional commander, aging General Wu Kehua, was relieved of his command and was replaced by General You Taizhong of Chengdu.

Gen You, Gen Wang and Gen Xiang were all elected members of the party Central Committee at the 12th party congress early last month.

Other military regions, whose commanders will almost certainly lose their posts, include Lanzhou, whose commander is General Du Yide, Wuhan (General Zhang Caiqian) and Jinan (General Rao Shoukun).

And the commander of the Shenyang Region, General Li Desheng, the only regional commander to have been elected to the party Politburo, may leave his position also for a more senior job in Beijing.

But it is at the deputy commander and deputy political commissar level, and also at lower ones that the changes have been most sweeping.

Full information on these changes has yet to be collated but initial reports show that in the Guangzhou command, at least, practically all the deputy commanders and most of the political commissars have either been relegated to the advisory posts or retired altogether.

Observers said this is the largest peaceful reorganisation of the military since the People's Republic was established and its magnitude almost matches that of the unprecedented changes during the Cultural Revolution.

Major changes are also taking place in the military headquarters and the three branches of the armed services.

It is expected that, when the exercise is completed, practically all those who have been elected to the Central Advisory Commission at last month's party congress, and a great many more, will have relinquished their jobs in favour of younger and, in some cases, more trustworthy officers.

The changeover in the Guangzhou command was most dramatic. Prominent veteran soldier Mr Wang Zhen, who has often acted as Mr Deng Xiaoping's military "trouble shooter," came down to the south to preside and supervise the "changing of the guard."

Nearly a dozen military officers, including Gen Wu, were relieved of their posts. Only one officer, Deputy Political Commissar Shan Yingzhang, retained his job.

Three officers, Gen Wu, Zhan Caifang and Peng Jiaqing, joined the Central Advisory Commission while the others were simply retired.

What made this changeover so spectacular was that almost all the officers were members of the former Fourth Field Army of Lin Biao who came to the south in the early days of the People's Republic and most of whom had been stationed there since.

While many of their senior colleagues were purged after the abortive coup engineered by Lin Biao, they were able to stay on and were promoted through the ranks to reach their present positions.

Many of the officers now relieved of their jobs also once held important positions at the height of the Cultural Revolution and they had somehow managed to escape the subsequent purge after Lin Biao's death.

Another outstanding feature of the changeover, effected late last month, was the fact that almost all the retired officers, except Gen Wu, were present at a major rally presided over by Mr Wang to mark the change.

This was rare in past practice as those purged or retired from their posts never, as a rule, attended any subsequent public meetings.

Those retired officers included Huang Ronghai, Ye Jianmin, Jiang Lindong, Deng Yefan, Yang Shugeng, Yan Demin, Chen Haihan, Xiao Yuanli, Zhuang Tian, Lai Chunfeng and Zhu Ying.

The new command is more concise in form and comprises one commander, three deputy commanders, one political commissar and two deputy political commissars.

The deputy commanders are Xu Fangchun, Zhu Yuehua and Zhang Xudeng.

The political commissar remains Mr Wang Meng who took over the job upon the death of the incumbent, Mr Xiang Zhonghau, two years ago, and the two deputy commissars are Shan Yingzhang and Lou Weiru.

The changes have come less than a month after the LIBERATION ARMY DAILY retracted an earlier article attacking the moderate line of Mr Deng Xiaoping and other pragmatists. The article was regarded as a challenge to Mr Deng's authority and was published on the eve of the 12th party congress.

The challenge was quickly defeated and the party congress saw the relegation of nearly 30 serving officers to the Central Advisory Commission. While many of them are undoubtedly old and in ill health, others are still relatively young and in good health.

The appointments of these officers to the CAC heralded the changes in the military and indeed, within weeks of the congress, the director of the General Political Department, ailing Mr Wei Ouoqing, was replaced by Mr Yu Qiuli.

Other prominent changes include the retirement of Mr Ye Fei and his replacement by Gen Liu Huaqing, one of the younger deputy chiefs of General Staff, as head of the PLA Navy.

Other changes took place in the general headquarters but they were largely unannounced and it was in the military regions that the swift switch was most pronounced.

In effecting the changes, the leaders were careful not to "ruffle features," observers said.

At the Ouangzhou rally, for instance, Mr Wang Zhen heaped praise on the retiring officers for their contributions during their "revolutionary careers," for their initiative to retire "on their own" and for their fresh contribution to help their successors.

In the weeks ahead, more changes will be disclosed but it will be some time before the dust settles and a clear picture of the revamped army emerges.

MING PAO EXAMINES SPACE TECHNOLOGY DEVELOPMENT

HK080733 Hong Kong MING PAO in Chinese 6 Nov 82 p 5

[Special dispatch by special correspondent Zong Juan]

[Text] Beijing, 5 Nov -- After China's successful launching of its 12th artificial earth satellite, Sun Jiadong, an authority on space technology, disclosed a few days ago in Beijing that China is studying and manufacturing three-stage liquid rockets and will launch correspondence satellites next year. The general engineer of China's Ministry of Space Industry declared: "We will not take part in space competition, nor will we depend on others."

Sun Jiadong divided the history of the development of space technology in mainland China into three stages: 1) from the mid-1950's to the early 1960's, a stage for laying down a foundation; 2) from the launching of the first artificial earth satellite to the present, a stage for experiment; and 3) an application stage which began quite recently.

He said that the three stages were as follows: Stage 1: Efforts were made to draw plans for the development of space technology, design and manufacture rockets and satellites and establish experiment bases and launching sites. A satellite launching center was established during that period in the barren and desolate desert, north of Jiuguan in Gansu, where all 12 artificial earth satellites were launched. During that period, a special committee was established with Zhou Enlai presiding and Nie Rongzhen and Luo Ruiqing in charge of the routine work. Although the Soviet Union tore up the relevant agreements at that time, the development of China's space technology was not halted but was ready to take off by relying on our own efforts.

Stage 2: The catastrophe of the "Cultural Revolution" seriously hampered the development of science and technology with the exception of space technology secretly "catching up with and surpassing the world's advanced level." Compared with the Soviet Union, the United States, France and Japan, the technical scheme and design quota of China's first artificial earth satellite was advanced. All 11 satellites launched subsquently were more or less advanced in the fields of structure material, temperature control, appearance control and satellite energy.

Stage 3: Our main objective is launching satellites of synchronous orbit and large satellites with surface layer orbit. China has already reached the initial application stage in satellite correspondence and also made remarkable achievements in utilizing satellites to forecast weather, investigate natural resources, conduct geological and hydrological surveys and carry out mineral prospecting.

Also serving as the deputy director of the Chinese Space Technology Research Institute, Sun Jiadong delightedly said: "We have successfully recovered our artificial earth satellite for the fourth time." According to his disclosure, satellites were recovered after traveling for three days on the first three occasions, but the latest one was recovered after traveling for five days at a predetermined area in the southern part of Sichuan Province.

When asked why Sichuan was chosen, as on previous occasions, as the place for satellite recovery, Sun Jiadong explained that many complicated technical problems were involved in the recovery. Usually, the United States recovers satellites at sea, whereas China has chosen to recover satellites on land in accordance with its own technical conditions. Where is the best place for satellites to fall?

The desert in the western part of China is of course a good place, but satellites have to be launched against the direction of rotation of the globe. The launching, therefore, is a strain just like throwing something against the forward direction in a fast-moving train.

Satellites were accurately recovered on several occasions in the southern part of Sichuan and more difficult and complicated technology is required in the field than in the United States and the Soviet Union. Sun Jiadong said: "This shows that China has made breakthroughs in the fields of the technology of orbit control, applying rocket brakes and heatproofing materials."

SEMINAR RECOMMENDS DEVELOPING NORTHWEST CHINA

HK081311 Hong Kong HSIN WAN PAO in Chinese 6 Nov 82 p 4

[Special dispatch from Beijing: "Chinese Scientists Point Out Future Hopes Lie in Northwest"]

[Text] "China's future hopes lie in the immense northwest." This was the unanimous view at a recent seminar sponsored by the Chinese Ecologists Association.

This association recently held a seminar in Urumqi on the ecological situation in dry and semidry regions. Some scholars, who had taken part in the meeting and returned to Beijing, said that the participants at the meeting made a resounding call -- "advance to the immense northwest," urging more scientists, technicians and noble-minded patriots to contribute their part in exploiting and building the northwest areas.

They said that since the United States had turned a desert along the west coast into a land of happiness, why could not we build our large northwest into a strategic rear area of our country?

They said that China's northwest is rich in natural resources, in particular crude petroleum, coal, water and solar and wind energy. The land also has a great potential for developing agriculture and animal husbandry. For example, Xinjiang could become one of the world's areas with the greatest potential for promoting cotton, grapes, beetroot and "hami" melon, provided it can attain grain self-sufficiency. The cotton crop on the two sides of the Nile gives a living to the Egyptians, the cotton crop in Xinjiang will also enrich hundreds of thousands of people.

They pointed out that there is ample scope for more inhabitants in the northwest. The population of this area is now about 600 million, accounting for about one twentieth of the national population. But this region covers more than one fifth of China's total area. They also said that conditions in China's northwest are much better than those in Siberia in the Soviet Union. The area is rich in water resources, particularly the glaciers in the Tianshan mountains, the Kunlun mountains and the Qilian mountains.

The participants at the meeting are fully confident that the dry land in the northwest can be surely transformed into fertile soil. The immense northwest will become the cradle of the prosperity and future hope of China.

KYODO: DENG ON RELATIONS WITH USSR, U.S., JAPAN

OW0911233 Tokyo KYODO In English 1236 GMT 9 Nov 82

[Text] Beijing, Nov 9 KYODO -- China's strongman Deng Xiaoping said Tuesday that there will be progress in Sino-Soviet normalization talks if Moscow takes some concrete action to ease the friction in bilateral relations.

At the same time, Deng said he cannot trust the United States because its policy changes when the President changes.

Deng, chairman of the Chinese Communist Party's Central Advisory Commission, reportedly made these remarks during an hour-long meeting with Tokuma Utsunomiya, a member of the Japanese House of Councillors at the Great Hall of the People in Beijing.

Utsunomiya briefed reporters on his meeting with Deng.

China and the Soviet Union resumed working-level talks on the normalization of relations last month in Beijing. They were suspended following the Soviet military intervention in Afghanistan in 1979.

The talks are currently in recess but are expected to continue in Moscow soon.

On the prospect of improvement of Sino-Soviet relations, Deng told Utsunomiya that "the question is not words but action and it's up to the Soviet Union."

He said that the normalization talks will make progress if the Soviet Union takes some concrete action to reduce what he called "the threat to China." China has long objected to the USSR's deployment of a large number of troops on the Sino-Soviet border and has denounced Moscow's intervention in Afghanistan and support of Vietnam in dispatching troops to Kampuchea.

China has been calling on the Soviet Union to withdraw its troops from Sino-Soviet border areas, Mongolia and Afghanistan, and to withdraw its support for Vietnam's occupation of Kampuchea.

It was believed that Deng was again signalling that there could be some progress in the normalization talks if the Soviet Union shows real signs of movement on even one of the three conditions laid down by Beijing.

Deng also reportedly said that it is natural for Japan as an independent nation to maintain self-defense forces.

According to Utsunomiya, he said that China does not consider self-defense forces to be a revival of militarism in Japan, an indication that China believes reinforcement of Japan's self-defense forces is distinct from the question of a militarist revival.

However, Deng said that while China is not worried about Japan's defense buildup, many countries in Asia are apprehensive about it.

On Sino-U.S. relations, Deng said China is watching U.S. policy carefully because America alters its policy when a new man assumes the presidency.

Deng cited as an example of what China calls U.S. "hegemonism" Washington's policy toward Israel, South Africa, South Korea and Taiwan.

He said U.S. troops should be pulled out of South Korea.

RENMIN RIBAO ON U.S.-USSR NUCLEAR ARMS TALKS

[Article by Fang Min [2455 2404]: "The 'Disarmament' Talks That Exist In Name But Not in Reality"]

[Text] The 37th UN General Assembly, which is now in session, has regarded disarmament as an important topic for discussion, just as previous assemblies have done. The Soviet foreign minister and the U.S. secretary of state spoke plausibly and at length at the UN General Assembly that both superpowers were working for arms reduction. The Soviet Union also pretended to be serious about raising disarmament proposals on the so-called checking of the arms race, preventing nuclear calamity and so forth. In the meantime, when the UN General Assembly is in session, the talks between the Warsaw Treaty Organization and NATO on disarmaments for central Europe and the U.S.-USSR nuclear arms and strategic nuclear weapons limitation talks for Europe have also resumed one after another. It seems that the two superpowers are enthusiastic enough in promoting disarmament. However, grim reality has told people that the practical acts of the Soviet Union and the United States run counter to their "remarks" on disarmament and that various kinds of "disarmament" talks which are in session are nothing but a fraudulent farce that exists in name only.

At present, one of the characteristics of the three disarmament talks which mainly involve the Soviet Union and the United States is that trifles are disputed, but neither the Soviet Union nor the United States is willing to reduce its armaments. This is the key reason why the talks have become bogged down.

The disarmament talks on central Europe has been held off and on for 9 years and the 28th round of talks has already started. The present discussion involves more than 2 million regular troops of the two European military blocks stationed in central Europe. A long time ago, both of them said they would mitigate military confrontation in central Europe. However, the discussion has been at a deadlock so far because of an old problem which has remained unsolved for a long time. This old problem is the actual number of troops of the two groups stationed in central Europe and the way to reduce them.

The Soviet side has always stressed: The total number of ground forces and the air force of both sides stationed in central Europe is "roughly the same": 991,000 for the Warsaw Treaty Organization and 979,000 for NATO; the number of ground forces of the Warsaw Treaty Organization has reached 792,500 and NATO 796,700. Therefore, the Soviet Union has held that the "disarmaments" of both sides should be "on the basis of reciprocity." The U.S. side has said that according to the information it has collected, there is a wide gap between the military strength of the two blocks. In other words, the number of troops of the Warsaw Treaty Organization is 150,000-170,000 more than the military strength of NATO. Therefore, reduction should be carried out in "proportion." Those who have stationed more troops should reduce more.

Last spring and summer, both sides raised the so-called new plans. According to the new plan of the Warsaw Treaty Organization, the Soviet Union and the United States should, first of all, reduce their ground forces by 20,000 and 13,000 respectively. After that, both sides should "freeze their remaining troops on the basis of collective principle." Through further negotiations, both sides should respectively reduce their ground forces to the level of 700,000 and the air force to 200,000. According to the new plan worked out by NATO, after reduction of forces, the maximum number of ground forces and air force of both sides would be 900,000 respectively. However, according to NATO's standard of calculation, the Warsaw Treaty Organization should withdraw 200,000 troops within 7 years. As a result, both sides have quarreled without results about the troops stationed in central Europe and the way to reduce them.

The delegates of both the Soviet Union and the United States boasted their own plans, saying that if their plans are implemented, the "acute military confrontation in central Europe will be mitigated" and that "the danger of war in Europe minimized" and so forth. Actually, according to their disarmament plans, the number of ground forces and air force of both sides stationed in the central European region which is not large will be maintained at the level of 1.8 million. In particular, both sides have in recent years improved their own military facilities while carrying out talks. It is absolutely impossible to realize the so-called "mitigating military confrontation."

Another important subject in the U.S.-USSR disarmament talks is the intermediate-range nuclear weapons as well as the respective strategic nuclear weapons of the two countries in the European theater. These two rounds of talks have been going on in Geneva for more than a month, but the positions of both sides have remained the same as before. There is not the slightest change in their sharp antagonism. Recently, both sides have again blamed each other for the lack of sincerity. A high-ranking general of the Soviet General Staff Department has put the blame for the impasse in the nuclear talks on the United States "not taking a genuine interest" in the talks. Actually, the true reason for the impasse in the U.S.-USSR nuclear talks is because these two superpowers do not really want to reduce their respective nuclear strength, and they are hoping to gain some advantages for themselves through the talks.

Regardless of whether discussing intermediate-range or strategic nuclear weapons, the point of departure of the United States is to weaken Soviet superiority in land-based missiles. The Soviet Union, on the other hand, is making every effort to maintain this superiority and is energetically preventing the United States from further improving its nuclear technology. Their intentions are clearly reflected in their respective "disarmament" plans.

On the question of intermediate-range nuclear weapons in Europe, the "zero-point option" proposed by the United States is aimed at such Soviet land-based missiles as the SS-20, SS-4 and SS-5. It wants the Soviet Union to dismantle these missiles in exchange for not deploying Pershing II missiles and cruise missiles in Europe. The United States is still insisting on this plan at present. The chief U.S. negotiator says that the U.S. plan has "furnished the brightest prospect" for reaching an agreement. What the Soviet Union has put forward is a "reduction plan" centered on freezing the status quo. "Freezing" means that the United States must not deploy any new missiles in Europe; "reduction" means that the nuclear forces of Britain and France are also included in the reduction. In this way, the enormously powerful Soviet SS-20 missiles can be preserved intact. At present, the Soviet Union is also insisting on this position and not giving way. Its negotiator has said that only the Soviet position can "lay a sound foundation" for reaching an agreement on the reduction of nuclear weapons in Europe. From this we can see that it will definitely take some time for the United States and the Soviet Union to make any headway in the talks on intermediate-range nuclear missiles in Europe.

The wrangling of the two superpowers over strategic arms also reflects their respective aims. The Reagan administration insists that nuclear disarmament must start with ballistic missiles, especially the number of warheads carried by land-based ballistic missiles and their carrying capacity. According to Reagan's projection, the number of Soviet land-based ballistic missiles as well as the number of warheads carried by these missiles, and their carrying capacity in which the Soviets have gained the upper hand will be greatly decreased, while the current U.S. nuclear strength will not be greatly affected. That is to say, the U.S. tactic is to maintain its own strength by holding down Soviet superiority.

The Soviet leaders stressed, however, that the primary objective of the talks is to freeze the quantity of the existing strategic weapons and to restrict the modernization of the existing weapons. The purpose of this option is to maintain the Soviet strength in land-based missiles and, at the same time, halt U.S. efforts to improve its nuclear weapons. Now both sides are obstinately clinging to their respective positions and waiting for an opportunity. Each counts on making use of the other's difficult positions at home and abroad and tries to compel the other to yield. At the same time, both sides are also building up their respective strength so as to back up their bargaining power.

According to studies by some unofficial bodies in the United States and other places, currently there are 50,000 nuclear warhead's stocked all over the world, and 96 percent of these are controlled by the two superpowers. Moreover, they are still "developing and improving new means of war."

With regard to the improvement of nuc ear weapons, both the United States and the Soviet Union have never stopped their nuclear tests. According to rough estimates, in the first 9 months of this year, the United States carried out 16 underground nuclear tests and the Soviet Union carried out 13 tests. In order to intensify the research and production of new nuclear weapons, the United States is implementing a 6-year plan for rebuilding armaments.

But the Soviet Union is by no means inferior in this respect. According to reports, the United States has started the production of MX missiles and trial-production of B-1 bombers. In the United States, the second Trident submarine has been put into service and six more submarines of the same model are to be built. In addition, it fulfilled the tests of cruise missiles launched in the air last October and these missiles will be put into service very soon. Besides speeding up the substitution of old missiles for new ones, the Soviets are trying to make nuclear submarines of the Typhoon class which will be well matched with the U.S. Trident submarines. They will put these submarines into service in the near future. They have also tested the new SSNX-20 multiple warhead missiles which will be carried by these submarines. Besides, the Soviets are also trying to make a new type of strategic bomber which resembles the U.S. B-1 bomber.

The Soviet Union and the United States are expanding their nuclear forces in Europe. According to reports by the Western press, the Soviet Union has never ceased to deploy SS-20 guided missiles. Even last March, when the Soviet Union announced that it would temporarily stop deployment, it had already built three SS-20 missile bases. The number of SS-20 guided missiles which it has deployed in Europe has reached 324. This year the United States has succeeded in launching its Tomahawk cruise missiles, to be used by the European region, and Pershing II guided missiles.

All this shows that the Soviet Union and the United States are carrying out a large-scale arms race. Their "disarmament" talks are nothing but empty talk.

IMF APPROVES LOAN TO S. AFRICA WITH U.S. SUPPORT

[Text] Washington, November 3 (XINHUA) -- The executive board of the International Monetary Fund (IMF) today approved a 1.07 billion dollar loan to South Africa, a move supported by the United States but strongly opposed by world public opinion.

South Africa's practice of apartheid policy and its military adventures in southern Africa have caused serious economic difficulties at home. Its massive military outlays, coupled with its gold and diamonds export shortfalls last year because of world-wide recession, have created huge budget and trade deficits estimated at 3.5 to 5.2 billion dollars for 1982.

The United Nations General Assembly approved a resolution by a vote of 121-to-3 late last month calling on the IMF to deny the loan on the grounds that such a loan would bolster South Africa's racist and aggressive policies.

The U.S. support of the IMF loan to South Africa has been criticised by members of Congress. Some 40 legislators have written Treasury Secretary Donald T. Regan to oppose the loan, the largest international loan in South Africa's history. They urged that such a loan should contain conditions designed to change South Africa's system of apartheid.

Rep. Howard Wolpe (D-Mich.), chairman of the House Foreign Affairs Subcommittee on Africa said in a letter to Regan that U.S. support for yet another IMF loan to South Africa "will be viewed by the non-white community within South Africa as support for an unjust status quo."

In an article in THE WASHINGTON POST yesterday, William H. Gray III, vice chairman of the Congressional Black Caucus, noted that the IMF approval of the loan with U.S. support "would give South Africa the economic means to carry on its military adventures against neighboring states."

He said: "By covering the entire 30 percent increase in Pretoria's defense spending over the past two years, the loan would enable the South African regime to persist pointlessly in its illegal occupation of Namibia and its escalating raids on Angola and Mozambique."

BOSTON GLOBE in an article yesterday said the loan "indirectly subsidizes South Africa's continued military aggression against neighboring states and implacable oppression of the African majority inside the country."

The State Department, responding today to critics of its policy on the IMF loan to South Africa, argued that the granting of the loan should be based solely on economic grounds. But members of the Congressional Black Caucus in a letter to Regan earlier sharply attacked the granting of the loan, saying that it is impossible to separate economic and political considerations in regard to South Africa.

XINHUA CORRESPONDENT VIEWS MIDTERM ELECTIONS

["News Analysis: What Does the Outcome of U.S. Congressional Elections Show? -- by Correspondent Yu Enguang" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Washington, November 4 (XINHUA) -- The mid-term congressional elections ended with the Democrats getting the upper hand in the election of representatives and governors and the Republicans maintaining its majority position in the Senate.

After the election, both the two parties and the public have offered differing explanations about the outcome of the elections. These explanations reflect their differences in interests as well as the current political and economic crises in the United States.

The Republicans suffered heavy losses in the elections. The voters were unhappy with the economic and social policies of the Reagan administration. Soon after Reagan took office last year, he adopted an "economic recovery program" based on supply-side economics, claiming that with the implementation of the program, the economy would quickly recover from the stagnation.

However, the economy failed to develop as Reagan had expected. Not long after Reagan announced his economic recovery program, the economy experienced another recession in July last year, the eighth since World War II.

Reagan's economic policy has caused deficits, interest rates and unemployment to climb higher than ever since the great depression. Therefore, the supply-side economics which was popular for a time has invited criticisms not only from the opposition party and the public, but also from some people within the Republican Party and the government.

It is the first time since 1950 that the Republicans lost so many seats in the House of Representatives when a Republican president had his first experience in mid-term elections.

Many representatives who supported the supply-side economics in 1980 when they entered the Congress lost their seats in the recent election. The outcome of the election is taken as a challenge to Reagan's economic policy.

But the outcome of the election does not mean a "victory" for the Democrats either. On the eve of the election, taking advantage of the current economic recession, especially the rising unemployment and cuts in social welfare spendings, the Democrats launched attacks on the Republicans.

They claimed that they would re-dominate the Senate, capture 30 to 40 seats from the Republicans in the House of Representatives, and seize hold of 40 or more governorships.

But the Democrats failed to reach the goal, mainly because during the campaign they only submitted an empty slogan, "American needs a change". As to what kind of change was meant, Democratic candidates each offered their own interpretations.

Actually, the moderates and liberals within the Democratic Party had quarrelled for a long time over economic policies. Some suggested that the supply-side economics be done away with and Keynesianism restored, while others held that neither of them was effective.

Since no one in the party could make out a new formula, voters did not believe that the Democrats had any better cards up their sleeves.

The outcome of the election will have an impact on the government in the rest of its term. Obviously, Reagan will find it more difficult to deal with the Congress. In the last two years, it was relatively easy for Reagan to railroad his economic program and budget through the House of Representatives and the Senate since there existed a "conservative coalition" formed by a majority of Republican congressmen and several dozen Democratic congressmen from the South. With the worsening of the economic difficulties, this coalition was disintegrated.

As the number of moderates and liberals among the Democratic congressmen has increased by more than 20, it is no longer easy for Reagan to have his program passed in the Congress The only choice that lies before Reagan is between "compromise" and "stalemate".

HUANG HUA MEETS U.S. CONGRESSIONAL DELEGATION

[Text] Beijing, November 9 (XINHUA) -- Huang Hua, Chinese state councillor and foreign minister, met here this afternoon with a U.S. congressional delegation led by Congressman William J. Hughes, chairman of the Subcommittee on Crime of the Judiciary Committee of the U.S. House of Representatives.

Huang Hua discussed with the guests on Sino-U.S. relations and other issues. Present on the occasion were Wang Chuliang, deputy secretary-general of the Chinese People's Institute of Foreign Affairs, and Arthur W. Hummel, U.S. ambassador to China.

The delegation arrived here November 7 at the invitation of the Chinese People's Institute of Foreign Affairs.

GEORGE BUSH TO VISIT AFRICAN COUNTRIES

[Text] Washington, November 9 (XINHUA) -- U.S. Vice-President George Bush will begin a seven-nation African trip tomorrow as President Reagan's personal representative.

During the next 15 days, Bush will visit Cape Verde, Senegal, Nigeria, Zambia, Zimbabwe, Kenya and Zaire. He is the highest-ranking official of the Reagan administration to visit black Africa.

At a press conference here today, Bush said his visit is to demonstrate the "high value" the U.S. administration places on African countries and to "develop understanding on major bilateral and regional issues." He indicated that the United States is determined to "persevere" in efforts on the Namibia issue. "Without an agreement on Cuban troops withdrawal from Angola," a solution to the Namibia issue would be highly unlikely, he said.

Observers here pointed out that the vice president will no doubt "get a feel" for the costs of Reagan's policy in Africa, a policy that tilts towards South Africa and thereby strains relations with black Africa.

Last year the United States vetoed a United Nations Security Council resolution condemning South Africa's invasion of Angola. Recently it helped South Africa get a 1.07 billion dollar loan from the International Monetary Fund. Such an attitude of the United States has evoked strong dissatisfaction from African countries.

AFP: DENG OUTLINES CONCERN OVER USSR TROOPS

OW091240 Hong Kong AFP in English 1220 GMT 9 Nov 82

[Text] Beijing, Nov. 9 (AFP) -- Chinese strongman Deng Xiaoping reaffirmed today that China is waiting for deeds not words from the Soviet Union in view of the threat constituted by the more than one million Soviet troops on its border.

Mr. Deng was speaking to a delegation of the China-Japan Friendship Association led by its President Tokuma Utsunomiya, a Japanese source said.

The Chinese leader told his visitors that relations with the Soviet Union could only be formalised if Moscow took concrete action, especially about its military presence on the Chinese frontier.

Western diplomats said that China's chief concern is to be rid of the problem of the Soviet military deployment on the frontier which forces the Chinese to station large numbers of their own troops on their side of the border, placing a heavy burden on the country's finances.

The diplomats said that if the Chinese leadership could obtain satisfaction on this problem they would probably agree to normalise relations with Moscow.

But they would continue to press for satisfaction on Cambodia where China is seeking the withdrawal of Vietnamese forces and Afghanistan where the Chinese have denounced Soviet intervention.

Soviet diplomatic sources say that the Chinese have not established any order of priority on these three points. They add that Moscow would agree to discuss the military forces on the Sino-Soviet frontier but not those stationed in Outer Mongolia which is a sovereign state.

Observers said that Mr. Deng's reference to the question of the Soviet troops on the frontier was certainly not a casual remark. It suggests that this problem will be the crucial issue at the next round of consultations to be held in Moscow early in the new year.

A Japanese source said that Mr. Deng was neither pessimistic nor optimistic about the talks with the Soviet Union.

Privately both Chinese and Soviet sources said that they (?do) not expect any spectacular development in this area and expected the negotiations to be long and difficult.

Beijing and Moscow resumed their dialogue last month after a break of nearly three years when Soviet vice-Foreign Minister Leonid Ilichev and his Chinese opposite number Qian Qichen held a first round of consultations.

XI ZHONGXUN MEETS DPRK RADIO, TV DELEGATION

[Text] Beijing, November 8 (XINHUA) -- Xi Zhongxun, member of the Political Bureau of the Chinese Communist Party Central Committee and vice-chairman of the National People's Congress Standing Committee, this afternoon met with a Korean radio and television delegation led by Yi Yong-ok, chairman of the Central Broadcasting Commission.

Xi Zhongxun said "the two parties, countries and peoples of China and Korea have consistently supported and helped each other in their protracted struggles. New progress has been made in the friendship between our two countries."

He recalled the welcome accorded to his delegation during its recent visit to Korea. "I have deeply felt the relations between our countries are as close as lips and teeth," he said.

Xi Zhongxun said the Chinese people firmly support the Korean people in their struggle for independence and peaceful reunification of their fatherland, and support president Kim Il-sung's proposal for the establishment of a Democratic Confederal Republic of Koryo.

He expressed the hope the broadcasting staffs of the two countries would continue to learn from each other, compare notes and strengthen cooperation.

Yi Yong-ok said "we have visited Beijing, Shanghai, Guangzhou, Kunming and Nanjing and had extensive contacts with Chinese workers, peasants and people in other fields. We have seen the Chinese people working hard to realize the spirit of the party's 12th congress.

"The relations between Korea and China were cemented with blood. The Korean broadcasting staff are determined to make efforts for strengthening the friendship and unity between the two countries he said.

Present were Wu Lengxi, minister of radio and television, and Chon Myong-su, Korean ambassador to China.

VODK COMMENTARY ON SOVIET DELEGATION'S VISIT

[Text] Beijing, November 6 (XINHUA) -- The recent visit of a Soviet military delegation to Indochina was designed to push forward the Soviet expansionist strategy in Southeast Asia, said radio Democratic Kampuchea in a commentary today.

The visit was also designed to help the Le Duan clique of Vietnam plot a new war escalation against Kampuchea, the radio pointed out.

The Soviet military delegation headed by Lieutenant General B.P. Utkin visited Vietnam, Phnom Penh and Laos from October 26 to November 3.

The radio said that last February the chief of General Staff of the armed forces, N.V. Ogarkov, visited Vietnam and Phnom Penh. As a result, the Soviet Navy gained the right to use Cam Ranh Bay and Danang in Vietnam as bases for its warships including nuclear submarines and to speed up the projects for the expansion of facilities of Kampong Saom and Phsar Ream in Kampuchea.

Recently the Soviet Union has accelerated its shipments of arms and ammunition to Kampuchea to reinforce Vietnam's military forces along the Kampuchean-Thai border that are making preparations for another war operation in the coming dry season.

All this shows anew that with the support of the Soviet Union, Vietnam will never give up its designs to set up an Indochina federation, nor will the Soviet Union give up its expansionist strategy in Southeast Asia. Should their designs succeed in Kampuchea, they would advance against other places.

The radio called on countries in Southeast Asia and the Asian-Pacific region to keep high vigilance against the danger of Soviet-Vietnamese aggression and expansion in the region.

RENMIN RIBAO ON HANOI, PHNOM PENH'S NEW MOVE

["International Jottings" by Huang Qing [7806 2532]: "The Ferocious Features of a Bondservant"]

[Text] A few days ago, the "foreign ministry" of the Kampuchean puppet regime published a declaration against the UN resolution on the Kampuchean issue. While hurling routine abuse at China and the ASEAN countries, this "foreign ministry" also declared that "there is a limit to tolerance," and that the Kampuchean puppet regime "would properly exercise its right of counteroffensive to safeguard the country's rights of existence."

Everyone knows that the Kampuchean puppet regime is propped up by the Vietnamese authorities alone. However, despite its role as a thoroughgoing bondservant, this regime always insists on disguising itself as independent. Is it curious? Not at all. In fact, it is merely playing the role of its master's mouthpiece. The ferocious pose of the bondservant in Phnom Penh reflects the conspiracy of its master in Hanoi as the Vietnamese move their troops toward the western part of Kampuchea.

The whole world will pay close attention to any new move by the Vietnamese and their lackey on the Kampuchean-Thai border.

ARTICLE EXAMINES RETURNING HONG KONG TO PRC

HK060414 Shanghai SHIJIE JINGJI DAOBAO in Chinese No 106, 18 Oct 82 pp 1, 2

[Special dispatch from Hong Kong: "The British Authorities in Hong Kong Should Match Their Words and Deeds and Regard Stabilizing the Hong Kong Situation as the Most Important Thing"]

[Text] The people in Hong Kong are paying close attention to how China and Britain will begin their talks on maintaining prosperity and stability in this city.

Hong Kong Governor Youde revealed on 6 October that "following Mrs Thatcher's visit to China, the talks in Beijing had already begun."

On the same day, the British Foreign Office also confirmed this, but declared that it was held strictly and only at the ordinary diplomatic level, which was aimed at paving the way for the real talks.

Nothing has as yet been heard from Beijing. According to the British Foreign Office there was only diplomatic contact to make arrangements for the real talks. Even so, it is also an important matter that if at the first stage of contact a good beginning can be made so that formal talks can be held smoothly on a correct track.

At present, a pressing problem is that Hong Kong's situation must be stabilized. On this problem, the British authorities in Hong Kong must not shirk responsibility. An article in the London TIMES said that whether the financial confidence, which has an important bearing on the prosperity of Hong Kong, can be maintained, "depends, to a larger and larger extent, on Beijing's action." As a matter of fact, it will be more appropriate to put it vice versa.

Recently, disturbances have repeatedly arisen in Hong Kong's financial circles. Hong Kong stocks, real estate and the Hong Kong dollar have dropped seriously. There is no one else to blame. Just as was pointed out by a Hong Kong paper that although there might be many reasons for this financial storm, the attempt by some people to use it to "put pressure" on China is cavious. Is this analysis not more conforming to realities?

Hong Kong Governor Youde emphasized that "Britain has always assumed responsibility for Hong Kong." Referring to the fluctuation of foreign exchange and prices in the stock market, he said that Hong Kong's economy "is not only highly adaptable and can be effectively readjusted at any time, but is also continuously increased." He also declared that the Hong Kong Government "is determined to make more investment and work hard." Although these remarks are not direct answers to the people's demands on the Hong Kong Government to bear responsibility for stabilizing Hong Kong's financial market, they seem to be a gesture showing that the Hong Kong Government will bear the responsibility for defending Hong Kong's economy.

What merits our attention, however, is that some remarks from Hong Kong and London are not like this. They have been trying hard to shift the blame onto China's firm stand in regaining its sovereignty over Hong Kong, saying that this is the cause for the storm in Hong Kong's financial market. Some people said more bluntly that only when China gives up its stand on sovereignty over Hong Kong can the public be reassured of the stability of Hong Kong. They even requested that China and Britain bypass the question of sovereignty during discussion and stick to measures for maintaining the prosperity of Hong Kong. No wonder various absurd arguments have appeared, such as "the unequal treaties are still taking effect" and so on.

The Chinese people have never recognized the unequal treaties. They are determined to regain sovereignty over Hong Kong. This is known to all, or at least, is expected by all, both in Hong Kong and in London. The reason why the stability of Hong Kong, which had been maintained for a long time, was affected recently was that some people had attempted to change the inevitable trend of China regaining its sovereignty over Hong Kong or attempted to evade this crucial premise, in order to attain the aim of their wishful thinking -- "preserving the status quo of Hong Kong." The storm in Hong Kong's stock and money markets, which appeared before and after the talks between Chinese and British leaders, was stirred up by none other than such political monetary forces which considered themselves clever. Obviously, this is not conducive to a correct and reasonable solution of the Hong Kong problem.

Therefore, people must request that the British authorities in Hong Kong match their words and deeds and really bear the responsibility. The must develop a "highly adaptable" economy in Hong Kong, preserve the stable situation and, at the same time, take a correct attitude toward China regaining its sovereignty over Hong Kong, and take concrete steps and adopt concrete measures to maintain the prosperity of Hong Kong through negotiation. Only thus can the talks in the future be held smoothly and be conducive to the stable situation in Hong Kong.

Now in Hong Kong, as well as in the whole world, more and more people of insight place faith in the efforts made by China and Britain to remove various obstacles and seek a method which is "satisfactory to both sides" to solve the Hong Kong problem, that is, China regains its sovereignty over Hong Kong while the prosperity and stability of Hong Kong are preserved. The British NEW STATESMAN has made very sober comments on this issue. It said that "the only realistic policy on the Hong Kong issue is to hold an honest and frank talk in the highest interests of Hong Kong so that this city can be peacefully returned to China." According to a report by the HONG KONG ECONOMIC JOURNAL, patriotic Hong Kong compatriots have linked their future with the future of the motherland. They believe that the motherland is rejuvenating. The return of Hong Kong to the embrace of the motherland will be the most significant event in Hong Kong's history. This is a most correct opinion which we should heed.

Peng Zhen, vice chairman of the Constitutional Revision Committee, chaired and addressed today's plenary meeting. He said: The meeting was a success. NANGFANG RIBAO ON CORRECTING PARTY WORK STYLE

[Commentator's article: "Party Members Must Strive for a Fundamental Turn for the Better in Party Work Style"]

[Text] In the course of studying the 12th CPC Congress documents, the broad ranks of party members have shown great concern to strive for a fundamental turn for the better in the party work style within 5 years and have conducted heated discussions on the matter. On the basis of deepening their understanding, many comrades have realized that this demand put forward by the 12th CPC Congress is of great importance and is attainable. But some comrades still lack confidence in this respect. There are still problems in their understanding of and attitude toward correcting the party work style. It seems that in order to mobilize all our party members to strive for a fundamental turn for the better in the party work style, we need to lead the party members to correct their understanding on a few problems.

It is necessary to form a correct estimation of the present state of our party work style. One of the important reasons that our comrades lack confidence in the fundamental turn for the better in the party work style is that they have not formed a comprehensive and correct estimation of our current party work style at present.

What then is the state of our current party work style? On the one hand, we must be aware that due to the sabotage of Lin Biao and the "gang of four," the problem of improper party work style was once quite serious, and due to the pernicious influence of the 10 years of internal disorder not having been completely eliminated and the increase in corrosive capitalist ideas under new conditions, there still exist problems involving ideological impurities, work style and party organization. The party work style has not made a fundamental turn for the better. On the other hand, we must also be fully aware that since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, the party Central Committee has treated the work of correcting the party work style as a matter of life and death for the party, made great efforts in correcting unhealthy tendencies within the party and adopted a series of effective measures to do so. Especially since this year, we have launched the struggle to combat serious economic crimes, vigorously promoting a turn for the better in party work style. Many facts go to prove this point in real life.

For instance, a year ago the evil wind of some leading cadres illegally constructing private residences in Longchuan, Qiongshan, Chenghai, Yangchun and other counties was quite serious. Some people even regarded it as a "long-standing, big and difficult problem." But with the support of the party committees at higher levels and the strong demand of the vast number of party members, cadres and the masses, the CPC committees of these four counties resolutely waged a struggle against this evil wind, and seriously and earnestly dealt with cadres who illegally built private residences, according to the seriousness of each case. As a result, this evil wind has been brought under control in only a year. It has also, to a certain extent, led the party work style to take an overall turn for the better, rapidly promoted the production of industry and agriculture and created a new situation.

Therefore, we must consider not only the fact that our party work style has not yet turned for the better, but also the fact that it is in the course of turning for the better. We must be aware that the party Central Committee is thoroughly determined to correct unhealthy tendencies, that the vast number of party members, cadres and the masses have the strong desire to correct the party work style and the party and people have the strength to fight resolutely against the dark side. What is more important is that starting from the latter half of next year, the rectification of party work style and organizations of the whole party in accordance with the plan of the 12th CPC Congress is bound to play a significant role in correcting party work style. Only when we are aware of these favorable conditions will we have full confidence in striving for a fundamental turn for the better in party work style.

It is necessary to strengthen our sense of responsibility in property improving party work style and to carry on the revolutionary spirit of having the courage to fight against unhealthy tendencies. The marked progress of party work style in recent years is the result of efforts made by the whole party and is inseparable from the broad masses of party members' spirit of upholding principle and daring to fight. Is this not a fact? The serious problem of those individuals and units engaging in unhealthy tendencies and violating law and discipline was first exposed by party members and advanced elements who dared to fight and who had a high sense of responsibility as far as correcting the party work style goes. With the support of the party, they have carried out uncompromising struggle and solved problems. But at present, there are some comrades who have taken an attitude of showing no concern about correcting party work style. They say: "I hate these unhealthy tendencies, but it is beyond my capabilities to control them. I am not going to spare any more of my efforts and worries on this thing." This kind of attitude is obviously wrong. It is right to hate unhealthy tendencies, but the problem at present is that all our comrades should surmount the attitude of liberalism, take the lead in carrying out fine work style and be bold in combating unhealthy tendencies.

Zhuang Xiying of Guangdong, Li Haicheng of Hebei, Li Li of Shanxi and large numbers of ordinary party members and advanced elements have set us a fine example of adhering to principles and being bold in combat.

They have hated like an enemy the evil wind of getting in by the back door, establishing relationships, engaging in graft, embezzlement and smuggling. They have not feared counterattacks and have persisted in their struggle until victory. Every party member must learn from this spirit. He who regards himself as an onlooker only grumbling and showing dissatisfaction with unhealthy tendencies, or with the struggle against unhealthy tendencies, who withdraws whenever he meets with difficulties and setbacks, has forgotten his due responsibilities as a party member. On the contrary, if all party members firmly bear in mind the purpose of our party, establish a sense of the party and people's interest superior to everything, cast away all kinds of individualistic philosophies of life and never forget their fighting responsibility, then the fundamental turn for the better in the party work style would surely be attained at an early date.

Having leading cadres of the party at various levels playing a model role is the key to striving for the fundamental turn for the better in party work style. The successful experiences in many places in correcting the party work style in recent years have proved this point. However, up to now, there are still some leading cadres who have not yet realized this point. Recently, a few leading cadres have even been saying: We have unhealthy tendencies, so do the higher levels. If they are to be corrected, the work should start at the top. Such an attitude is very harmful to correcting the party work style. With regard to party members, those who practice unhealthy tendencies are wrong; no matter where it happens; whether on the higher or the lower level, whether leaders or those being led they must be consciously corrected in time. With regard to comrades who shoulder certain leading responsibilities, they must carry on the fine work style on their own initiative and correct unhealthy tendencies. This is a vigorous impetus to the comrades in the unit concerned. They then have a strong backing in correcting the unhealthy tendencies of other people and their words are effective. Therefore, the struggle of every leading cadre against unhealthy tendencies must start "from myself" and "from now." Precisely because the CPC Committee of Heyuan County has grasped the leadership and the prominent problem, it has achieved marked results. This example teaches us that provided the leading cadres at various level are strict with themselves and set a fine example, we will surely attain the fundamental turn for the better in the party work style.

RENMIN RIBAO ON REPLACING OLD CADRES WITH YOUNG

[Article by Fang Zhichun [2455 1807 4783]: "A Talk on Selection for Promotion of Outstanding Middle-aged and Young Cadres"]

[Text] In his report during the 12th CPC Congress, Comrade Hu Yaobang proudly declared: Our present congress will be marked in the history of the party as a congress which politically determines the party's policy and task in the new period, and organizationally realizes the cooperation and transition of the new and the old, and as a congress which creates an all-round new phase for the construction of socialist modernization.

Only through the cooperation and transition of the new and the old and through training and bringing up successors aware of the cause of proletarian revolution can we make our party ranks flourish like the ever-flowing water of the Chang Jiang; only in this way can our party's cause continue to develop uninterrupted, generation after generation.

Take for instance the situation of the ranks of cadres in Jiangxi Province. In various places, the problem of aging cadres exists to varying degrees. Many commune cadres who joined the revolutionary work in the land reform period have held their leading positions up to the present time; among the leading cadres at county level, the phenomenon of aging has experienced some changes after readjustment, but the changes are not very significant. It is rather hard for those cadres who are advanced in age to do the basic-level work at the county and commune levels; of the several hundred leading cadres at the levels of departments, bureaus, districts and counties, about half of them are nearly 60 years old.

On the one hand, there is the problem of aging cadres; on the other, the work of bringing up successors has not been done well, with the result that there is the problem of "when the new crop is still in the blade, the old one is all consumed." The leading cadres of the CPC have emphatically pointed out time and again that if this problem cannot be solved in time, it is possible we will ruin the cause achieved so far. At the party's 12th congress, Comrade Chen Yun profoundly pointed out: "If this problem cannot be solved now, or if it is not solved well, there is a possibility of complications in the communist cause in China." This once again reminds the whole party of the seriousness and urgency of this problem.

In our great motherland there are abundant material resources and outstanding human resources. It is absolutely possible for us to discover and train, from a great number of middle-aged and young cadres, a large batch of dependable, excellent cadres as successors to the cause of our party. First in the 1950's and in the early 1960's our party successfully trained a large batch of young cadres. They are now middle-aged cadres with energy and competence from among whom a large batch of successors can be discovered and trained. Second, during the 10 years of turmoil, although the counterrevolutionary cliques of Lin Biao and Jiang Qing poisoned the minds of the youth and caused immeasurable loss for the younger generation, their perverse acts also taught innumerable youths, and many outstanding elements emerged from among whom dependable successors can be selected and trained. Third, since the smashing of "the gang of four," and especially since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, a large batch of cadres who have both ability and political integrity have emerged on various fronts. They have resolutely carried out the line and general and specific policies set out by the third plenary session. Of these cadres, many middle-aged and young ones can be trained to be the dependable successors to the revolutionary cause.

It can be seen from the above analysis that outstanding cadres and dependable successors do exist. The point is that we should go to the masses to discover and train them.

How should we discover and train the successors to the cause of the proletarian revolution? In matters of ideology and methods, I think that it is necessary for us to overcome the blindness in action and to enhance self-consciousness.

Regarding blindness, there are two tendencies: one is to select cadres blindly and to promote them rashly just for the fulfillment of the task of selecting new cadres; the other tendency is to find fault with and distrust the new cadres and to show an unwillingness to promote them. Both of these two tendencies are wrong and they should be resolutely done away with.

In order to enhance self-consciousness, the party committees at various levels are required to select, with the utmost accuracy, middle-aged and young cadres in accordance with the criteria of "revolutionization, youthfulness, becoming more knowledgeable and specialization." The CPC Central Committee has time and again emphatically pointed out: Regarding those persons who became prominent during the "Great Cultural Revolution" by following the rebel line of the Lin Biao and Jiang Qing cliques, who still possess serious factional ideology, and who practiced beating, smashing and looting, not one of them should be chosen as a successor; and if some of them have been promoted to leading positions, they should be resolutely ousted from their present posts. In order to select truly dependable and faithful successors, it is necessary that we should act according to three principles: the first is fairness and an unbiased attitude; the second is appointing cadres according to their ability and integrity; and the third is complete understanding of the cadres' ability and proper assignment of their posts. Once the successors have been selected, they should be given a free hand to practice and increase their competence in the course of their practical struggles with the assistance of their elders. At the same time, the party organizations at various levels should help the middle-aged and young cadres raise their standards, both in ideology and theory, and should continuously educate them with the Marxist theory, the communist faith, the ideology of patriotism and the fine tradition and work style of the party, so as to enhance their revolutionary quality and consciousness.

As for us old cadres, on the problem of bringing up successors, the enhancement of self-consciousness consists mainly in two aspects: the first is to set a good example by handing over the first-line positions; the second is to assist the younger cadres in doing their work well by rendering our experience and guidance. This is the historical and most significant contribution that we elderly cadres can contribute to the people and the construction of the socialist modernization in our later years. This is also the sacred duty which each one of us elderly cadres is endowed with by history. I myself have retreated from a first-line position, and I will earnestly and warmly assist the provincial party committee in their work.

In the new CPC Central Committee appointed by the 12th CCP Congress, there are the old cadres who have undergone strict revolutionary struggles, supplemented with a batch of comparatively young comrades. The CPC Central Committee has set a good example for party organizations at various levels in the strategic arrangement for the cooperation and transition of the new and old cadres. Under the leadership of the CPC Central Committee, with the mobilization of the whole party, the training and bringing up of millions of successors to the proletarian revolutionary cause will make the party organizations at various levels more lively and energetic and enable them to lead vigorously the people of the whole country to open up a new situation for the construction of the socialist modernization.

USING SCIENCE, TECHNOLOGY TO IMPROVE ECONOMY

[Commentator's article: "Create Wealth Through Relying on Advances in Science and Technology"]

[Text] Everyone is certainly aware of the 13 scientific and technological achievements introduced here. However, few people clearly know what important economic results they have brought about. In this sense, this report can provoke new inspirations for people.

The first inspiration is: Technological progress can promote the creation of wealth, and we must conscientiously rely on making advances in science and technology while handling economic construction and striving to achieve the goal of quadrupling output value. Once advanced science and technology are applied to production, they will certainly create strong and active productive forces and more material wealth for society. The huge economic results brought by these 13 achievements have proved this. At the national conference for science awards, Comrade Zhao Ziyang correctly remarked: Technological progress can promote the creation of wealth and major technological progress can create enormous wealth. But the possiblity of creating wealth does not mean that wealth has been created. One of the preconditions for changing a possibility into reality is that we really shake off the fetters of old conventions and firmly set up an idea of conscientiously relying on science and technology to develop the economy. For a long time in the past, whenever the development of production was mentioned, many comrades would think about increasing investment and expanding the scale of production. As a result, backward production technology tended to be repeatedly utilized and poor economic results could not be improved. That was the old way of economic development. Now the party has decided at its 12th congress on a struggle objective of quadrupling output value. If we adhere to the old way, it is certain that we will not meet the need for funds, energy and materials. One of our main ways out is to rely on science and technology. According to the initial estimation of energy, materials and funds, it is possible to solve contradictions if economic results are improved by relying on effective science and technology. The objective situation has required us to score successes only by relying on advances in science and technology. Whether we can consciously apply science and technology to this pressing situation constitutes a test for every comrade who leads economic work. In any case, all of our comrades who are engaged in economic work should set up such a clear guideline in order to create a new situation in their work: economic prosperity must rely on scientific and technological progress. To realize modernization, it is imperative to really place our reliance on scientific and technological progress.

The second inspiration is: Scientific and technological achievements must be able to be utilized in production and play an effective role in economic development. It is mainly because they are all key projects concerning production that the 13 achievements can create such enormous economic results. After we take the new road in economic development of relying on scientific and technological progress, people will place more and more demands on scientific and technological workers. They must proceed from the actual conditions of our nation, orient their work to economic development and take into account economic results involving their work. Only thus can we solve as many key problems in production as possible when we do not have sufficient personnel and funds for the scientific and technological field. Comrade Zhao Ziyang has also set a clear guideline at this point: "Since scientific research work covers a vast area and involves many projects, the projects of primary importance should be those key ones that are related to enormous economic results in our construction. Scientists and technicians should make their contributions in all fields, but the most important thing they should do is promote technical progress in production and make contributions to the improvement of economic results."

The national science conference held in 1978 reaffirmed the proposition that science and technology are componetns of productive forces. More and more people have gradually realized the great significance of science and technology. The 12th CPC Congress again decided that educational, scientific and technological undertakings constitute one of the strategic priorities in economic development. In his speech Comrade Zhao Ziyang also treated the reliance on striving for economic prosperity and put it before the whole party and nation. We believe that with the deepening of people's understanding of this point, they will more and more consciously act by relying on scientific and technological progress to strive for economic prosperity.

FANG YI SPEECH ON SCIENTIFIC WORK IN CITIES

HK050651 Beijing GUANGMING RIBAO in Chinese 22 Oct 82 pp 1, 2

[Excerpts of speech delivered by Comrade Fang Yi at the national conference on scientific and technological work in small and medium-sized cities: "The Strategic Position of Science and Technology and Scientific and Technological Work in Small and Medium-Sized Cities"]

[Text] Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, especially since the CPC Central Committee and the State Council drew up a new principle for the development of science and technology in 1981, an active and brisk situation has been brought about in China's scientific and technological front, including the scientific and technological work in various cities. The overall situation is excellent.

The new principle for developing science and technology has taken root in the hearts of the people. The role of science and technology in promoting the development of industrial and agricultural production has become increasingly apparent. This important role has attracted close attention in planning socioeconomic development. The enthusiasm shown by scientific and technological personnel has risen to an unprecendented height. A new situation can also be seen in the seeking of talented people.

The new principle for developing science and technology was advanced in accordance with the needs of the new historic period on the basis of summing up our historical experiences in developing science and technology and taking foreign experiences as a reference. This principle deals correctly with the relationships between science, technology and socioeconomic development, and between basic, applied and development research. It also deals correctly with questions of developing production technology and selecting technological structure as well as the question of approaching foreign achievements in science and technology. The principle stresses that economic construction must rely on science and technology and that science and technology must take serving economic construction as their primary task, so that the development of science and technology in China can be laid on a solid foundation.

The new principle for developing science and technology has been warmly welcomed in all relevant quarters. Leading comrades of party committees and governments in many localities have said: "The principle expresses our common idea," and they have paid more attention to and more actively support the development of science and technology. More and more comrades have realized that socioeconomic development should be promoted through reliance on science and technology. Scientific and technological departments and personnel have created many vivid forms and have more actively taken the initiative in serving socialist modernization construction. Practice has shown that this principle is not simply the one which correctly guides the development of our scientific and technologic undertakings, but it is also an important component of our strategy for developing socialist modernization.

The formulation and implementation of this new principle for developing science and technology mark the entry of China's scientific and technological development into a new stage.

Of course, development situations in various departments and localities are still not balanced. The implementation of the new scientific and technological development principle is still at its initial stage. Many new methods in science and technology management work have yet to be developed and perfected. In some places, the problem of economic work divorced from science and technology has not yet been radically solved. Some leading comrades still lack the knowledge of relying on science and technology. But we believe that the above-mentioned state of affairs will certainly change along with the daily development of our socialist modernization, the gradual reform of the economic structure and the more thorough implementation of the principle for developing science and technology and that there will certainly be another greater leap in our scientific and technological work.

The 12th party congress clearly stated that the key to achieving the four modernizations lies in the modernization of science and technology. The congress also specified science as one of the strategic priorities in modernizing our socialist economy. It stressed that the improvement of the scientific and cultural level of the people of all nationalities is an important component of the building of socialist spiritual civilization. We should profoundly understand this spirit of the 12th congress and realize the strategic position of science and technology in the creation of a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization.

Science and technology are the mainstays for striving to achieve the quadrupling of output value. The party's 12th congress decided that the whole party and nation will strive to quadruple the gross annual value of industrial and agricultural production within the two decades from 1981 to the end of this century, that is, to increase the gross annual output value from 710 billion yuan in 1980 to 2,800 billion yuan in 2000. This will be equal to the 1972 level of the United States or the 1977 level of the Soviet Union. This grand strategic objective is very inspiring and has attracted worldwide attention.

How shall we realize this quadrupling? The old method of extensively developing industry and agriculture will not help. Rather, we must take the road of relying on science and technology to improve economic results, otherwise, nothing can be successful. The realization of quadrupling output value can never succeed on the basis of old equipment, techniques, technology and products. If our standards of energy and raw materials consumption still stay at the same level and equipment and technology do not improve, the quadrupling will never be achieved. Central leaders recently pointed out that half the work in realizing the quadrupling would depend on scientific and technological progress. If we can, by 2000, widely adopt the technology already popularized in developed countries in the 1970's and early 1980's, we certainly can achieve the objective of quadrupling output value.

While developing the national economy, we can never separate economic work from science and technology. Rather, we must apply science and technology to all aspects of economic work.

We should rely on science and technology to readjust industrial structure and promote the development of energy and transportation and advantageous industries. Science and technology should also be used in other aspects, such as in scientific farming and the development of agricultural production, technical transformation in all grades and the upgrading of products, production of large-scale integrated circuits and the development of the computer and other new industries. They should also be used in the early preparation of key construction projects, achieving the result of less investment and quicker returns, effecting intensive processing and comprehensive utilization of raw materials for a better economic result, and so on.

In order to realize the quadrupling, all of our scientific and technological departments and personnel must seriously study economics and acquire a thorough knowledge of China's economic development situation, draw up programs for scientific and technological development, go in for the research of technological policy and technological development forecast, organize their strength to tackle key projects, actively participate in technical transformation of the enterprises and do a good job in managing scientific and technological bodies and in the work of collecting scientific and technological inforamtion, handling tests and trials and offering consultancy services. We call on the masses of scientific and technological workers to throw themselves into the great task of modernization construction, take an active part in the activities on the forefront of production and make contributions to the realization of the quadrupling.

Scientific and technological progress is an important condition for the building of spiritual civilization. Socialist spiritual civilization consists of two aspects -- the cultural and the ideological. Science and technology constitute both an important foundation for building material civilization and an important condition for improving people's ideological consciousness and moral standards. The development of science and technology and the raising of the scientific and cultural level of the whole nation is an important component of the building of a high level of socialist spiritual civilization.

To approach science, we need an honest attitude. Scientific research needs a scientific spirit, attitude and work style. That is to say, we should, on the one hand, be free from any mental shackles and superstitions and be bold in exploration, while on the other hand, we must base all our efforts on reality and strive for real results and must be serious, strict and meticulous while not being the least bit negligent and dishonest. When handling scientific research, we must pay close attention to information and take the achievements of our predecessors and foreign colleagues as the bases for our work and show great respect for their work and achievements. The career morality in scientific work is a manifestation of spiritual civilization and needs to be further developed under our socialist system and to be encouraged and popularized in our entire social life as an important aspect of ideological education.

Improving scientific and technological levels is an important requirement in the reform of the composition of our cadres. Comrade Yaobang pointed out in his report to the 12th party congress that reforming the leading bodies and the cadres system and ensuring that the ranks of the cadres become more revolutionary, younger in average age, better educated and more professionally competent is an important political guarantee for the continuation and prosperity of our socialist cause.

The work to make the ranks of our cadres more knowledgeable and professionally competent is closely bound up with science and technology. Lenin once said: A production manager is different from an ordinary propagandist because he must be thoroughly familiar with the process of production and have rich knowledge of production technology. Without modern professional knowledge, we will not be able to lead and administer the modernization cause. All trades need professional knowledge and need able people who are proficient in their profession to exert leadership and management.

One of the glorious historical missions of our scientific and technological circles is to help more leading cadres to master science and technology and the modern knowledge of business management skill and to transfer more scientific and technological personnel with both ability and political integrity in the prime of life to our cadre strata so as to ensure the ranks of cadres are more revolutionary, younger in average age, better educated and more professionally competent.

With the spread and implementation of the documents of the 12th party congress, the whole party and nation will certainly improve their understanding of the importance of science and technology to a new height and create a new situation in the practice. We hope that party committees and governments at all levels will effectively strengthen their leadership in scientific and technological work and take effective measures to support the development of scientific and technological work. It is hoped that comrades working in scientific and technological departments at all levels will boost their spirit, work hard to greet the emergence of this new situation and promote the development of this situation. In this respect, there are a lot of things to do and one important link is to strengthen scientific and technological work in small and medium-sized cities.

Large cities are important economic, political and cultural centers of the whole country and small and medium-sized cities are the economic, political and cultural centers of the areas where they are located and also the bridges and links between large cities and rural areas. It is of great significance to strengthen scientific and technological work in small and medium-sized cities, build these cities well and bring their role into better play.

By 1980, China had a total of 233 cities which had been formally named. Of them, 15 cities were large cities each with a non-peasant population of over 1 million. The total population of these 14 large cities was 35.09 million people. However, the number of small and medium-sized cities each with a non-peasant population of under 1 million was 208 cities, with a total population of 55.13 million. According to rough estimation, in 1980 the gross output value produced by the 15 large cities accounted for 35 percent of the gross industrial output value of the whole nation.

The taxes and profits of industrial undertakings turned over by these large cities accounted for 39.6 percent of the total throughout the country. In the same year, the gross industrial output value created by small and medium-sized cities accounted for 36.3 percent of the national total figure and taxes and profits contributed by them accounted for 37.5 percent. This shows what an important position cities hold in our national economy.

Cities will play a more decisive role in the future development of our socialist modernization. In order to achieve the strategic objective of quadrupling the gross annual national industrial and agricultural output value by the year 2000, we must bring the role of large cities and large enterprises into full play. Large cities and large enterprises have always been holding and will continue to hold an extremely important position in our nation's economic construction and scientific and technological undertakings. They constitute the main body of our nation's industry, science and technology. They are playing a role as the national economic centers and scientific and technological centers. By handling well the scientific and technological work in large cities, reforming the economic and technological structures in large cities, handling well the technical transformation in large enterprises, doing a good job in the building of large cities and large enterprises and fully tapping potential, we will bring about considerable changes in our economic construction and scientific and technological undertakings.

At the same time, we must stress the role of small and medium-sized cities. These cities have great potential because they are large in number and have broad arenas of activity. Most of them have yet to be developed and thus urgently need science and technology. A small number of them, though having been fairly developed, are still in the ascendant and full of unlimited vigor. In addition, along with the development of modernization construction, more and more small and medium-sized cities will continuously emerge. They will play an especially important role in promoting the exchange between urban and rural areas and in consolidating the worker-peasant alliance.

The building and development of small and medium-sized cities must rely on science and technology. Urban construction, industrial development, production distribution, rational utilization of energy and material resources, the development of traffic facilities, the protection of the ecological balance, the control of environmental pollution, the development of suburban agriculture and construction, the building of residential and other social welfare facilities as well as the building of spiritual civilization cannot all be properly and reasonably solved without science and technology.

In handling scientific and technological work in cities, we must continue to thoroughly implement the new scientific and technological development policy and help science and technology better serve socioeconomic development. In view of the actual conditions in small and medium-sized cities, our guidelines should give prominence to the following points:

1. It is necessary to have local characteristics. The position and function of small and medium-sized cities vary. Some are local political, economic and cultural centers, others are processing industrial cities or mineral bases, still some others are commercial collection and distribution centers. It is necessary to direct scientific and technological work at the local specific conditions, specify priorites of development, lay stress on the exploitation of resources which represent local advantages and gradually shape and develop local characteristics. In particular, we should thoroughly analyze local resources, energy and transportation conditions, market demands and capacity, employment situation, existing industrial foundation and scientific and technological capacity, never blindly seek comprehensive setups and unrealistically seek sophisticated technology, never blindly copy the development pattern of other cities.

2. It is necessary to work out long-term plans. In order to maintain and develop their role in the national economy, small and medium-sized cities must work out long-term plans and prevent themselves from merely concentrating on immediate interests. Without bearing plans for a few moves ahead in mind, one cannot make a clever move. Though some cities are now producing some superior products, they still need to develop competitive force with regard to technology and keep some technological reserves so as to maintain their competitive force in the market.

3. Stress should be placed on "liveliness" and flexibility, and development should be carried out in a flexible and deversified way. Small size, flexibility and adaptability are the advantages of small and medium-sized cities and they should make use of these advantages to bring "liveliness" to scientific and technological work in these cities. At the same time, it is necessary to strengthen information work and pay close attention to the trends of scientific and technological development and market trends. Under the guidance of unified state planning, the flexibility of each locality should be brought in to full play so as to accelerate the upgrading of products, technological innovation and technical transformation of enterprises. As regards "liveliness," this should not mean blind competition with large cities and other places for raw materials and energy resources.

4. Efforts should be made to effect the shift of science and technology in four aspects. It is neither necessary nor possible for a city, even a large city, to go in for research and experiment independently.

All cities, especially small and medium-sized ones, should be good at making use of the scientific and academic achievements scored by large cities, large enterprises, universities, research institutes and military industrial units at home as well as those scored by foreigners. They can absorb and assimulate these achievements and then apply and popularize them. This is a shortcut for raising scientific and technological level, and expanding and developing urban scientific and technological capacity. Large cities should actively give technological support and assistance to small and medium-sized cities in their development and the latter should learn advanced technology from the former. Both sides should closely cooperate and seek common development. In the course of transferring domestic advanced technology, we should set up a new type of socialist cooperation relationship. We should show respect for other people's achievements and the due rights and benefits of other people. At the same time, we should oppose the act of enforcing technological blockades with various excuses.

5. It is necessary to assist rural construction. Rural areas are bases providing raw materials for small and medium-sized cities and also markets for industrial products where there exists great potential. Scientific and technological work in small and medium-sized cities should actively serve agricultural production and rural construction in all areas. Scientific and technological work should stimulate the cities to provide the countryside with more means of production, building materials, daily consumer goods as well as technical services.

If a city lacks some necessary science research bodies with local characteristics, scientific and technological work in cities, especially in small and medium-sized cities, should be laid on strengthening and developing scientific and technological work in factories, mines and other enterprises.

The central task of scientific and technological work in factories, mines and other enterprises should be the items serving the development of production of the same enterprises, such as technological innovation and technical transformation, energy conservation, the lowering of other consumption, the improvement of quality, new designs and better economic results.

While strengthening scientific and technical work, factories, mines and other enterprises should pay attention to cooperating properly with professional science research bodies and colleges, try to apply the latter's advanced technology and popularize the latter's achievements in scientific research so as to make use of the latter's strength to tackle the technical problems concerning the development of the enterprises.

On the one hand, enterprises should gradually build up a scientific and technological force engaging in scientific research, design and trial production. On the other hand, they should mobilize and encourage workers to go in for wide-ranging activities of technical innovation. Both sides should be closely linked.

To develop science and technology and to improve the scientific and technological capacity in small and medium-sized cities, there must be three conditions: 1) able people; 2) funds; and 3) strengthened organization, management and service work. All these three conditions are indispensable.

Qualified scientists and technicians come from only these two channels -- cultivation through their own strength and introduction from other places. In the long run, training qualified personnel is a fundamental measure. For qualified people, we should not only solve the problem of their source, but should also solve the problem of bringing their role into full play. We must manage to improve living conditions for scientists and technicians. At present, the living conditions for middle-aged intellectuals are particularly hard. We should take effective steps to resolve these problems. But more important is to respect their specialities, give play to their wisdom and intelligence, improve their working conditions and promote outstanding and capable scientists and technicians to leading positions.

Leaders at all levels should be intimate friends with scientists and technicians, should study their merits, respect their duties, seriously listen to their suggestions and help them surmount difficulties in their work.

At present, many localities are short of scientific and technological funds. This will not only affect scientific and technological undertakings, but, in the long run, will also affect the development of local economic and social construction. Investment in science and technology is a kind of strategic investment which will yield ten thousandfold returns. Viewing the experience of some small and medium-sized cities which have achieved quick economic growth, we find that they have opened diversified channels to raise funds for science and technology with active support from economic, financial, planning and banking departments under the leadership of local party committees and governments. Apart from three types of funds allocated by the state, they have also transferred certain amounts of funds from the local mobile financial resources to develop science and technology. The methods they used included crediting production costs, debiting funds for innovation and technical transformation, banking loans, withdrawing profits retained by enterprises and management expenditure, making use of the income from technical transfer, technical trading and technical consulting services, and making use of the profits produced from the successful trial-production of new products. In this way they can act on a greater scale. It is our hope that party committees and governments in all places can offer support and help solve the difficulties in scientific and technological work.

Municipal scientific commissions are integrated functional departments in cities taking charge of scientific and technological work. They should play their due role under the leadership of municipal party committees and government, actively cooperate with other relevant departments, take an active part in all kinds of major economic activities, give counsel in social-economic planning and organize well the cooperation in tackling key scientific and technological problems. They should try their best to be staff departments for local party committees and governments in scientific and technological work. It is necessary to set up information organs, technological exchange and consultation service organs, qualified personnel training bases and other scientific and technological management and service departments in small and medium-sized cities and make efforts to do a good job in all types of technical service work.

ECONOMIC COMMISSION CIRCULAR ON LARGE ENTERPRISES

[Text] Beijing, 6 Nov (XINHUA) -- The State Economic Commission recently issued a circular calling on all localities and departments to manage seriously and well a number of large enterprises that have a bearing on the national economy situation as a whole, in order to enhance economic results and accelerate economic construction.

The circular says: According to 1980 statistics compiled by the State Statistical Bureau, among the 380,000 industrial enterprises in China, there were 1,020 large enterprises for which the annual profits and tax payments exceeded 10 million yuan each. They accounted for 0.27 percent of the total number of industrial enterprises and their output value accounted for 31.2 percent of China's total industrial output value, but their profits and tax payments accounted for 51.7 percent of the profits earned and taxes paid by all the industrial enterprises in China. The annual profits and tax payments of 369 of the 1,020 large enterprises exceeded 30 million yuan each. The 369 enterprises accounted for 0.097 percent of the total number of industrial enterprises, their total output value accounted for 22.5 percent of China's total industrial output value and their profits and tax payments accounted for 41.4 percent of the total profits earned and taxes paid by all industrial enterprises in China. There were some enterprises that also occupied an important position in the national economy though their annual pfofits and tax payments at the time were under 10 million yuan each due to insufficient production tasks.

The circular says: These large enterprises have comparatively more advanced technical equipment and a comparatively larger technical force. In general they have a higher level of enterprise management and production technology and have greater potential. The experience of advanced enterprises, such as the Shoudu Iron and Steel Company, shows that we can bring into full play the initiative of the enterprises and the broad masses of workers and staff, constantly tap their potential and make still greater contributions to the country as long as the state pursues correct policies and the enterprises have strong and efficient leading bodies that know how to manage, how to handle well the relations between the state, the enterprise and the workers and staff, and how to step up technical transformation. At the same time, we should see the necessity for the rapid progress and development of large enterprises which will help bring about production development and technical progress of small and medium-sized enterprises and thereby promote the development of the national economy as a whole.

The circular emphatically points out: The large enterprises are the basis on which we implement our economic policy decisions and promote our national economy. To manage firmly and well the large enterprises and make their management level, technical progress and economic results stay in the vanguard of the national economic development is of great strategic significance in accomplishing the grand objective put forward by the 12th CPC National Congress, creating a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization, achieving a fundamental turn for the better in the state financial and economic situation and quadrupling our total annual industrial and agricultural output value. Therefore, we must regard the efforts to manage well large enterprises as the stress of our economic work, enterprise consolidation, technical transformation and system reform. Only in this way can we create a new situation in our economic work.

T circular sets three demands for managing large enterprises well:

1. It is necessary gradually to attain the world's advanced level in technical progress. We should first make efforts to develop new products and upgrade products as soon as possible. We should work hard for a period of time (say 5, 10 or 15 years) to modernize the production technology of large enterprises by comprehensively introducing to them the technology that has been popularized in developing countries.

2. It is necessary to improve enterprise leadership and management greatly and modernize enterprise management.

3. By undertaking overall consolidation, technical progress and scientific management, we should surely make our major products conform to international quality standards, make our energy and primary raw and processed material consumptions catch up with and surpass the domestic and international advanced levels, and make our products have competitive power in international markets with regard to color and design, variety, quality and costs. We should steadily increase the annual profit turn-in to the state in the next 5, 10 or 20 years and attain a new level in the rates of profit in relation to output value, sales and capital.

The circular puts forward: All localities and all departments should pay attention to the consolidation of large enterprises and make a determination in selecting a number of outstanding cadres from the relevant trades who know their jobs and can create a new stuation to serve as party secretaries and plant directors. It is necessary to continue to popularize the experience of the Shoudu Iron and Steel Company and further improve the system of economic responsibility. It is necessary to pay attention to overall planning. All large enterprises should formulate intermediate-term and long-term plans for development of production, for technical transformation and for improving the living standard of the workers and staff.

The circular says: The large enterprises should be given a guarantee for their necessary production conditions. The present situation of small and backward enterprises contending with large and advanced enterprises for energy and raw materials must be improved without delay. The leading economic organs and the departments in charge of enterprises must guarantee the supply of raw a ' processed materials to large enterprises according to plan.

They may set energy consumption quotas for large enterprises and permit the latter to keep what is saved in order to encourage energy conservation by the enterprises. They should adhere to the principle of unified plan, unified policy and coordinated action in dealing with foreign firms and encourage the large enterprises to aim at the international market. The large enterprises with necessary conditions in coastal cities, such as Shanghai and Tianjin, may request the approval of relevant authorities for the power to export. The enterprises should be encouraged to use imported raw and processed materials for the production of export products which are competitive.

COMMENTARY ON IMPROVING RURAL CREDIT UTILIZATION

[Commentator's article: "Raise Funds for the Peasants To Become Prosperous Quickly"]

[Text] Rural monetary and credit work is an important lever which is used to regulate the rural economy. Over many years, it has played an important role in supporting agricultural production, helping poor peasants, promoting commodity circulation and stabilizing market prices. Thus, it constitutes an important economic strength which the peasants trust and rely on. At present, when a new situation has emerged in which people on the agricultural front are struggling to realize the grand strategic objective set forth by the 12th party congress and, in particular, under the condition that the state is striving for a radical improvement of its finances and, thus, is not able to greatly increase its investment in agriculture, the rural monetary departments are faced with an arduous task of raising more funds and more effectively redistributing funds in the rural areas so as to increase the economic results of credits and to help peasants develop production and become rich quickly.

It is completely possible for the rural monetary departments to fulfill this task. On the one hand, there are still great amounts of idle funds scattered about in the rural areas. In the wake of the responsibility system of contracting production quotas to peasant households, agricultural production has vigorously developed. Over the past 3 years, the amount of rural deposits has increased by a big margin. This has changed the previous situation in which the state had to raise its target for rural credits every year, and has broken new ground in raising funds for expanding agricultural reproduction. As long as we do a good job in propaganda and organization, try every means to attact more deposits so as to convert idle funds into credit funds, convert a section of consumption funds into production funds, speed up the turnover of funds and continuously improve the economic results of credits, we can certainly raise enormous funds to support agriculture. On the other hand, since agriculture, forestry, animal husbandry, sideline occupations and fishery have developed in a comprehensive way, specialized peasant households engaging in livestock raising, planting and processing have universally emerged and the rural commodity economy has become increasingly active. This urgently needs great amounts of funds and thus creates a broad sphere for credit work to perform its function. So long as we properly utilize credits as an effective economic lever, closely combine the necessity and the possibility, effect the idea of "applying those taken from agriculture to agriculture," and pay attention to unified arrangement and rational utilization of credit funds, funds allocated by the state financial departments and funds owned by collectives and individuals, we can certainly speed up the prosperity of the peasants' livelihood in an effective way.

To do a good job in rural credit work, the rural monetary departments are first required to emancipate minds further and eliminate the "leftist" influence. They should orient themselves to the new situation in the rural areas resulting from the introduction of various production responsibility systems and expand the objects and scope of credits. They should support scattered undertakings run by peasant households as well as collective economic undertakings, help ordinary and poor households as well as specialized and key households. They should radically change the previous practice of laying stress solely on collectives, to the neglect of individuals, so as to help both collectives and individuals to broaden production methods and develop diversification.

Second, they are required to make better use of the credit lever to help localities readjust the internal structure of agriculture according to their local conditions and to promote a comprehensive development of agriculture, forestry, animal husbandry, sideline occupations and fishery. "Never relax efforts in grain production and actively develop diversification" is the principle for developing production in the rural areas and is also a principle which credit work must follow. While supporting grain production, we should help communes, production teams and peasants, in accordance with unified local plans, to give play to local advantages and effectively exploit mountainous areas, hilly land, grasslands and water areas. It is necessary to help peasants improve production conditions and handle agricultural capital construction on the premise of maintaining the ecological balance. It is also necessary to help peasants develop commodity production services and to support seed multiplication farms, stud farms and special horticultural farms.

Credit work should further change the previous usual practice of supporting production solely in productive links and should energetically support agriculture in the whole course of agricultural production, step up the development of rural commodity production, set up the development of rural commodity production and exchange, give credits to the links of distribution, exchange and consumption as well, and use credit funds to support the building of processing, storage, transport and packing facilities for commodity production. Market information should be used to guide production so as to avoid blindness in production, to help the peasants produce agricultural and sideline products which will be marketable and help coordinate the demands of state plans and market regulation. If people engaged in credit work can succeed in these areas, credit work will certainly exert an even greater influence over the development of the agricultural economy as a whole.

The key to further developing rural credit lies in the improvement of the economic results of credits. That is to say, we should correctly handle the relationship between the input and output of credit funds and try our best to achieve the best results with the fewest funds This will call for strengthening the planned management of rural credits. Loans should be given in accordance with the laws of credits: Whether a loan is granted should be judged by whether a good economic result can be achieved or not. It is necessary to decide terms of credit in accordance with periods of production, circulation and construction and to control strictly the offering of loans so as to bring the promoting and supervising role of credit into play.

Raising, utilizing and managing rural funds constitute a matter of importance concerning the prosperity of the rural economy. It is necessary to strengthen leadership, respect the decisionmaking power of rural monetary departments, guarantee the use of credit funds while complying with the demands of relevant state principles and policies, and make credit work better suited to the needs of the peasants in developing production so as to achieve the aim of speeding up the turnover of funds, yielding the best economic results and helping the countryside become prosperous quickly.

WINTER WHEAT SOWING IN NORTH COMPLETED

[Text] Beijing, November 6 (XINHUA) -- Winter wheat planting has been completed in northern China, while sowing is underway in the south, according to the Ministry of Agriculture, Animal Husbandry and Fishery.

The ministry said, the total area sown to winter wheat this year is 1.2 million hectares more than in 1981 and field work has improved. Wheat production in northern China accounts for some three-fifths of China's winter wheat.

Shandong Province, one of the major wheat producers in China, reports completion of winter wheat planting over an area of 3.66 million hectares by the end of October.

The planting in the province started two weeks earlier than usual, and 85 percent of the fields were planted between late September and early October, considered a favorable period for sowing. With more manure and well prepared fields wheat is expected to grow well.

Another major wheat producing province, Hebei, has planted 2.37 million hectares of winter wheat, 133,000 hectares more than last year.

The province stressed scientific farming during this sowing season. Agrotechnicians toured the province to circulate new wheat growing techniques to more than 1.4 million peasants during planting season. In addition, more phosphate and cake fertilizers were used compared with last year.

'OPENING TO WORLD' IS 'LONG-TERM POLICY'

HK100224 Beijing CHINA DAILY in English 10 Nov 82 p 4

["Opinion" column: "China Aims at Long-Term Open Policy"]

[Text] China's policy of opening to the world is long-termed, says a commentary in the latest issue of the bimonthly CHINA'S FOREIGN TRADE. Highlights follow:

While China relies mainly on her own efforts in her modernization drive, she must also seek external aid as a subsidiary.

China is a developing country with a relatively weak economic foundation and backward technology. To speed economic development, China must develop economic relations with the outside world on the principle of equality, mutual benefit and exchange of needed goods. Customary international practices must be followed. These include using foreign investment, importing applicable advanced technology and equipment, running joint ventures and cooperative enterprises, compensation trade and joint exploitation of China's natural resources with overseas consortiums.

Since 1982, authorities have been cracking down on criminal activities in the economic sphere. Some friends worried that this would have an adverse effect on the implementation of China's policy of opening to the world. That will not occur.

Positive Policy

China's economic readjustment is aimed at rationalizing the structure of the national economy. It is a positive policy and the steady economic growth in the past two years provides ample proof of its importance.

As to the crackdown on criminals, this is entirely China's internal affair and will not affect her economic co-operation with other countries. Should economic criminals not be brought to bay, serious consequences would result. Obviously, a country without economic order could hardly conduct business in a smooth way.

China holds that bilateral relations can be established only when they are based on equality and mutual benefit. In the past three years, China has kept to this principle in bringing in foreign investment. All agreements, contracts and charters have been reached through consultation between Chinese and foreign firms without encroachment upon the interests of either side. Only if the interests of both are taken into account can the foreign investor profit from a joint venture in China. The legal rights, including financial rights of Chinese and foreign investors are protected under Chinese law. Both sides are equal before the law.

In setting up joint ventures, investors have asked whether the property might be requisitioned by the Chinese Government, and whether profits from the venture can be remitted abroad.

The law of the People's Republic of China on joint ventures using Chinese and foreign investment stipulates: "The Chinese Government protects, by the legislation in force, the resources invested by a foreign participant in a joint venture and the profits due him by pursuant to the agreement, contracts and articles of association authorized by the Chinese Government as well as his other lawful rights and interests." This principle has been incorporated into the draft new constitution of China.

Agreements

To promote and protect overseas investment in China, the Chinese Government has signed investment and insurance agreements and mutual protection agreements with the Governments of the United States and Sweden. The Chinese Government has been discussing agreements for the promotion and protection of investment in China with the Governments of Japan, West Germany, Canada and France. In the future, similar agreements will be signed between China and other countries. Foreign investors may rest assured that the security of their investment is guaranteed.

In case foreign assets should be requisitioned due to unanticipated factors or in the public interest, the Chinese Government will deal with this issue according to legal procedures and will make necessary compensation in a fair and responsible way.

Some firms considering investment have raised the question of the adequacy of Chinese laws and decrees and fear that some of their legal rights, such as industrial and property rights or patent and trademark rights, will not be protected under China's laws. This issue should not hamper China's economic co-operation with other countries. Though patent laws and other decrees have not yet been promulgated in China, corresponding stipulations may be incorporated into contracts for the time being. Such contracts, when approved by the Ministry of Foreign Economic Relations and Trade or by any other designated authority, will be legally binding. China is in the process of enacting economic laws and decrees regarding patents and corporation charters.

To carry out economic co-operation smoothly, China has created favourable conditions for overseas investors. Foreign investors are given such conveniences as a percentage of the products to be marketed in China and abroad, preferential treatment in taxation, and reasonable fees for the use of land.

All the efforts are meant to remove obstacles in bilateral co-operation. Future prospects are promising.

BA YI RADIO SCORES PURGING OF ARMY LEADERS

OW051113 (Clandestine) Ba Yi Radio in Mandarin to China 1325 GMT 4 Nov 82

[Text] By relying on the People's Army, the CPC eventually founded New China after prolonged armed struggle. After the establishment of the PRC, large numbers of the army's backbone forces were sent to the localities for reconstruction work. They have played an important role in the construction of New China. We can say that the army is second to none in contributing to the founding and construction of New China.

However, over the past 30 years and more, many heroes and outstanding generals have been killed because of suspicion and jealousy. This reminds us of the ruthless first emperors of the Song and Ming Dynasties. Their persecution of leading military leaders was appalling. High-ranking cadres such as Comrades Rao Shushi, Peng Dehuai and Huang Kecheng were brutally persecuted. Every few years, large numbers of marshals, ministers of national defense and leaders of the various departments of the armed services have been removed and replaced. Instead of improving, the situation actually worsened after the smashing of the gang of four.

In the wake of the 12th CPC National Congress, leading military cadres were immediately purged. Under such circumstances, how can we possibly achieve the modernization of national defense? After the convocation of the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, Comrades Ye Jianying, Chen Yun, Xu Xiangqian, Wu Xiuquan, Huang Kecheng and Zhang Aiping have on more than one occasion stressed the need for central and local leaders to proceed from giving consideration to the overall situation and to the interests of the state and the people. They called for a halt to words and deeds detrimental to stability and unity, for strengthening inner-party unity and for improving the party-army and army-government unity.

Regrettably, some central leaders do not observe the above guidelines. They continue to profess that the phenomenon of blindly believing in and worshipping Mao Zedong still exists. They also stress that there are still many leading cadres who are deeply influenced by Lin Biao and the gang of four and that their minds are still poisoned by the latter's pernicious influences. They also show distrust of leading military leaders by frequently reassigning leading comrades of major military regions and various armed services and by wantonly striking blows at veteran comrades of the army. Consequently, the existing contradictions and frictions between the party and the army and between the army and the government cannot be eliminated, and new contradictions and frictions are being generated and intensified.

It is particularly noteworthy that in the report to the 12th CPC National Congress, the call for rectifying the party's incorrect styles of work was originally aimed at rectifying the whole party. However, after the closing of the party congress the target of rectification has been directed against the leading military cadres. Veteran military cadres are forced to leave their posts for recuperation or are demobilized in the name of party rectification. Under such circumstances, how can we expect the army cadres not to have complaints against the CPC Central Committee?

In fact, the cadres are not the only ones who have complaints. Since the CPC Central Committee restricted the number of party members, many companies in the army have not been able to admit one single fighter into the CPC. With many of the qualified and outstanding fighters being excluded from the party, how can the initiative of the enlisted young people be brought into play? We can say that stability and unity within the army are imperative and that swiftly to improve the relations between the party and the army and to exercise correct party leadership over the army are the fundamental conditions for achieving the modernization of national defense.

LI DESHENG URGES ENDEMIC DISEASE PREVENTION

Li Desheng said: Emphasize efficiency in economic work and in the work of preventing and treating endemic diseases. In creating a new situation, it is unacceptable not to score results. It is necessary for us to adopt a new and magnanimous attitue, painstakingly study, draw up practical and realistic plans and take the initiative to contact the provinces, municipalities and autonomous regions in an effort to understand the situation and carry out our work still better. The local offices in charge of the prevention and treatment of endemic diseases at all levels should take the initiative to report their work to the party committees and governments in their respective areas, make suggestions and, under the leadership of the party committees at various levels and supported by the departments concerned, do a better job in endemic disease prevention and treatment.

Since the beginning of 1982, the local leading groups or offices in charge of this work have scored a number of achievements in preventing and treating endemic diseases, thanks to their understanding of the importance of this work to spiritual and material civilization. During the first half of this year, 22 provinces, municipalities and autonomous regions called meetings of their leading groups in charge of endemic disease prevention and treatment. Many leading comrades of the local party and government organizations were present to discuss how to quicken the tempo of the work. Twenty-three leading comrades from 14 provinces, municipalities and autonomous regions have conducted investigations on 27 occasions in the endemic disease-stricken areas. A dozen ministries and state commissions have volunterred to render help in solving practical problems in disease prevention and treatment.

Acting on the basis of its investigations and research work, the office of the CPC Central Committee's leading group for the prevention and treatment of endemic diseases has formulated and issued relevant standards, rules and regulations; summed up work of the prevention and treatment of diseases caused by brucellosis; and submitted recommendations on how to organize the masses in preventing endemic diseases under the new situation that has emerged in the rural areas since the institution of the production responsibility system.

Speciality training classes were also run by this office in an effort to bring up backbone forces in the prevention and treatment of endemic diseases in south China.

After hearing the briefing given him, Comrade Li Desheng praised the various localities and departments for their work in preventing and treating endemic diseases.

BO YIBO ON PUBLICATION OF WORLD ECONOMY ALMANAC

OW071340 Beijing XINHUA in English 1211 GMT 7 Nov 82

[Text] Beijing, November 7 (XINHUA) -- The publication of China's first almanac of world economy was an important achievement of China's economic theoretical circles, said Bo Yibo, state councillor, at a Beijing forum here today.

The forum was sponsored by the editorial board of the almanac, which was put on sale recently.

"We need more knowledge for modernizing our country," the state councillor added, "and the almanac will be an important instrument for disseminating knowledge. China's fir almanac of world economy is of great value for the educational, and economic theoretical workers, and the departments in charge of the practical economic work," he said.

Luo Yuanzheng, deputy editor-in-chief of the almanac, said that the 1.6 million-word (Chinese) almanac consists of five parts.

The first part is devoted to special topics on world economy, such as world grain, energy, iron and steel production, the world trade and finance, as well as the European monetary system.

The second part is a collection of economic surveys of various countries and regions including a survey of China's economy.

The three other parts, he said, are about 40 major international economic organizations and the major world economic events of 1979 and over 200 statistical tables.

"The almanac is intended to deepen our knowledge of the economic situation of various countries and regions and the trends of their development, Luo Yuanzheng said.

BO YIBO STRESSES PROPAGANDA ON POPULATION

[Text] Beijing, 6 Nov (XINHUA) -- Speaking at the national conference on propaganda in planned parenthood work which ended today, Bo Yibo, vice chairman of the Central Advisory Commission and state councillor, stressed the need to coordinate the two tasks -- quadrupling China's annual agricultural and industrial output and keeping the nation's population below 1.2 billion by the end of this century -- and synchronize their progress. He said that although planned parenthood is a long-range undertaking, the next 3 years from 1983 to 1985 is the most crucial period. Therefore, we must make definite progress in the next several years.

Bo Yibo pointed out that at present China has entered an approximately 15-year peak period in childbirth which roughly corresponds to the period for realizing the national strategic goals for economic construction set by the 12th CPC Congress. For this reason, we regard planned parenthood as a basic state policy closely related to our strategic goals, and we must persist in this policy.

On the qustion of how to step up planned parenthood work, Bo Yibo made a three-point proposal:

First, in propagating the guidelines of the 12th CPC Congress, it is necessary to include planned parenthood propaganda as a major endeavor. At present, some units seldom mention or fail to mention planned parenthood work while propagating the basic and supplementary information concerning the 12th CPC Congress. It is urged that this work be quickly included in their propaganda efforts.

Second, party committees and governments at all levels must include planned parenthood work in their daily agenda and grasp this work with the same enthusiasm as that given to production and construction, and this work should include planning, inspection, evaluation and competition. Necessary measures must also be taken to ensure the success of propaganda in planned parenthood work. The emphasis of planned parenthood work should be in the rural areas; the success or failure of planned parenthood work depends on this. It is necessary to foster among the people the idea that planned parenthood is an honorable task, so that it will gradually become a social practice.

Third, it is necessary actively to support and encourage basic level cadres and activities in planned parenthood work so that they will do their work still better. Bo Yibo said, the party and the people will never forget the achievements these comrades made in the past. It is necessary to curb erroneous acts that discriminate against or attack people doing planned parenthood work. Flagrant cases with serious consequences should be regarded as offenses against the law and be brought to trial.

Bo Yibo maintained that the planned parenthood propaganda month activities to be unfolded soon across the nation are very necessary, and that it is necessary to grasp the opportune time to do a good job in these activities.

Zhou Boping, vice minister of the State Family Planning Commission, made a summing up speech at the closing session. He pointed out that great results have been achieved in the nation's planned parenthood work, and that the situation is excellent. He said that based on information gathered during the third national census, the nation's population growth in the 9 years from 1973 to 1982 is 96.52 million less than during the 9 years from 1964 to 1973. This shows that China has achieved obvious results in controlling population growth since promoting planned parenthood work in the 1970's. Regarding this basic fact, we must have sufficient understanding. He emphatically pointed out that a pessimistic and negative attitude and a do-nothing mentality toward planned parenthood work are totally groundless. We must do our work still better based on the achievements already made.

AT the meeting responsible persons concerned of the All-China Federation of Trade Unions, the CYL Central Committee, the Women's Federation of the PRC and the Ministry of Culture spoke at the meeting. They pledged to support actively the forthcoming national planned parenthood propaganda month activities, to provide unreserved support to make the propaganda month activities a success and to call on members of the CYL, the All-China Federation of Trade Unions and the Women's Federation of the PRC as well as comrades engaged in cultural propaganda work to be activists in the propaganda month activities.

OW100311 Nanjing Jiangsu Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 9 Nov 82

Touching on the situation in united front work in the new period and the work of various democratic parties, director Yang Jingren pointed out: Since the downfall of the Jiang Qing counterrevolutionary clique and especially since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, historic change has taken place in the party and the country as a whole. Since united front work is a component part of this change, in this sense, it has also undergone a historic change. WANG BINGQIAN SPEAKS AT FISCAL WORK CONFERENCE

OW291109 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1342 GMT 27 Oct 82

[Text] Beijing, 27 Oct (XINHUA) -- Speaking at the national fiscal work conference which ended today, Finance Minister Wang Bingqian pointed out: This year new progress has appeared in our fiscal work following the end of the downward trend, which was characterized by a continual decrease in revenues in the past few years, and there should be some pick-up next year. This is a cyclical change. It tells us that conditions have been created to bring about a new situation in fiscal work. Also it indicates that it is feasible to strive to effect a fundamental turn for the better in fiscal work within 5 years.

He said: From 1979 to 1981, the state took a series of measures to adjust the national economy, especially to solve the enormous problems left over from the "10 years of turmoil." Those measures included raising the procurement prices of agricultural and sideline products, providing jobs for a great many unemployed youth, building dormitories for staff members and workers, improving employees' wages and welfare and enhancing urban construction. Large sums of money were used for the implementation of these measures. Hence the state's fiscal revenues faced a temporary downward turn. Nevertheless, those measures were of vital importance in bringing about political stability and unity and in promoting economic readjustment and development.

Wang Bingqian said: Now the nation's economy has been gradually getting better and its fiscal situation has also started to improve. Since the beginning of this year, due to common efforts by the entire party and the whole Chinese people, the implementation of the national budgetary plan has been satisfactory, by and large. From January to September, the nation's revenues have been larger than expenditures; hence there is some surplus.

He said: In order to do a good job in the new period's fiscal work, we have to solve three principal problems: First, we have to make a bigger breakthrough in fiscal revenues on the basis of expanding production and raising economic results. Second, we have to firmly maintain the balance between fiscal revenues and expenditures, even striving for a complete balance, gradually increasing our financial strength as a backing force for economic revival in the years to come. Third, we have to work out a better system for improving fiscal work, taxation and enterprise financial management. Moreover, we have to get rid of the practice of "eating from the same big pot" and work out, as soon as possible, an economic responsibility system which combines responsibilities, duties and profits. Thus, we can bring into full play the enthusiasm of the different localities, departments, units, staff members and workers. By solving these three problems, we can regain the initiative in our fiscal work, which has been passive, create a new situation and consolidate it.

Wang Bingqian emphasized: In order to make a bigger breakthrough in the coming years' fiscal revenues, we must vigorously support enterprises' technological innovations, support scientific and technological development and tap potentialities to upgrade efficiency. These are the main means of increasing revenues. We have to make adequate use of the fiscal and taxation departments' advantages of having wide connections and of being very responsive in order to support and increase production. Not only must financial and taxation departments do a good job in managing revenues and expenditures, but they must also study economic problems and fiscal and taxation policies in light of revenues and expenditures to bring into play the role of economic levers. We must consolidate the enterprises' financial management, tighten control on the assessment of targets and integrate it with the economic responsibility system within the enterprises.

We have to lay stress on enterprise's rate of profit on invested funds, turnover rate of circulating funds and profit rate on fixed assets so that we can thoroughly appraise and evaluate the economic results. Aside from putting stress on key enterprises and industries, every province has to increase production and revenues through careful planning in some selected counties during the next few years. Then the good results should be expanded to other localities.

In referring to fiscal work during this winter and next year, Wang Bingqian said: We have to follow the guiding principles of the 12th CPC National Congress, continue to implement the principle of readjustment, restructuring, reorganization and upgrading, increase revenues, strictly control expenses, allocate and utilize funds properly and ensure sufficient funds for key construction projects, especially funds for developing the energy and transportation industries. We must put emphasis on the development of education and specialized science and continue to increase expenditures in these areas. In the meantime, we must support agricultural development on a continuing basis.

The national fiscal work conference was convened in Beijing on 4 October. Attending the conference were 160 people, including fiscal department heads from every province, municipality and autonomous regions throughout the country and comrades from the concerned departments of the central government.

[Text] Beijing, November 5 (XINHUA) -- Chinese urban and rural markets are both prosperous and prices are remaining stable, said Pan Yao, vice-minister of commerce, today at the national meeting here on commercial work.

Pan Yao said, according to incomplete statistics, 56 of the 73 items that required ration coupons in 1978 no longer require coupons. Those items still requiring coupons are supplemented with additional supplies sold at higher prices.

In the first nine months of this year, total retail sales were valued at 180,900 million yuan, a 9.2 percent increase above the same 1981 period. Total sales so far this year are estimated at 256,000 million yuan, an increase of 8.9 percent above last year. Retail prices this year have been stable. The price levels for the whole year are expected to be at the levels at the end of last year.

He listed changes in the urban and rural markets this year as:

One, the supply of foodstuffs has been improved. In most places, the peasants have retained more grain for their own consumption, while supplying urban residents with more varieties of food grain. The supply of edible oil, meat, poultry, eggs, vegetables and drinks have increased.

Two, manufactured goods for daily use have increased in supply and sales of consumer goods have continued to grow. In the first nine months of this year, the sales of domestic watches registered an increase of 45 percent above the same period of last year, sewing machines 29 percent, bicycles 37 percent and T.V. sets 11 percent.

The sales of cassette recorders, electric fans, washing machines, cameras and refrigerators also increased. In some places, transactions for consumer goods have been made with payment-by-instalment arrangement. Short supplies of some daily necessities have been eased with even bigger supplies than demand as reported in some cases.

Three, more manufactured goods have been shipped to the countryside. In the first nine months, total nationwide sales of capital goods for agriculture and retail sales of consumer goods under the county level totaled 87,600 million yuan, an increase of 8.5 percent above the same 1981 period. Four, purchasing habits of consumers have changed. Reports from many places say that consumers will not buy consumer goods that are "not of famous brands, not new in design, not reasonable in price or that are not urgently demanded or that are out of season."

Some industrial goods are slow selling and over-stocked, he said.

The vice-minister said that the ministry is making plans for next year's supply to further consolidate and improve the market situation.

FUJIAN'S XIANG NAN WRITES ON ROLE OF EDUCATION

[Excerpts] Beijing, 5 Nov (XINHUA) -- Xiang Nan, first secretary of the Fujian Provincial CPC Committee, said in an article recently published in the RENMIN JIAOYU [PEOPLE'S EDUCATION] journal that to create a new situation Fujian must try to find as much money as possible to increase intellectual investment, improve education and energetically strengthen the training of competent people.

In the article Xiang Nan said: In creating a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization, Fujian's greatest difficulty is its backwardness in education and its shortage of competent personnel.

The article pointed out: The experience of some countries has shown us that it doesn't work to develop production first and then education. On the contrary, education must be developed before it is possible to develop the economy. At the very least, both should be developed simultaneously, complementing each other.

The article stressed: It is necessary to create more educational opportunities, adopt varied forms of schooling and change the practice of the state's running all education. Universities and colleges in big and medium-size cities can enroll some day students. Some continuation schools can be privately run. At present, the fastest, most economical and most effective way of training competent people is to devote major efforts to strengthen television education and run the television universities well. It is also acceptable to run short-term vocational colleges. Whether it is a full-time or half-day school, a school admitting only resident students or also day students, a part-work and part-study school or part-farm work and part-study school, a spare time school, correspondence school or radio school, state-run or collective-run, enterprise-run or privately run, it should be encouraged and supported. The hope of the country's growth and prosperity lies in everyone paying attention to learning and education so that millions of competent people can be trained quickly.

JIANGSU'S XU JIATUN ON ECONOMIC CRIME, DISCIPLINE

OW051053 Nanjing Jiangsu Provincial Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 3 Nov 82

[Text] A joint discussion meeting was held recently by the Commission for Discipline Inspection and the leading group for handling economic crimes under the Jiangsu Provincial CPC Committee.

Before the meeting closed, the provincial CPC committee secretariat heard a report and held a discussion on the results of the meeting. First Secretary Xu Jiatun of the provincial CPC committee also came to deliver a speech.

Comrade Xu Jiatun began his speech by noting that the discussion meeting was an important one, reflecting our province's efforts to act in the spirit of the 12th party congress. With regard to the current struggle against economic crime and to discipline inspections, the provincial CPC committee feels that we should affirm the achievements, sum up the experiences, pluck up our spirit and advance continuously. In the opinion of the provincial CPC committee, we should fully affirm the achievements we have made in the struggle against grave economic crimes which, generally speaking, has been developing in a safe and sound manner. More than 5,000 economic cases of various kinds have been exposed in the province as a whole. Of these, some 1,240 cases have been confirmed through investigations and closed following appropriate handling in accordance with party discipline and state laws.

Comrade Xu Jiatun pointed out that it is imperative to be unswerving in our determination to persist in this struggle for as long as it takes and to carry it through to the end. We must commit ourselves to dual tactics in ideology and action. One tactic is resolutely to implement the policy of opening to the outside world and enlivening the economy at home. The other tactic is to deal resolute blows to grave criminal offenses that are harmful to socialism in the economic sphere and in the political and cultural spheres as well. We must unify our thinking and understanding with the spirit of the 12th party congress and fully realize the nature and significance of this struggle. We must overcome and guard against any relaxation in our efforts, strive to bring about a new situation and make new achievements in this struggle with redoubled efforts.

In order to bring about a new situation in this struggle, Comrade Xu Jiatun said, it is necessary at present to continue to pay attention to the investigation and handling of major and serious cases without ignoring ordinary cases. Each locality, department and unit should map out a positive and practical plan for dealing with such cases in accordance with its actual situation. The investigation and handling of a case should be carried out in combination with the consolidation of the party organization and party style, the consolidation of enterprises, education in the need to fight corruption and the handling of the five types of people -- people who rose to prominence during the "Cultural Revolution" by following Lin Biao, Jiang Qing and their like in "rebellion," people who are seriously factionalist in their ideas, people who indulged in beating, smashing and looting, people who are opposed to the line followed by the CPC Central Committee since its third plenary session and people who have seriously violated the law and discipline in the economic and other spheres.

For the purpose of meeting these requirements, party committees at all levels must strengthen their leadership over this struggle. They should also pay practical attention to the following three points:

First, pay attention to tackling knotty problems. Principal responsible comrades of party committees should face up to difficulties, seek out and solve the key problems and promote the struggle as a whole.

Second, pay attention to policy. In line with the guidelines of the 12th party congress and the deepening development of the struggle, more meticulous and careful efforts should be made in our work with a firm resolve to act in accordance with the current policy of the party and government.

Third, pay attention to summing up experiences. The strength of economic-case handling offices at various levels if not augmented, should not be weakened. Those offices at and above the county level must all maintain a capable and relatively stable contingent of handling personnel. These offices should study conscientiously, conduct investigations thoroughly and strive to increase the quality of their handling of cases and raise their ability in waging the struggle.

In conclusion, Comrade Xu Jiatun emphatically noted the need to firmly curb the unhealthy practices that evoke the deepest resentment among the masses. At present, the strongest repercussions are caused by the unhealthy tendencies in the construction and the allotment of housing. Leaders at all levels must take the matter in their hands personally. They should see to it that stern measures are taken in time against violators of law and discipline and first of all against party members and cadres who violate law and discipline.

NORTH SEA FLEET STUDIES CPC CONGRESS DOCUMENTS

SK080903 Jinan DAZHONG RIBAO in Chinese 18 Oct 82 p 1

[Text] To unify the ideology and actions of the leading cadres at all levels, the party committee of the North China Sea Fleet recently convened an enlarged party committee meeting for the leadership and cadres at the divisional level or higher in charge of propaganda and organizational work to undergo training and study problems in vigorously strengthening the building of a spiritual civilization.

From the high plane of communist ideology and in close connection with their personal experiences and the realities of the troops, the participants, in the course of study, paid particular attention to understanding the strategic significance of strengthening the socialist spiritual civilization with communist ideology at its core.

Many veterans of the Red Army and the Eighth Route Army said with deep feeling: By relying on nothing but the guidance of communist ideas, we risked our lives in those war-ridden years and suffered extreme hardships. Many old comrades-in-arms died heroic deaths in liberating and bringing communism to China. This selfless and dauntless spirit originated in communist ideals. Facts have shown that communist ideas have long been put into practice by revolutionary fighters and communist actions have long been part of the masses' life. The view that communism is but a "dim illusion" and that it "has not been tested in practice" is utterly wrong and ridiculous.

Reviewing the enhanced ideological consciousness of the cadres and fighters, the continuously improving morality and prevailing practice, the constant improvements in work style, discipline and party spirit, the widespread establishment of emulate-Lei Feng groups and the constant emergence of good people and good deeds, many comrades deeply felt that marked changes had been taking place in the troops. These changes are mainly the results of resolute efforts to build a socialist spiritual civilization with communist ideology at its core and to educate the troops in communist ideals, ethics and discipline. They said: It is of extremely great significance that the 12th congress put forward the building of a socialist spiritual civilization with communist ideology at its core as an important characteristic of the socialist society and as a strategic policy. Therefore, we must strengthen education in communist ideology among cadres and fighters and publicize communist ideas with perfect assurance. We should both actively instill ideas in a positive way and criticize unproletarian ideas of all descriptions; both conduct systematic education in theories of communist ideology and attend to cultivating communist ideas among the cadres and fighters bit by bit in their work and practice; both successfully attend to education in ideology, ethics and discipline and pay earnest attention to the study of science, culture and general knowledge. We must also guide the cadres and fighters to correctly handle the relations between fostering communist ideas and doing their own jobs well to ensure they will have a firm faith in communism and perform their jobs well in a down-to-earth manner.

Leading cadres at all levels attending the training pledged one after another that, after returning to their units, they would go down to the troops to give lectures on the 12th congress documents, publicize what they had learned from the documents to push the study forward in the troops and ensure that the 12th congress guidelines would be earnestly implemented in the troops.

JINAN PLA UNITS STRESS IDEOLOGICAL STUDY

SK050629 Jinan Shandong Provincial Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 4 Nov 82

[Text] According to our sources, the broad masses of cadres in charge of ideological and political work in the artillery units under the Jinan PLA units have earnestly studied and implemented the 12th CPC Congress documents in an effort to enrich themselves to be political shock workers in building a socialist spiritual civilization and to train or bring up the new generation of communist successors by making use of powerful ideological and political work and setting themselves as examples in work style.

In studying the 12th CPC Congress documents, these cadres have summarized the following three ways to assume important responsibility in building a spiritual civilization:

1. All-out efforts should be made to wage a study campaign on Marxism, Leninism, and Mao Zedong Thought among the PLA units and to arm the minds of cadres and fighters with revolutionary theories. A political work cadre -- who belongs to a PLA regiment that has scored achievements in turning its backward fifth company into an advanced one by launching a study campaign in this regard -- said it well: The lack of theoretical knowledge will certainly lead to a life devoid of spirit that will also lead to the rampancy of individualism. To steel the theoretical study of Marxism, therefore, is the fundamental task for building a socialist spiritual civilization.

2. A good job should be done in conducting education on communist ideals to arouse communist consciousness, labor enthusiasm and the spirit of sacrifice among cadres and fighters. Over the past few years, the artillery units under the Jinan PLA units have commended over 10,000 cadres and fighters who have scored achievements in the buildup of the PLA units after receiving education on communist ideals. Facts have shown that communist ideals are the spiritual pillar of the people and that only by being imbued with far-reaching ideals in life and work by means of powerful ideological and political work can the people heighten in a sustained way their spirit and advance with broadened minds.

3. Political work cadres should set themselves as examples and play a leading role in fostering communist thinking and morality and accelerate progress with concrete deeds in building a socialist spiritual civilization.

DUAN JUNYI ADDRESSES BEIJING CPC CONGRESS

Streamlining Government

[Text] Beijing, November 6 (XINHUA) -- Beijing will streamline municipal government this winter and next spring and expects to complete the reorganization at the district and grassroot levels by next winter.

This prediction was made by Duan Junyi, first secretary of the CPC Beijing committee, at the 5th municipal party congress today. He called for improving democratic centralism in the party, applying the mass line and united front, and reforming the government and administration of personnel in order to cultivate cadres for the modernization program.

Duan Junyi said the purpose of the streamlining was to simplify administrative structure, coordinate work, reduce costs, improve efficiency, and oppose bureaucracy. Leading bodies at various levels will be improved and strengthened by advancing more young and middle-aged cadres. Greater emphasis should be placed on the role of districts and counties.

During the streamlining, the first secretary pointed out, the party should exercise leadership over government and institutions and enterprises in accordance with the newly adopted party constitution. It's leadership should be effected mainly in the form of ideolegical guidance, policies and supervising the selection of cadres. The role of the party organization should be to ensure that government and enterprises administer their work actively, independently and in a coordinated way, rather to replace government and enterprises.

Since only 22 percent of Beijing's present cadres attended colleges or had equal education, he said it was necessary to improve all cadres' level of Marxist theory, professional, cultural and scientific knowledge as well as their administrative ability to serve China's modernization drive in building socialism.

"There are talented people in all walks of life in Beijing", Duan Junyi said, "we should liberate our thinking, take a broad view and be good at discovering talent."

Economic Situation

[Text] Beijing, November 6 (XINHUA) -- Income for each person in the urban area of the Chinese capital increased by 40.8 percent between 1978 and 1981, while that for each peasant around the city up 70.5 percent.

This was announced by Duan Junyi, first secretary of the Beijing committee of the Chinese Communist Party at the 5th Beijing congress which opened here today. "Beijing's economy is on a healthy track of steady growth," he said.

In 1981, urban residents had an average income of 514 yuan and those in the suburbs, 227 yuan. This resulted from the growing economy in recent years. "New increases in income are expected", Duan Junyi said.

He briefed the congress on the progress and problems of economic readjustment in the capital.

After the first readjustment in the economy, he said, there was great growth in light industry and consumer goods industry. After being re-oriented, heavy industry has risen gradually.

The total output value for industry was expected to reach 22,600 million yuan this year, 28.7 percent over the 1978 figure. The output value for light and textile industry alone would probably be 59 percent more than in 1978.

In agriculture, Duan Junyi said, the job responsibility system stimulated initiative of rural peasants. Despite the serious drought from 1978 to 1981, annual grain output was kept at 1.75 million tons. "More grain will be produced this year than last year," he predicted.

The city is basically self-sufficient in vegetables and the degree of self-sufficiency is 77 percent for pork and 66 percent for eggs.

The turnover from retail trade increased at an average rate of 15 percent in recent years, and will reach 7,300 million yuan this year.

The city now has more than 6,000 individual and collective shops, eating houses and repair centers, and opened over 40 peasants' markets in the city's proper and suburbs in the past four years. "This gives convenience to the residents, enlivens the market and provides 700,000 jobs for young people," Duan Junyi said.

"The Beijing market has become a buyers' market with both purchasing and sales brisk," Duan Junyi said.

Speaking of city construction, Duan Junyi said, 10.93 million square meters of floor space had been completed in the city between 1978 and 1981. Half was built by units within the jurisdiction of the municipality, 2.7 times the amount built in the ten years of the "Cultural Revolution". "More than 4 million square meters of floor space will be completed this year," he said.

The first secretary highly commanded the achievements made in greening the city. In the past four years, more than 4.1 million trees were planted in the city's proper and suburbs in addition to 50 landscaped areas and 2 million square meters of grassy plots along streets.

Development Plans

[Text] Beijing, November 6 (XINHUA) -- Beijing aims to rank among the world's first-class cities in terms of order, morality, environment, scientific, cultural development and living standards within the next 15 years.

Duan Junyi, first secretary of the CPC Beijing committee, outlined these and other future plans for Beijing in his report at the municipal party congress here today.

At China's political center and a center for international exchange Beijing should stand in the forefront of the national drive for economic development and improvement of social morale and party working style, he declared.

Emphasis was given to building socialist relations between people, with communist ideology as its nucleus. This includes: cultural development under the guidance of communist ideology, training more specialists in scientific, technical and educational fields; compulsory junior middle school education in the coming five years in the city proper and, in the coming ten years, in the outlying counties; and the development of sparetime education for the city's three million workers.

In culture and art, the policy would be of service to the people and socialism and "a hundred flowers". Mass amateur cultural and art activities would be carried out on a large scale. The medical work would be "prevention first" and service to the people, physical culture and sports would be encouraged.

Duan Junyi noted that education in communism would have to be integrated with the current struggle in the field of ideology against the influence of capitalist, feudal and other non-proletarian ideas. At the same time, he said, it is imperative to correctly understand the relationship between education in communist ideology and the application of current policies to avoid one-sidedness in understanding and practice.

In economic matter, he said, the focus is on raising economic productivity and a development that suits the characteristics of Beijing. The city should lead in the country's economic indices of industry, agriculture, commerce, transportation and building, he said.

It was expected that the annual housing built would account for about 70 percent of total capital construction. On condition that the city size is strictly controlled, he said, the old city will be gradually transformed. Construction on the outskirts will be adjusted and more service centers be added and the outlying areas developed.

SHANXI'S HUO SHILIAN ON 12TH PARTY CONGRESS GOAL

[Text] Taiyuan, 7 Nov (XINHUA) -- Huo Shilian, first secretary of the Xhanxi provincial party committee, made a report to the members of the standing committee of the provincial party committee on his recent investigation and study tour to the countryside. He said: In order to achieve the grand goal and accomplish the strategic task put forward by the 12th CPC National Congress, it is necessary to further emancipate our minds, boldly carry out our job and strive to create a new situation in socialist modernization in Shanxi's rural areas.

In October Huo Shilian spent two weeks visiting Shanyin, Ying, Hunyuan, Guanglin, Tianzhen, Yanggao and Datong Counties, as well as Datong Municipality in northern Shanxi and had talks with many cadres and commune members in over 30 communes and brigades. Reporting to the provincial party committee, Huo Shilian said that his investigation was focused on the relatively impoverished Yanbei Prefecture. The prefecture has undergone encouraging changes since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee. This year the prefecture's total grain output reached 2,095 million jin, topping 1980 by 35.4 percent. Per capita grain output was over 960 jin. The total oil-bearing crops output increased by 166.9 percent. As production has developed, commune members' income has increased. This year the prefecture's per capita net income has risen to 208 yuan from 96 yuan in 1980, and increase of 133 percent. He said: All this is convincing proof that the goal of quadrupling the total annual value of industrial and agricultural production by the end of this century, put forward by the party Central Committee, is absolutely achievable.

Huo Shilian said: To create a new situation in Shanxi, the first thing is to further demonstrate the power of the responsibility system in fixing farmwork quotas for each household. This system is still on the rise. It should not stop here, but should be popularized in a wider area. It should not be confined to a specific field. Barren hills, slopes, beaches and other places can be contracted by means of bidding. The second thing is to pay more attention to helping peasants learn and apply science, while constantly perfecting the responsibility system. The peasants' need to use modern science and technology to achieve better production results has never been so great and urgent.

We should not keep to the conventionalways of doing things, but should foster a creative spirit, adopt new measures and extensively promote science and technology to satisfy the peasants' needs and to keep up with new development in rural areas. The third thing is to regard a diversfied economy as a strategic issue in agricultural development. To get rich and increase income depend mainly on a diversified economy. While in diversified undertakings. The fourth thing is to properly handle the relationship between key and ordinary households. Key households have made their strides and people in all fields have become rich. Now we need to grasp the two ends to bring forward the intermediate link so that the ordinary households may get rich within a short time. The fifth thing is to further vitalize the rural economy. In addition to technical services for peasants, we should also provide them with facilities for processing, transporting and marketing farm and sideline products. We should permit peasants to conduct business, produce and sell their own products and purchase and sell goods. The sixth thing is to continue to train grassroots cadres.

[Text] From 22 to 28 September, Taiyuan Municipality ceremoniously held the first session of its seventh people's congress, electing a mayor and deputy mayors to the municipal people's government. After the sixth municipal people's congress, which was held 16 years ago, the session was convened under the excellent situation in which the arduous task of stopping chaos and bringing about order has been fulfilled, the historic transition has been effected and the people throughout the municipality are studying and implementing the guidelines of the 12th CPC Congress.

Before the session, all the participants listened to a report delivered by Wang Xiujin, standing committee member of the provincial CPC committee and delegate to the 12th CPC Congress, to introduce the grand occasion of the congress and to relay its guidelines at the Hubin Hall. The opening ceremony of the session was chaired by Comrade Li Xiuren, first secretary of the municipal CPC committee and executive chairman of the session. Under the guidance of the guidelines of the 12th CPC Congress, the session proceeded in two stages. In the first stage, the achievements scored in the past 3 years or so in conscientiously implementing the line, principles and policies laid down at the third plenary session, in eliminating "leftist" influences and in industry, agriculture, municipal construction, culture, finance, trade and other fields of work were reviewed. During this period, deputies submitted 381 motions and suggestions to the congress and offered many constructive opinions on implementing the guidelines of the 12th CPC Congress, on creating a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization and on building Taiyuan into a modern city with highly developed socialist material and spiritual civilizations.

In the second stage, elections were held. Comrade Yue Weifan was elected chairman and Comrades Li Wangxian, Lai Bingliang and Qu Yongshan, vice chairmen of the standing committee of the municipal people's congress. Comrade Wang Maolin was elected mayor and Comrades Cao Xiaoyu, Jin Shiwei and Li Shulin, deputy mayors of the municipality.

In the elections, the guidelines of the 12th CPC Congress were fully embodied, the principle of building revolutionary, younger, better educated and more professional competent leading bodies was implemented and the cooperation between new and old cadres and the succession of the old by the new were realized. Responding to the call of the CPC Central Committee and putting the causes of the party and the state above everything else, many veteran comrades who enjoy high prestige and universal respect happily retreated to the second line and vigorously supported young and middle-aged cadres to shoulder the heavy responsibilities as leaders. The average age of the new mayor and deputy mayors is 53.2 years, 11 years younger than their predecessors. The session participants held that this is a younger, vital leading body that has both ability and political integrity.

HEILONGJIANG CPC URGED TO ELIMINATE '3 TYPES'

SK100426 Harbin HEILONGJIANG RIBAO in Chinese 20 Oct 82 p 2

[Excerpts of speech by Li He, standing committee member of the commission for discipline inspection and deputy director of the organization department of the provincial CPC committee, entitled: "Eliminate 'Five Types of People' From Leading Bodies," delivered at the Sixth Enlarged Plenary Session of the Fourth Heilongjiang Provincial CPC Committee]

[Text] The CPC Central Committee has a very unequivocal and resolute attitude toward elimination of "five types of people." It is easier for us to spot, differentiate and handle the last two types of the "five types of people." Here I would like to talk mainly on the work of eliminating "three types of people" from leading bodies and handling the cadres who committed mistakes during the "Cultural Revolution." Our province has achieved remarkable results in this work over the past few years. However, we can still find many problems if we measure the work by the guidelines of the 12th CPC Congress. Some comrades who committed mistakes during the "Cultural Revolution" and who are not suitable for remaining in leading posts or key departments have not been transferred or removed. Some units have newly discovered that among their leading cadres some did not have clean hands during the "Cultural Revolution." A few units continue to promote such people or put them in important posts. Some have done an uneven job in handling cadres who committed mistakes. Some have again tried to turn big problems into small ones and small problems into no problem at all in treating situations in which facts are clear and conclusions have been reached. Some have not done their political and ideological work sufficiently.

The major reasons for the above-mentioned problems are:

1. Some leading comrades are obtuse in their thinking and underestimate the potential and danger of the "three types of people."

2. Some leading comrades have selfish ideas and personal considerations and an impure party spirit. Some try to be good old men, afraid of offending others and not daring to adhere to principles. Some persistently shield those who "did them a favor by protecting them" during the "Cultural Revolution," for which they feel grateful, or always have the same views as such people. Some have rather deep "feelings" toward, and cannot spare the sensibilities of, those with whom they have worked together for more than 10 years. Some have misgivings because they themselves do not have clean hands or have connections with such people.

3. Some leading comrades pay no attention to political quality when they choose people for certain jobs. They one-sidedly emphasize professional competence. They are unwilling to remove those who have glib tongues and professional skills, who are competent in making money and doing their work and whom they can use without difficulty.

4. Some leading comrades are hesitant, try to wait and see and cannot make decisions for so long because they are afraid that they cannot fully understand the demarcation line in applying policies.

5. Some leading bodies are lax and weak, which has adversely influenced the handling of the "three types of people" and the cadres who committed mistakes.

We should resolutely implement the guidelines of the 12th CPC Congress and do a better job in eliminating the "three types of people" and handling the cadres who committed mistakes during the "Cultural Revolution."

In order to do this work well, we should fulfill the following tasks: Further enhance understanding, particularly the understanding of leading persons at all levels; make clear the scope and priority of the elimination work; make strict checks; pay attention to the mastery of policies; vigorously do ideological and political work; and strengthen party leadership over the work.

SHENYANG PLA'S LI DESHENG ON COMMUNIST EDUCATION

[Article by Li Desheng, "Commander of the Shenyang PLA units," entitled "Vigorously Conducting Communist Ideological Education and Train Successive Generations of Socialist-Minded People of a New Type"]

[Text] Comrade Hu Yaobang pointed out in his report on the 12th CPC Congress that while working for a high level of material civilization, we must strive to build a high level of socialist spiritual civilization and that in production and construction, we should not only try to turn out more and better material products, but also train successive generations of socialist-minded people of a new type. The Jilin paper mill is a large factory staffed with more than 9,000 workers. Shouldering very heavy production tasks, the party committee of the mill still persistently enhances the communist ideological consciousness of militiamen and young people through strict military and political training in a form of militia organization and through education with positive materials to imbue them with communist ideology in the course of fulfilling various tasks. By doing so, the party committee has effected a great change in the thinking and mental outlook of the masses of militiamen and youth. It has not only upgraded the quality of militia military and political training and successfully fulfilled the tasks of the training, but also greatly promoted production and improved order in and outside the mill. Its experiences are good and worth popularizing. In the course of studying and implementing the guidelines of the 12th CPC Congress, we should strengthen ideological building and conduct thorough and persistent education in communist ideology so as to train more soldiers and militiamen with lofty ideals, moral integrity, education and a sense of discipline.

The people's communist consciousness does not rise spontaneously. It can only be gradually arouse and developed through education and our efforts to instill it. Marx and Engels pointed out in the "Communist Party Manifesto" that education is a weapon by which the proletariat can emancipate itself and all of mankind. Lenin once said that communist ideology can only be instilled from the outside. Communist ideology is the guiding ideology for our undertakings. To persistently educate the masses of party members and the people with communist ideology is a fine tradition of our party and our army. As far back as in the revolutionary war years, Comrade Mao Zedong stressed the need to widen propaganda on communist ideology and to intensify the study of Marxism-Leninsim. The communist ideological education has trained for our party and army large numbers of cadres and thousands upon thousands of combat heroes and model persons and has cultivated the fine idea and work style of serving the people wholeheartedly and of fearing neither hardship nor bloodshed and sacrifice. It has enabled our army to develop, from small to large and from weak to strong, into an impregnable army whose prowess can make the enemy tremble with fear.

Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, the army and militia units in our region have conducted education in spiritual civilization and in the idea that it is most glorious to serve the people. They have from various angles helped cadres, soldiers and militiamen foster lofty communist ideals and enhance their communist ideological consciousness. However, we should clearly see that the overwhelming majority of soldiers and militiamen are young people who were born after the founding of the PRC and grew up during the 10-year turmoil. They lack regular, systematic education and the cultivation of communist theories. Some of them still have the nonproletarian ideas of doing everything for money's sake, of giving too much thought to selfish interests and of admiring the capitalist way of living. Only through intensified propaganda and education on communist ideology can we effectively resist corrosion by the various nonproletarian dieas and maintain the purity of the revolutionary ranks.

In conducting the communist ideological education, we should take Comrade Deng Xiaoping's opening address as a guide, conscientiously study the documents of the 12th CPC Congress and thoroughly understand their spirit. The party set forth at the congress a general task for creating a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization.

Armed forces departments at all levels should mobilize and organize the masses of militiamen to conscientiously study and implement the congress guidelines under the leadership of local party committees and governments at all levels so as to contribute to socialist modernization. The experiences of the Jilin paper mill told us that while concentrating our efforts on economic construction we should not fix our eyes only on things of substance to the neglect of the people. Vigorous and creative socialist undertakings are created by millions upon millions of people themselves. Without the soaring labor enthusiasm of millions of people, without the creative spirit of thousands of production units and without the energetic struggle of all localities and departments, it is impossible to create a new situation in socialist construction. What do we rely on to bring into play the labor enthusiasm, the creative spirit and the energetic struggle? We rely on the communist ideological educatio To develop socialism step by step, we should not only rely on the increase in material wealth but also rely on the people, large numbers of a new type of people with communist ideological consciousness. All units should take the documents of the 12th CPC Congress as a guide to conduct extensive communist ideological education, through which to get rid of the view that communism is but a "dim illusion" and to clearly understand that the realization of communism, which is certain, is determined by the objective laws governing the social development of mankind. However, the realization of communism needs time. It requires us to stand on our present foundation and to work hard for many generations. It requires us to eliminate the influence of the view that "communism has not been tested in practice" and to clearly understand that communism actually exists in our lives. The history of communism, as an ideology and a movement, covers more than 100 years. So long as we plunge into the great socialist revolution and construction, we will hear the steps of communism marching successfully forward. We should overcome the idea that to "foster communist ideology will cause losses" and make it clear that communist ideology is as indispensable as cloth, silk, beans and grain -- daily necessities -- to the growth of young people. We should free ourselves from the restrictions of individualism and enter the great world of communism. We should arouse our high political enthusiasm for building a modern motherland to contribute our wisdom and efforts to the great cause of opening up a new situation.

We should adopt flexible and diversified forms of education and diffuse the communist ideological education to all aspects of social life. The proper political educational course for the PLA units and militia is very limited. This requires us to learn from the Jilin paper mill to open more outlets, broaden our field of vision and ask for advice from all quarters in the course of conducting communist ideological education. Judging from the experiences gained by some units, such ways of doing things as combining education with the study of the works by Marx, Lenin and Mao Zedong, thoroughly studying and understanding old theories and fostering proletarian world outlook; combining education with the unfolding of activities on spiritual civilization in order to lead our people to study communism bit by bit and to foster lofty communist values; combining education with lectures on the modern history of China and the revolutionary history of China so as to further foster patriotic ideology; and to correctly handle the relations of interests among the state, the collectives and the individuals; and conducting communist ideological education persistently and uninterruptedly will enable communist ideology to nurture the cadres, fighters and the militiamen to grow up strongly and healthily like the life-giving spring breeze and rain. We should also conduct education with advanced exemplary cases. Young people have a strong sense of imitation. If we set examples for them and conduct education on discipline and images of models among them, generally speaking, we will achieve relatively good results. Those revolutionary martyrs who sacrificed their lives for the sake of achieving communist ideals, those revolutionaries of the older generation who devoted their lives to revolutionary struggles and those advanced personages who work selflessly to serve other poeple are all great practitioners in the communist movement. They are shining with the brilliance of communist ideology.

We should lead the cadres, fighters and militiamen to learn from the advanced and, like them, to integrate communist ideals with the spirit of doing solid work, to set examples now and from one's initiative and to fulfill all tasks in a down-to-earth manner. The most important and convincing examples are the exemplary role of leading cadres at all levels. This does not mean that all leading cadres must serve as models but means that all educators must first receive education themselves.

Leading cadres must set good examples. As the saying goes: People will obey those who work righteously and disobey those who work unrighteously. Whether the leading cadres have played an exemplary role has a vital bearing on the great issue of whether communist ideological education can achieve great success. We must promote the glorious traditions of the war years of bearing hardships first and enjoying comforts second; of fighting in the vanguard first and retreating from the vanguard second. Like the people's armed forces department of the Jilin paper mill, we must urge cadres of armed forces departments to take the lead in doing whatever can be achieved by the militiamen. They must have the courage to call others to learn from them in the course of implementing regulations, to call others to imitate them in military training and to call others to follow them in fulfilling arduous tasks.

The strength of examples is boundless. Such a group of good cadres will surely bring up good and proficient ranks. The militia is an armed forces mass organization under the leadership of the party, a vital force on the production front and an important force for building the socialist spiritual civilization. The PLA units and militia of our military district must serve as vanguards and backbone cadres in the course of building spiritual civilization. Under the encouragement of the 12th CPC National Congress, we must thoroughly and protractedly conduct education on communist ideology, actively foster new persons with communist consiciousness, make contributions to fulfilling all strategic tasks set forth at the 12th CPC National Congress and create a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization and in the building of PLA units and militia.

LIAONING FORUM URGES MASS DISCUSSION OF PLANS

SK090409 Shenyang Liaoning Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 8 Nov 82

[Excerpts] In order to hold mass discussions on ways to quadruple industrial and agricultural output value at the end of this century in Liaoning, the provincial CPC committee and the provincial people's government sponsored a joint forum this morning on mapping out plans for social and economic development, with the participation of over 700 experts, scholars and managerial workers from various circles, including scientific and technological, economic and theoretical fronts. The forum aims at arousing the people throughout the province to actively join in mass discussions.

Comrade Shen Yue, secretary of the provincial CPC committee, and Comrade Wang Guangzhong, standing committee member of the provincial CPC committee and deputy governor of the province, made mobilization speeches in which they made concrete arrangements for the discussion.

In his mobilization speech, Comrade Shen yue stressed: In discussing ways to map out provincial plans for social and economic development, we must pay attention both to our favorable conditions and to our practical difficulties and arduous tasks.

After analyzing the favorable conditions of our province, Comrade Shen Yue stated: To fulfill the target of quadrupling industrial and agricultural output value at the end of this century means that we should increase the output value from 53.3 billion yuan in 1980's to 220 billion yuan in 2000, increasing 8-9 billion yuan in this regard each year. This is an arduous task for us to fulfill and is not only the concrete task of fulfilling output value, but also the unified mission of upgrading overall social economic results, achieving the speed of economic development and of developing construction and science and technology. Therefore, not only is it necessary to enhance confidence in tasks, but also to adapt an attitude seeking truth from facts toward concrete difficulties. By conducting thorough investigations and realistic studies, we should map out feasible plans.

In line with the actual situation in the province, Comrade Shen Yue put forward the following nine matters for discussion: 1) how to do a good job in developing water and energy resources and in utilizing them in an austere way; 2) how to develop science and technology and education and train experts; 3) how to bring into full play the role of existing enterprises; 4) how to accelerate agricultural development; 5) how to conduct enterprise reorganization and integration and enact specialized technical coordination; 6) how to accelerate development of the collective economy; 7) how to effectively prepare for the construction of earlier stage key projects; 8) how to strengthen economic cooperation with foreign countries and do a good job in exports; and 9) how to do a good job in birth control.

In his speech urging people to join in mass discussions on mapping out provincial plans for social and economic development, Comrade Wang Guangzhong announced establishment of 18 groups in charge of discussions on 18 special topics and set forth a period from November 1982 to July 1983 for carrying out mass discussions and planning formulation.

The provincial CPC committee called on leading personnel of departments concerned throughout the province, experts, scholars and personages of various circles to actively join in mass discussions to suggest ways and means for quadrupling industrial and agricultural output value in the province at the end of this century.

LI DESHENG AIDS IN SHENYANG CLEANUP CAMPAIGN

SK080353 Shenyang Liaoning Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 7 Nov 82

[Expert] This morningover 1.2 million people in Shenyang took part in cleaning up streets and lanes, mining and industrial enterprises, government offices, schools and residential compounds. Li Desheng, member of the CPC Central Committee's Political Bureau and commander of the Shenyang PLA units, and major responsible comrades of the Liaoning Provincial CPC Committee, the Shenyang Municipal CPC Committee, the Shenyang PLA units, the provincial and Shenyang Municipal People's Congress Standing Committees, and government and CPPCC committees took part in the general cleanup, together with the people of Shenyang.

The Shenyang Municipal People's Government recently decided to carry out general cleanup shock week activities during the week beginning 7 November. This is another unified action inspired by the 12th congress guidelines for further promoting the "five stresses and four beauties" and continuing to eliminate uncleanliness, disorder and impoliteness.

Li Desheng and many leading comrades of the province and Shenyang PLA units, brooms in hand, were full of zest this morning while sweeping refuse and fallen leaves in Zhongshan Park. While sweeping, Comrade Li Desheng said to comrades of departments concerned: It is not an easy job to transform an established practice. It calls for a system of dividing up the work and assigning a part to each individual or group. There should be people to check on this work on a regular basis.

NINGXIA REGIONAL CPC COMMITTEE MEETS 21-25 OCT

HK051400 Yinchuan NINGXIA RIBAO in Chinese 26 Oct 82 pp 1, 2

[Report: "Fourth Regional CPC Committee Holds Fifth (Enlarged) Session"]

[Text] The Fourth Ningxia Hui Autonomous Regional CPC Committee held its Fifth (Enlarged) Session 21-25 October. The main task of this session was to profoundly study and implement the spirit of the 12th CPC Congress and draw up plans for the work of this winter and next spring. Members and alternate members of the regional CPC committee and main responsible comrades of the Ningxia Military District, various units at prefectural level and CPC committees of various prefectures, municipalities and counties (districts) attended the session.

All the participating comrades listened to reports on the spirit of the 12th CPC Congress and carried out heated discussion in light of their own practical conditions. Through the study, they deepened their understanding of the spirit of the documents and received a profound education. The aim of unifying understanding, enhancing morale and heightening confidence was attained.

In the course of the conference, Comrade Li Xuezhi, on behalf of the regional CPC committee, delivered a report entitled "Strive for Accomplishing the Great Tasks Set by the 12th CPC Congress." He also spoke when the session closed. Comrades Xue Hongfu, Hei Boli, Li Yunhe and others also delivered speeches at the session.

In his speech, Comrade Li Xuezhi, first of all stressed that the work of studying, propagating and implementing the 12th CPC Congress documents should be grasped as a key task. He added: The 12th CPC Congress documents are brilliant Marxist documents which have substantial content and profound implications. To master the basic spirit of the 12th CPC Congress documents, we should take Comrade Deng Xiaoping's opening speech as a guide, put forth a lot of effort to read the original texts, peruse them word by word and sentence by sentence and carry out discussions on special topics so as to profoundly understand the correct programs for creating a new situation in the field of socialist modernization, the programs for party building during the new period and the significance of cooperation between new and elderly cadres and the succession of the old by the new in the leading circles of the party organizations at all levels. He went on to say: We should carry out the study in light of our own ideological reality, continue to eradicate the "leftist" and rightist ideological influence and remain completely in line with the CPC Central Committee ideologically and politically. Party organizations at all levels should strengthen leadership and continuously deepend the study of the 12th CPC Congress documents.

While talking about the objectives of struggle in our region's economic construction for the next 20 years, Comrade Li Xuezhi said: According to the plans worked out by the central authorities, the objectives of struggle of our region will be completed in two stages.

During the first 10 years, main efforts must be exerted to tap potentials and fully utilize the production conditions and capability of the existing enterprises so as to lay a solid foundation for quadrupling the economy. During the second 10 years, we will enter the period of vigorous development and the quadrupling of the total output value of industry and agriculture will be realized. At present, due to the fact that we have the wise and correct leadership of the CPC Central Committee, the people of various nationalities who work hard and the positive and negative experiences and lessons drawn from socialist construction, in addition to our region's comparatively strong material and technological foundation and the superiority of natural resources for developing the economy and potentials of production, it is completely possible for us to attain the objective of quadrupling the economy. However, we should also realize that we still encounter many difficulties in economic development: The complexity of ecological systems in various localities; the imbalance in the economic development of the society; the restrictions on agricultural development imposed by various natural factors; the insufficient capability to combat natural calamities in the southern mountain area; improper structures and severe imbalance in industrial production; poor technological power; low utilization ratio of facilities; inefficient economic returns; backward science and technology; and rapid growth of population. All these have shown that great efforts are needed in order to quadruple the economy.

Comrade Li Xuezhi said: In the process of carrying out economic construction in our region, we should stick to the practice of seeking truth from facts, proceed from reality and pay attention to handling the following relations well: First we should efficiently handle the relations between self-reliance and the support provided by the state. Ours is an economically backward region and we need the help and support of the state. However, all our work should be based on self-reliance and hard struggle. We should do our best to increase production and practice economy, tap new resources and economize on expenditures, put an end to waste and concentrate our financial and material resources for the accomplishment of the key projects. Second, we should efficiently handle the relations between tapping the potentials of the existing enterprises and accomplishing new projects. With regard to large and medium-size projects arranged by the state, measures should be taken to ensure their accomplishment. We should use and manage them effectively and bring their production capability into full play. However, we should devote our main efforts to bringing the production capability of the existing enterprises into full play and tapping their potentials in production. Third, we should efficiently handle the relations between economic returns and growth rate. Quadrupling production is not only a concept of output value, but also a unification between economic returns and speed. Economic returns in our region are very poor. In the future, we should pay attention to speeding up the growth rate under the precondition of enhancing economic returns. Fourth, we should efficiently handle the relations between the expansion of production and the development of education and science. Education, science and technology in our region are backward and we lack talented persons. Therefore, we should be willing to invest in the exploitation of intellectual resources, strengthen educational work and attach importance to training qualified personnel and applying our achievements in science and technology. Fifth, we should efficiently handle the relations between construction in plains areas and that in mountain areas. Natural conditions in the mountain area of the southern part of our region are poor and the growth rate is slow. However, mountain areas account for three-fourths of the total cultivated areas of the region and the population in the mountain areas makes up about 50 percent of the agricultural population of the region. Therefore, under normal conditions, the grain output of the mountain areas should make up one-third of the total grain output of the region and edible oil output should account for more than 50 percent of the total edible oil output of the region. We should correctly understand the importance and role of economic construction in our region's mountain areas in quadrupling production by the end of this century. While working out plans, the departments concerned should give consideration to both mountain and plains areas, pay particular attention to their specific conditions and adopt an overall point of view with regard to the distribution of funds and materials. While carrying out economic construction, both plains and mountain areas should give play to their strong points and avoid the weak ones in light of their own specific conditions, fully utilize their own advantages and support each other.

Sixth, we should efficiently handle the relations between the production of materials and planned parenthood. Since liberation, the population in our region has increased by 220 percent, an average annual rate of increase of 3.7 percent. Such population growth ranks first in the whole country. Because of the rapid growth of population, our region has become an importer rather than an exporter of grain and edible oil. Therefore, party organizations at all levels should pay attention to both "material production and planned parenthood" and grasp well the work of curbing population growth.

Comrade Li Xuezhi pointed out: During the period of the two decades between 1981 and the end of this century, we will quadruple the annual total output value of industry and agriculture and our people will be comparatively well off. This is a very glorious and arduous task. Without working hard and without an indomitable spirit we will not be able to accomplish our tasks. A 1,000 li journey starts with the first step. The success of the 20 years will be determined by the achievements made during the first 10 years, and the achievements of the first 10 years will be determined by the work accomplished during the initial 5 years. During the period of the initial 5 years, we should effectively carry out economic work to "affect a fundamental turn for the better in three aspects" and accomplish the key task of creating a new situation. From now on, we should firmly grasp various work and must not slacken our efforts in this respect. In this winter and next spring, while implementing the spirit of the 12th CPC Congress, we should further strengthen our leadership over rural work, continue to improve and stabilize the responsibility system in agricultural production and succeed in training in rotation basic-level cadres of communes and production brigades. We should encourage the masses to discuss the way to "get rich as early as possible," vigorously expand specialized and key peasant households, explore new channels for developing diversified economy and promote the work of making preparations for ploughing and sowing and spring production. Industrial and communication enterprises should discuss the way to "expand themselves by mainly relying on the enhancement of economic returns," further succeed in carrying out readjustment, cutting down consumption, reducing production costs and increasing income and economizing on expenditure, making up deficits and increasing surpluses and promoting safety in production. Other trades and services should also carry out discussions on special topics in light of their own practical conditions and characteristics to bring the enthusiasm of the masses into full play, do their own work well and make due contributions to creating a new situation.

With respect to streamlining government organs, Comrade Li Xuezhi said: According to the spirit of the instructions issued by leading comrades of the central authorities to provinces, municipalities and autonomous regions that the task of streamlining government organs at prefectural and municipal levels should be accomplished as early as possible, the work of streamlining government organs at district level should start right now. We plan to do the work in two steps. The first step we will take is to carry out experiments at selected points, and the second is to carry out the streamlining work in full swing. We should do our best so that the tasks can be basically accomplished by next February or March. The work of streamlining government organs at prefectural and municipal levels should be simultaneously carried out with that of prefectural government organs. Comrade Li Xuezhi said again: Streamlining government organs is a matter of primary importance. We must have great determination, work carefully, adopt appropriate methods and go about things steadily and surely. Our region is smaller than other provices and regions. Our government organs might not be the same as those at the higher levels. We should not demand uniformity in streamlining government organs since our conditions might not be the same as those of other fraternal provinces and regions. We should do our utmost to carry out division of labor rationally, define the duties incumbent on each organ and streamline administration. This will be beneficial to overcoming bureaucracy and enhancing efficiency in work. Party organizations at all levels should strengthen ideological education and organizational leadership over the work of streamlining government organs and carry out painstaking and careful ideological and political work. They should conscientiously stick to the mass line. The setting up of government organs, their authorized size and the formation of leading bodies should not be determined by a tiny number of people.

The work should be accomplished by encouraging the broad masses of office cadres to take part in it. We should pick up the good and select the capable for public posts in order to form and build good leading bodies. We should be bold in promoting to leading posts young and competent cadres who have both ability and political integrity and are able to create a new situation in work. Those people of the "five categories" should be resolutely cleared out of the leading bodies. Once we discover any of these people, we should expel the person immediately and handle the case without delay. However, we should not launch a mass movement. According to the principle of "maintaining political treatment in principle and a slight increase of the living standard," we should make proper arrangements for veteran cadres. If they are still physically sound and can do certain work, we should continue to give play to their role. We should train cadres in rotation in a planned way, step by step, and organize them to study cultural knowledge and various practical skills. Various units should resolve to exert great efforts and overcome various difficulties to do this work well.

In his speech, Comrade Li Xuezhi talked about the problem of building socialist spiritual civilization, with vigorously strengthening communist education as its kernel. He stressed: The main targets of communist ideological education are party members, cadres and youths. Party members and cadres should be organized systematically to study the basic theories of Marxism and carry out communist education. Through communist education, we will help cadres firmly foster communist ideology, heighten their belief in communism, correct the erroneous viewpoint that communism is "distant and indistinct" and consciously strive for communism. We should provide youths with more education in the communist outlook of life and world outlook as well as revolutionary traditions so that they will heighten their confidence that communism is bound to win, enhance their national pride and sense of dignity and gradually foster their communist world outlook. We should educate the masses so that they correctly understand and advocate the communist attitude of labor and stick to the principle of distribution according to work and correct the erroneous ideas of "working according to pay" and "taking money as the end-all." Through education, there will be more and more new people who have ideals, morals and culture and who observe discipline. We should persist in carrying out the activities of "five stresses and four beauties" in order to promote the building of the socialist spiritual civilization. We should conscientiously implement the party policy for nationalities and strengthen the propaganda aimed at promoting unity among nationalities. We should vigorously propagate the ideas of "two nondeviations" to promote the socialist relations of nationalities based on equality, unity and mutual help. At the same time, under the guidance of communist ideology, we should greatly strengthen cultural building, enrich the masses' spiritual life and enhance the cultural and scientific levels of the people.

While talking about the problem of developing socialist democracy, Comrade Li Xuezhi said: We should closely link the building of socialist democracy with the establishment of the socialist legal system, further strengthen propaganda, enhance the sense of the legal system of cadres and masses and resolutely deal blows to severe economic criminals, counterrevolutionary elements and other criminal elements who harm the security of society.

Comrade Le Xuezhi pointed out: Initial results have been achieved in our region in dealing blows to economic criminal activities. However, what we have done so far is still far from what the party has demanded. The present main problem is that some leading cadres lack the understanding of the significance of this struggle and the severity of the criminal activities. Therefore, they fear difficulties. Interference and obstructions have occurred in the process of handling these cases. Progress is slow and the rate of winding up the cases is low. Party committees at all levels should sum up the experience in previous work, constantly raise their ideological understanding, effectively strengthen leadership, overcome various obstructions and interference, speed up the handling of bases, firmly grasp the work of investigation and the handling of big and impotant cases, enhance the rate of winding up cases and strive to achieve marked results.

While talking about the problem of party consolidation according to the new party constitution and analyzing the present conditions of party organizations in our region, Comrade Li Xuezhi pointed out: Party consolidation means, first of all, ideological consolidation. At present, we should conscientiously organize party members to study well the 12th CPC Congress documents. In this study campaign, we should provide party members with education in the following five areas: First, through education on communist ideology and morality, we should enable all party members to solidly foster the ideas of serving the people wholeheartedly and strive to attain this objective all their lives. Second, we should carry out education on the party's line, guiding principles and policies so that party members will consciously uphold the four basic principles and resolutely stay in line with the CPC Central Committee ideologically and politically. Third, we should carry out education on opposing capitalist ideology, remnant feudal ideology and other nonproletarian ideology so that party members will constantly heighten their capability to resist corrosion and avoid peaceful evolution. Fourth, we should carry out education on the basic knowledge of the party so that party members know how to be qualified Communist Party members. Fifth, we should carry out education on policy for nationalities and strengthen unity among nationalities. We should also carry out education on atheism so that party members will consciously uphold materialism. Comrade Li Xuwzhi added: Various localities and departments should now select points where experimental party consolidation will be conducted. We should organize forces and actively carry out work so that experiments in party consolidation will be completed by next spring. After that, according to plans worked out by the CPC Central Committee, we will carry out the work of party consolidation in turn and by stages. In the meantime, we should continue to rectify the party's basic-level organizations and try our best to accomplish the task of rectifying those party organizations at the grassroots level which are in a state of paralysis or semiparalysis.

Comrade Li Xuezhi said: The regional CPC committee has decided to hold the fifth party congress next May or June. The fifth regional people's congress will be held prior to this. He expressed hope that various localities and departments would conscientiously do the preparation work.

In conclusion, Comrade Li Xuezhi stressed: The key to creating a new situation lies in the mental attitude and work style of leading cadres at all levels. He urged leading cadres at all levels to further emancipate their minds, foster lofty ideals and firm determination for changing the present conditions of their own units, integrate the revolutionary spirit of daring to fight and blazing new trails with scientific attitude, carry out investigation and study, go down to factories and rural areas to study and solve new problems, sum up new experiences and turn policy into the conscious actions of the broad masses of cadres and people so that the tasks set by the 12th CPC Congress will be truly accomplished.

All participating comrades conscientiously discussed Comrade Li Xuezhi's speech. They unanimously held that various tasks set by the regional CPC committee are in accord with the basic spirit of the 12th CPC Congress and our region's practical conditions and that these tasks could be accomplished if they exerted great efforts. In the discussion, all those present put forward good proposals and suggestions. They pledged to encourage the broad masses of cadres of people to conscientiously study the 12th CPC Congress documents in light of the practical conditions in their localities, departments and units, sum up historical experience, study ways to employ effective measures and methods for implementing the spirit of the 12th CPC Congress and work out plans for creating a new situation. They were also determined to hold high the communist banner, inspire their spirit, open up the path for making new progress, work with unswerving determination and strive for the accomplishment of various fighting tasks set by the 12th CPC Congress!

URUMQI PLA'S XIAO QUANFU ON 'LEFTIST' IDEAS

[Report: "Xiao Quanfu, Commander of Urumqi PLA Units, Writes Article on Consciously Eliminating 'Leftist' Influence, Adhering to Party's Correct Line"]

[Text] Xiao Quanfu, commander of the Urumqi PLA units, wrote an article in which he demanded that soldiers and commanders pay attention to three matters: 1) taking a correct attitude toward studying and thoroughly understanding the documents of the 12th party congress; 2) overcoming one-sidedness and blindness in their minds; and 3) acting according to the principles of the party spirit and rigorously enforcing party discipline. [Paragraph published in boldface]

High level cadres must take the lead in eliminating the "leftist" influence and following the correct line. Only then can they lead all soldiers and commanders of our units to maintain a political stand taht is at one with that of the party Central Committee and implement the spirit of the 12th party congress down to the grassroots level. This is the viewpoint of a signed article by Comrade Xiao Quanfu, commander of the Urumqi PLA units.

The article is entitled "Consciously Eliminate 'Leftist' Influence and Firmly Adhere to the Party's Correct Line." By citing many facts, the article, armed with the spirit of the 12th party congress, refutes the "leftist" erroneous viewpoints spread by some people in the previous period. When he told this reporter his ideas in writing this article, Xiao Quanfu said: many facts show that the influence of "leftist" ideology still exists among some of our comrades. Taking the Urumqi units as an example, some comrades indeed fail to point out the mistakes of the article which spread erroneous ideas. They cannot draw a line between right and wrong in theory. This has sounded the alarm for us. If this tendency develops unchecked, it will lead to a dangerous result. Party cadres, especially high-level cadres, must maintain a clear-cut political stand that is at one with that of the party Central Committee. Comrade Xiao Quanfu identified three matters which must be correctly handled at present:

1. It is necessary to take an earnest and realistic correct attitude toward study, thoroughly understand the documents of the 12th party congress and unify thought and action with the congress spirit. Some comrades can present a large set of theories to vindicate their loyalty to the party. But when asked about the spirit of the 12th party congress, they cannot answer clearly. Other comrades do want to implement the congress spirit, but do not know how to proceed. In some units, leading comrades cannot unify their thoughts. The cause of all these problems is an incorrect attitude toward study. The study of the 12th congress documents is a long-term task. The attitude of being content with only a smattering of knowledge is very harmful. So, we must correct our attitude in studying the 12th congress documents. Only when we really understand the congress spirit and gain good mastery over it can the influence of "leftist" ideology be thoroughly eliminated so that we can really enhance our consciousness in implementing the party's line, principles and policies.

2. It is necessary to overcome one-sidedness and blindness in our minds. Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, the party's line, principles and policies have all been put on the correct course of Marxism-Leninism. However, owing to their erroneous ideological line, some comrades tend to view the party's policies with erroneous viewpoints. Some comrades even ascribe their own errors and mistakes in carrying out policies to the party's policies. These comrades do not have an evil quality. Why are they involved in these problems? The main reason can be found in their poor understanding of the party's policies. They do not understand these policies in a comprehensive way, thus they are rather blind in thought. Moreover, a very small number of comrades do not have a correct style of thought. For example, even now, some comrades with a "leftist" viewpoint still treat the policy of opening up to the outside world and enlivening the economy at home as a rightist one and consider the party's policy of correcting mishandled cases as indiscriminate treatment. Because they have taken an incorrect position, in their eyes, "leftist" is correct and these correct policies are rightist. Therefore, in order to overcome the influence of "leftist" ideology, it is necessary to study the party's line, principles and policies in connection with the study of the 12th congress documents and Marxist theory, so as to raise the level of the understanding of policies, the level of theoretical knowledge and the level of communist ideology. Only thus can we overcome the limitations of our thoughts, prevent one-sidedness and blindness and maintain a political stand that is at one with the party Central Committee.

3. It is necessary to rigorously enforce the party discipline. We should resolutely act according to the principles of the party spirit and forbid party members to publicly make remarks that are at variance with the party's line, principles and policies. At present, we must: 1) resolutely support and implement the fighting program decided by the 12th party congress and adhere to the party's political, ideological and organizational lines; 2) absolutely obey the unified command of the party Central Committee in organizations and in action, unconditionally implement all decisions and directives issued by the party Central Committee and absolutely forbid anyone to comply in public and to oppose in private. We must adhere to the party's organizational principle and forbid anyone to form sects and cliques within the party. We must oppose the pragmatistic attitude that refuses to implement those policies which are not to one's own taste. We must also seriously criticize those people who spread discontented remarks and take liberalist actions such as passive boycott.

XINJIANG'S ISMAIL AMAT ON NATIONALITY UNITY

[Summary] Xinjiang Regional CPC Committee Secretary and Government Chairman Ismail Amat recently addressed a rally of party members and leading cadres in units directly subordinate to Kashi Prefecture. He stressed: "To implement the 12th party congress spirit, it is necessary to carry out reeducation in the party's nationalities policy and further strengthen the unity of nationalities."

Ismail Amat said: "I have visited Kashi twice this year. My and other leading comrades' impressions of the region is that three things have been strengthened here. The keenness of the party organizations to implement the nationalities policy; the cadres' and masses' concept of the legal system; and the atmosphere of unity of nationalities. However, we cannot be satisfied with this. In accordance with the 12th party congress spirit, we must continue to promote education in nationalities policy and unity and grasp this regularly, repeatedly and ceaselessly."

Ismail Amat stressed: "We must firmly establish the viewpoint that the minority nationalities cannot do without the Hans and vice versa. From ancient times China has been a multinationality nation and Xinjiang has since ancient times been an inseparable part of our great motherland. The more than 50 nationalities in the whole country have worked together to open up the vast motherland, create the Chinese nation's brilliant culture and write a glorious history of struggle in resisting external aggression, preserving the unity of the motherland and opposing imperialism, colonialism and feudalism. Since liberation, many Han comrades have responded to the party's call and left their distant homes to work with the minority-nationality cadres and masses in building up and defending the Xinjiang border region. The contributions they have made are extremely valuable. The large numbers of minority-nationality cadres who have grown up under party leadership love the party, socialism and the motherland. They are familiar with local conditions, have close ties with the masses and possess a certain political and ideological level and work ability. They have worked shoulder-to-shoulder with the Han cadres. As a result, tremendous successes have been scored on all fronts."

He said: "I hope that the Han comrades will establish the idea of settling in Xinjiang with minds at ease and of doing everything possible to serve the people of all nationalities in Xinjiang. The cadres and masses of all nationalities should unite still more closely and work to build Xinjiang into a still more beautiful place."

Ismail Amat said: "The key to strengthening the unity of nationalities lies in correctly implementing the party's nationalities policy. The party's policy on autonomy for nationality areas is our basic policy for solving the nationalities problem. The cadres and party members of all nationalities, especially the leading cadres, must be leaders in implementing the nationalities policy and strengthening the unity of nationalities."

He also pointed out: "We must heighten vigilance, strengthen political and legal work and deal resolute blows at the criminal activities of enemies at home and abroad in sabotaging the unity of nationalities."

XINJIANG'S WANG ENMAO ON ROLE OF SOCIAL SCIENCE

HK090305 Urumqi Xinjiang Regional Service in Mandarin 1300 GMT 8 Nov 82

[Excerpts] Comrade Wang Enmao said at the first academic report meeting of the Xinjiang Social Science Academy on the morning of 8 November: Social science work must serve socialist modernization. We must create a new situation in social science work and bring into full play its role in socialist modernization.

Comrade Wang Enmao said: Social science workers must uphold the four basic principles; and upholding communist party leadership and the socialist road are particularly important. From the long period of practice in struggle, the people of our country have realized the truth that only socialism can save China. To win victory in socialism, we must rely on leadership by the Communist Party, otherwise we cannot guarantee victory in socialism. Similarly, without leadership by the Communist Party, our social science work cannot be done well.

He said: The experiences of history show that we cannot deviate from the four basic principles, still less violate them. If we deviate from or violate the four basic principles, revolution and construction will suffer loss. Our social science workers must wage struggle against deviations from and violations of the four basic principles. This is a major matter to which we must pay attention the whole time.

Comrade Wang Enmao said: Social science work must uphold the principle of "foreign things to serve China and ancient things to serve the present." We should study foreign countries. It is wrong not to do so. However, in studying foreign countries and our own country, we must concentrate on the latter. The aim of studying foreign countries is also to serve China's socialist construction cause. We must not lay too much stress on foreign countries and too little on China. We must also study ancient times. It is wrong not to do so. China has a history of 5,000 years. If we do not know history, we cannot know how the present conditions have come about and still less can we predict the future. However, in studying history and the present day, we must concentrate on the latter. Moreover, the aim in studying history is to serve today's socialist construction. We cannot leave the social science study tasks of today to later generations.

Comrade Wang Enmao said: Linking theory with reality is one of our party's fine traditions and work styles. Social science must succeed in linking theory with practice.

Comrade Wang Enmao said: Generally speaking, the superstructure and the economic base in our socialist system match each other. This is a superior feature of our socialist system. However, this does not mean that there are no contradictions at all between the superstructure and the economic base. Our social science workers must discover and study ways of solving these contradictions so that the superstructure may continuously match the development of the economic base. This is an important topic to be studied by our social science workers.

Comrade Wang Enmao said: It is necessary to strengthen party leadership over social science work. The Communist Party believes in Marxism because Marxism is the sole correct social science and a universal truth. The party committee organs at all levels must spontaneously strengthen leadership over social science work. This is a task they must not shirk. In socialist modernization, we must not only grasp natural science work but also promote social science work. Both are of great significance for the four modernizations.

PREMIER SUN OPENS CONFERENCE, THANKS REAGAN

[Text] Taipei, Nov. 9 (CNA) -- Premier Sun Yun-hsuan said Tuesday that the Republic of China and the United States are already major trading partners and through discussions of the participants in the 6th joint conference of ROC-USA and USA-ROC economic councils, not only the joint economic problems of the two countries will be solved, but also the bilateral relationship will be strengthened.

Premier Sun addressed the opening ceremony of the 6th joint conference which is the biggest bilateral economic conference between the Republic of China and the United States.

The premier also expressed his deep gratitude to U.S. President Ronald Reagan for his greetings to the conference.

In the last 30 years, Premier Sun said, trade between the Republic of China and the U.S. has increased by 140 times. In 1952, the commercial exchange between the two countries only reached U.S. dollars 89 million, but the figure for 1981 was U.S. dollars 13 billion.

Right now, the premier added, the Republic of China has a favorable balance of trade with the United States and the Republic of China is trying hard to reduce the amount by sending purchasing missions to America.

The industrial structure of the Republic of China will move from labor-intensiveness to technology- and capital-intensiveness, premier said. So this country shall be needing more American technology and equipment along with more materials.

Opportunities in the Taiwan market are already increasing for Americans who observe and study ROC's needs for high-technology and equipment, Premier Sun said.

TAIWAN 'KEY LINK' IN U.S. PACIFIC DEFENSE

OW100107 Taipei CHINA POST in English 5 Nov 82 p 4

[Editorial: "ROC Needs Modern Arsenal"]

[Text] Recently Communist China fired a nuclear weapon from a submarine. The news set off more confusion among the military experts of the Free World. We confess we are bewildered. The experts say the United States should aid Communist China in order to thwart the Soviet Union. Then in the same breath, the experts insist the Chinese Communists lack the combat ability to launch a successful attack against Taiwan.

The fact is Communist China's military potential poses no threat to Soviet security. What alarms Moscow is the specter of a global anti-Soviet coalition led by the United States and including Japan, the NATO countries and the Persian Gulf states.

There are arguments concerning whether Communist China could mount an all-out attack on Taiwan. In order to succeed, Peiping would have to gain air superiority in the Taiwan Strait. This is why the United States' own interest calls for providing Taiwan with the latest model fighter plane, a fact President Reagan seems to ignore.

As we have emphasized many times, the United States needs Taiwan much more than we need American assistance. Taiwan is an unsinkable air base. Our armed forces are the best trained and most efficient in Asia. Taiwan is the key link in the American defense line which stretches from South Korea through the Philippines, Burma, Malaysia and Singapore all the way to New Zealand and Australia.

If this line of defense is broken, the United States would be forced to retreat all the way to California. Moreover, the United States does not have even the semblance of a merchant marine capable of maintaining its supply line to Asia. Instead, America must depend on the merchant marine of the Republic of China. These are a few of the reasons why Reagan's Asian policy does not make sense.

The Chinese Communists have refrained from launching an attack on Taiwan because they do not underestimate Taiwan's strength. They are deterred for another reason. It is well established that Peiping faces dissension on the mainland. The reason it maintains a strong force in Fukien Province is not so much the fear of an attack from Kinmen but to maintain a strong restraining force against their own people.

Inherent in communism is the seed of its destruction. It is the privileges of the part leaders that ferment rebellion among the people.

GOVERNMENT INTERESTED IN U.S. T-34 TRAINERS

OW090441 Taipei LIEN HO PAO in Chinese 4 Nov 82 p 2

[Excerpts] Taipei -- A model T-34 trainer, manufactured by the Beechcraft Aircraft Company of the United States, gave a special-skill flying demonstration over the Sungshan military airfield in Taipei at 0840 yesterday morning. Gen Hao Po-tsun, chief of the General Staff, and other air force general officers were at the airfield to see the display.

Because this propeller-driven trainer aircraft can also take over advanced air control and tactical attack missions after conversion (named T-34C), and because the aircraft is equipped with a tactical navigation guidance system, target indicator, instrument flying equipment, an angle of attack indicator and many other new eletronic devices, its performance and use is superior to that of the "Chunghsing" model propeller-driven aircraft made in this country.

It is learned that our military circles are interested in this type of aircraft and may purchase it to replace the "Chunghsing" as an advanced air control aircraft, or produce it, in cooperation with the Beechcraft Company, to raise level of our aircraft industry.

[Editorial: "The Freedom of Organizing Political Parties and the Freedom of Speech"]

[Text] Following in the wake of the magazines CHUNG KU LOU [6988 7849 2869] and CHIN PU [6651 2975] the second issue of PO KUAN [0590 6034], scheduled for publication on 4 October, was censored and withheld from circulation by the Taiwan Garrison Command, even as copies of this issue were being bound. The reason for censoring and withholding this issue of the magazine was given in several familiar words: "The contents of this issue may seriously mislead the public."

Such ambiguous yet cleverly used words are a magic weapon employed by intelligence and security units to muzzle public opinion under martial law. They have effectively used this magic weapon for 30 years. As a result, people no longer feel that it is odd to see such strange things because they are used to them.

This incident, however, has once again made people realize that in Taiwan a guaratee of freedom of speech is lacking and, like a candle guttering in the wind, may be extinguished at any time. This incident has also revealed the Kuomintang's real motives in upholding martial law. Only under the cover of martial law can the Kuomintang flagrantly do anything it likes and silence any opinion it does not like in defiance of democratic rules and the rule of law.

The second issue of PO KUAN devoted more than half of its space to dealing with the ban on organizing political parties, which was the reason it was withheld from circulation. Some 3 years ago the Pa Shih Nien Tai publishing house collected and compiled old articles from TZUYU CHUNGKUO [FREE CHINA] into a book entitled "The Question of Opposition Parties," which was also banned. It is thus clear that the authorities react strongly to books and magazines that deal specifically with the question of organizing political parties.

The ban on organizing political parties is one of the political issues of primary concern to people both at home and abroad as well as to a "political knot" in the Republic of China that urgently needs to be untied. In recent years, nonparty personages have continuously called for lifting the ban on organizing political parties and fostering party politics. The Kuomintang, however, has continued to imbue the people with the notion that the party and the state are one family. Or it has used the specious pretext of facing a ferocious enemy in order to counter the proposition for lifting the ban on organizing political parties. The two sides are actually fighting a seesaw battle in this regard.

Since the question of banning new political parties has touched a Kuomintang sore spot, the party has dealt severely with opinions on this subject. In parliament, the Kuomintang cannot silence nonparty members of the Legislative Yuan but it is more than capable of banning nonparty magazines from publishing articles on this question. The second issue of PO KUAN dealt primarily with the question of banning new political parties, which the authorities naturally could not tolerate. This is why this issue of the magazine was withheld by the authorities even before it was put on sale. So it was not unexpected that PO KUAN brought such a "fatal disaster" upon itself.

The Kuomintang, however, has violated the constitution by flagrantly denying people the legitimate right of association and organizing political parties. Now it has even deprived people of the freedom of speech by denying them the right to discuss the question of organizing political parties. People cannot but feel sorry for the conservative thinking, rigidity and weakness the Kuomintang has displayed in a plural society in which the nonparty forces are growing in strength.

In its editorial, issue No 17 of YA CHOU JEN [THE ASIAN], a sister magazine of this publication, most clearly analyzed the rights and wrongs of the question of organizing political parties. We might as well save our breath. However, in view of the fact that the Kuomintang is extremely fearful and suspicious of any hint about organizing political parties and has taken strict measures to suppress opinions on this question, we cannot but express our supplementary opinions on this old subject.

The Kuomintang has always held that organizing an opposition party is the clamorous opinion of a handful of "careerists" with ulterior motives and that their aim in attempting to do so is to "seize power." On the one hand, this notion reveals the Kuomintang's mentality that it regards state power as its exclusive domain. On the other, it shows that the Kuomintang turns a deaf ear to the call for new political parties and a blind eye to the social background and conditions that have brought forth such a call. The former is selfish and the latter is ignorant. Precisely because it is ignorant of the question of organizing political parties the Kuomintang thinks that, when several leading elements are arrested at a critical moment, the threat of organizing political parties will disappear like mist and smoke and it can sit back and relax.

The point, however, is that in a vigorous and vital society, the aspiration to form a party is no longer the selfish idea of a few persons but rather an inevitable trend in pursuit of democracy. It is impossible today to turn back history and return to the agricultural society of the past that was characterized by stagnation and public ignorance. Development in the areas of economics, education and other sectors is also accelerating the pace of social progress. After 30 years of changing and brewing, the formation of an opposition party that is representative of and embodies the interests of the masses has proven to be an irresistible trend. We believe that the movement to form a party will succeed when conditions are ripe, provided there is no interference and destruction by an external force.

By external force we naturally refer to the Kuomintang. To be sure, the movement to form a party is a trend but it has been stopped repeatedly by the Kuomintang. Some 20 years ago, when Lei Chen was planning to form the China Democratic Party, he said that it was like a great river rushing toward the sea and could not be stopped. Yet, at the last moment, it was stopped by the Kuomintang. The mass movement started by the Mei Li Tao, had it been able to keep developing, would also have led to the formation of a party. But all efforts came to naught with the Kaohsiung incident.

Judging by present conditions, a fundamental change in the Kuomintang's attitude seems to be very remote. The recent reactions by the Kuomintang in word and deed on the question of the formation of new parties are particularly regrettable.

First, Minister of the Interior Lin Yang-Kang issued a public statement at the Legislative Yuan to the effect that the government strictly forbids the formation of any new parties. Shortly afterward, PO KUAN was withheld by the Garrison Command. This is tantamount to telling the world openly that in Taiwan non-Kuomintang people are not only deprived of the freedom of assembly and association and to take actual actions to form a party, but also that they are denied the freedoms of speech and of the press, unable even theoretically to call for the formation of a new party.

By forbidding the people to discuss the question of an opposition party the Kuomintang fully shows its psychological state. It is afraid of the popular idea of forming an opposition party -- afraid that out of the idea a belief may grow, and out of the belief a force may emerge. But, no matter how great this force may be, it can only be a force of checks and balances and at best as a legitimate competitor within the constitutional system, and certainly not a force of the mobs or rebels. The Kuomintang really has no reason to be afraid of an opposition party and even less reason to restrict the freedom of speech to discuss the formation of such a party. It is more difficult to check the voice of the people than to block a river. The question of forming a party cannot be erased from the people's hearts by banning a magazine or an article.

Looking back at the failure of the two previous movements to form new parties by non-Kuomintang people, although the Kuomintang made some gains the entire society and state paid a heavy price. The realization of political ideas seems remote and beyond reach and a dark shadow hangs over the hearts of the people. Each time the Kuomintang spent a great deal of effort to succeed in barely suppressing the movement to form a new party, and afterward it tried in every possible way to dispel the consequences and adverse effects of its actions. It is certain that when non-Kuomintang people rally for a third time in the movement to form a new party, the Kuomingtang, if it tries to suppress this movement with the same old trick, will inevitably have to carry a heavier burden of the people's will and exert 10 times, even 100 times, its former efforts and face a degree of resistance unheard of in the past.

This is not hard to understand, because at present and in the foreseeable future the great changes in the situation inside and outside Taiwan no longer permit the Kuomintang to deal with the movement to form a new party by non-Kuomintang people in the same way as it did in the past. Of course, out of its habitual reaction to protect its powers and the blind spots in its perception, it is still very possible for the Kuomintang to defy the objective environment and suppress future movements to form a new party by non-Kuomingtang people regardless of the consequences. If it should really happen, the resulting conflict will be extremely terrible. We can only pray to God not to allow such a tragedy to happen on this land.

Therefore, future development of the issue on the formation of a new party depends not only on the actions of the non-Kuomintang people themselves but also on the Kuomingtang's attitude. On the part of the non-Kuomintang people, it is essential that they strive to strengthen both subjective and objective conditions for forming a new party. They must look for a suitable and favorable opportunity and move according to plan. As for the Kuomintang, it should get rid of its unnecessary suspicion and fear of an opposition party. At the same time it should strengthen innerparty democracy and establish an image of a genuine democratic party. This depends on the common efforts of the enlightened persons within the Kuomintang. We hope that some day the selfishness, ignorance and blind rejection of any party formed by non-Kuomintang people displayed by the Kuomintang will become a thing of the past.

WU XUEQIAN 'EXPECTED' TO BE NEW FOREIGN MINISTER

[By Foreign Affairs Editor David Chen]

[Text] Mr Wu Xueqian, appointed a vice-minister of foreign affairs six months ago, is expected to become the People's Republic's sixth foreign minister.

Reports from Peking said Mr Wu was a former member of the Communist Youth League who until May was a party functionary with little or no part in government affairs.

The reports, quoting "well-informed Chinese and foreign diplomats," corroborated an earlier article in the SCM POST of Mr Wu's ascendancy.

Mr Wu, the reports said, is expected to take over the post at the fifth annual session of the Fifth National People's Congress later this month from Mr Huang Hua, who is to resign on health grounds but will stay on as an adviser to the Foreign Ministry.

Although Mr Wu had not worked in the Foreign Ministry until his appointment, it does not mean he has had no experience in foreign affairs.

For much of his career, he has been involved in international liaison work in the party, with a great deal of contact with and knowledge of fraternal communist parties both in the Soviet bloc and in Western countries.

His expected promotion did not really come as a surprise because at the time his vice-ministership was announced he was listed ahead of five other vice-ministers, superseding in seniority even such veterans as Mr Zhang Wenjin, Mr Wen Yezhan and Mr Han Xu.

In recent months, Mr Wu, in his early 60's, has been handling a wide range of affairs, especially Asia. He also accompanied the prime minister, Mr Zhao Ziyang, in the latter's official visit to Japan to mark the 10th anniversary of the normalisation of Sino-Japanese ties.

Like many of the younger party cadres appointed to senior party, government and provincial posts, Mr Wu is believed to be a very close associate of the party's general secretary, Mr Hu Yaobang.

A native of Anhui, the province bordering Jiangsu, Mr Wu spent most of his formative years in Jiangsu and in the Shanghai region. It was there that he acquired his fluent knowledge of English.

His association with Mr Hu dated back to the end of the Sino-Japanese war and in the early 1950's he was a senior member of the Communist Youth League, the head of which was Mr Hu.

Later he was transferred to the party Central Committee's International Liaison Department, becoming a vice-director before his transfer, and promotion, to the Foreign Ministry.

In his long association with the department, Mr Wu travelled widely in many Third World countries, having been to Indonesia, Egypt and other African countries as well as the Soviet Union, as a member of the Sino-Afro-Asian Solidarity Committee and of the Chinese delegation on disarmament and world peace to Moscow in 1962.

During the Cultural Revolution, Mr Wu was purged as were Mr Hu and many other ex-CYL members and he did not re-emerge until 1978, rejoining the party's International Liaison Department.

In the brief six months since he took over the vice-ministership in the Foreign Ministry, Mr Wu distinguished himself in handling many important Asian issues, the most outstanding one being that of the Japanese textbook controversy.

In early September, Mr Wu was elected a member of the party Central Committee.

Agency reports said those foreign diplomats who talked to him found him highly competent, sophisticated and balanced.

If Mr Wu represents the new generation of foreign affairs officials, Mr Huang belongs to a different, fading generation. Mr Huang is a graduate of the Yenching University, an American institute in Peking founded with reparation funds after the Boxer Rebellion.

He has had an impressive diplomatic career, having served as ambassador to many countries, including the post of chief liaison officer in Washington. It was there, in 1975, that he secured a copy of the manuscript by Ms Roxane Witke of her interview with Jiang Qing and sent it to the then prime minister, Mr Zhou Enlai.

After the gang of four were arrested, Mr Huang was recalled to become the country's foreign minister, succeeding Mr Qiao Guanhua.

Mr Huang was considered to be a hard-liner in his attitude towards the West, including the United States. He made his name even in the late 1940's when, as the vanguard of the advancing communist armies arriving in Nanjing in 1945, he ordered the then American ambassador to the nationalist regime, Dr Stuart Leighton, to leave after unsuccessful negotiations.

Dr Leighton was once the president of Mr Huang's alma mater -- the Yenching University.

Although a very experienced diplomat, Mr Huang has never been a member of the inner circle of the communist hierarchy.

Until the Cultural Revolution days, the foreign minister used to be a member on the party Politburo. In the mid-1970's, a new foreign minister, Mr Ji Pengfei, was appointed but failed to make it to the Politburo. Mr Ji was succeeded by Mr Qiao Guanhua, an equally sophisticated diplomat who was once much valued by Mr Zhou Enlai.

Mr Qiao's brief association with the gang of four resulted in his losing his job and today he is reported to be a research worker in a foreign affairs institute in Peking.

Mr Huang succeeded Mr Qiao but he was never made a member of the Politburo.

Mr Huang, now 69, has been ill for more than a year. Last year, he had to cancel a trip to India because of ill health and had to stay in hospital for several weeks of an undisclosed complaint.

His latest trip abroad was to the United Nations early last month when he spoke to the General Assembly, outlining China's foreign policy.

It was when he was in the United States that he also delivered one of the most vehement attacks on the administration of the U.S. President, Mr Ronald Reagan, accusing it of breach of the latest accord, "the Shanghai Communique No 2."

Although Mr Huang is to retire from the Foreign Ministry, he will not sever his links with the ministry entirely. Like his immediate former deputy, Mr Han Nianlong, he will be an adviser to the ministry and will continue to contribute to the formulation of China's foreign policy.

HONG KONG GROUPS TO DISCUSS '1997' IN PRC

[By Frank Choi: "Locals To Lobby Peking on 1997"]

[Text] Several local organisations will send delegations to Peking this month to express their views on Hong Kong and the 1997 issue.

The delegations include representatives from the Heung Yee Kuk, real estate developers and industrialists.

The chairman of the Kuk, Mr Lau Wong-fat, and three other members returned yesterday from Shumchun after setting up a visit to Peking.

According to sources, the Kuk, acting on behalf of the indigenous residents of the New Territories, was invited by the NEW CHINA NEWS AGENCY to visit Peking to present their views on Hong Kong.

The chairman of the Kuk's Political Committee, Mr Chan Yat-sun, will fix the date for the visit once details have been finalised.

Mr Lau said indigenous residents traditionally played a low-key part in politics, unless they were directly involved in an issue.

"But that does not mean the New Territories people are apathetic towards politics. Instead, they want to express their views when the time is right."

He noted that the people of Hong Kong were working hard to maintain the territory's stability and prosperity, and history showed that the present systems were working towards such ends.

Therefore, China, Britain and Hong Kong should find a way to maintain the confidence of the Hong Kong people to ensure that its future will not be changed.

He noted that verbal assurances alone could not retain the confidence of Hong Kong people, and some kind of written guarantee was needed.

Hong Kong real estate developers also plan to send a high-powered delegation to Peking to present their views.

The leader of the delegation will probably be the president of the Hong Kong Real Estate Developers' Association, Mr Henry Fok, and members will include the property tycoon, Mr Kwok Tek-sing, of Sun Hung Kai Property.

Sources said property developers had already made their request to Peking through the NCNA and their Peking contacts and hope to arrange the meeting before the end of this month.

The president of the Kowloon Eastern District Manufacturers' Association, Mr Hwang Jen, will head a delegation of local industrialists and manufacturers to Peking.

Mr. Hwang said the delegation will probably leave for Peking this month to present its views to the Chinese Government.

Meanwhile, 13 organisations from business, industrial and education groups have sent their opinions on the future of Hong Kong to contacts in London.

U.S., USSR MOTIVES VIEWED AT MADRID MEETING

[Article by Zhang Qihua [1728 0796 5478]: "The Superpowers and the European Security Conference"]

[Text] The Madrid meeting of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe [CSCE], which has lasted on and off for 2 years, reopened 9 November. One of the questions drawing people's attention is whether this resumed meeting can ever make a breakthrough. In view of the current severe confrontation between the United States and the Soviet Union, many Western observers see no bright prospects for this meeting. Last week, the U.S. representative to the meeting dropped a hint that it was doubtful whether an agreement between the West and the East could be reached.

The Madrid meeting first began in November 1980, attended by 33 European nations and the United States and Canada. Originally, the principal purpose of the meeting was to examine and review the implementation of the final documents of the Helsinki conference and to discuss the opening of a European disarmament conference. However, at the five previous meetings over the past 2 years, the United States and the Soviet Union have set themselves against each other on almost all questions discussed and have aroused furious wranglings, forcing the meeting into a deadlock time and again.

The Soviet invasion of Afghanistan and the turmoil in Poland which occurred when the meeting was underway have become the focus of the struggle between the United States and the Soviet Union. U.S. representatives cited some terms in the final Helsinki documents to accuse the Soviet Union of violating the spirit of the CSCE concerning Afghanistan and Poland. Conversely, the Soviet Union accused the United States of "pursuing a policy for making trouble" and wantonly interfering in the internal affairs of Poland. Both superpowers tried to make the terms of the final Helsinki documents serve their respective purposes. This once again showed that the documents were mere scraps of paper which could not be put into effect.

Since the first CSCE was held in Helsinki in 1975, while energetically expanding its armaments in Europe under the pretence of "detente," the Soviet Union has tried by every means to drive a wedge between the United States and European countries. It has also carried out expansion and infiltration in the Horn of Africa, the Mediterranean, the Middle East and south Asia, thus threatening Western Europe by flanking it. For this reason, from the very beginning of the Madrid meeting, Washington has continued to fiercely attack Moscow. Apart from sparing no effort in vindicating their actions, the Soviets have laid stress on accusing the United States of adopting a hostile attitude toward detente, intending to resume the "cold war" and undermining economic cooperation between the Soviet Union and Western European countries. Their purpose has been to squeeze U.S. influence out of Europe so as to strengthen Soviet influence in European affairs.

From the behavior of the Soviet Union and the United States at the Madrid meeting, it can be seen that the CSCE from the very outset has been charged with a fierce struggle between the Soviet Union and the United States to contend for dominance over Europe. It is by no means for the security and cooperation in Europe that the two superpowers attend the CSCE. When showing enthusiasm to summoning CSCE in those days, what the Soviet intended was first to ensure its vested interests in Europe through an international forum and, at the same time, to gain economic benefits from Western European countries through the "materialization" of detente and gradually separate them from the United States so as to expand its influence in Europe. The intention harbored by the United States when it took part in the CSCE was to infiltrate into the East by means of developing the so-called "exchanges of cultures, personnel and ideology" so as to undermine the foundation of the Soviet Union.

As Western public opinion once pointed out before, "the Soviets want to cut the ground out from under the feet of the West, as does the West want to do to the Soviets." Therefore, the Soviet-U.S. struggle at the Madrid meeting is by no means an accidental occurrence.

The confrontation between the two superpowers has broadened the vision of the European people. Previously, when the Soviets made a wild boast about the CSCE and exalted it as "a new chapter in history," few people believed them. Now the two superpowers take the documents they have signed before as a weapon for attacking each other. This really makes the CSCE a mockery.

Nonaligned and neutral countries attending the Madrid meeting constitute a force which cannot be neglected. They have made great efforts to try to bring this marathon meeting to a quick end and have made concrete suggestions on the disarmament issue and to the final documents of this meeting. However, this still could not break the deadlock caused by the confrontation between the Soviet Union and the United States at the Madrid meeting.

It is mainly because both superpowers dare not let this meeting break off even slightly so that it could reopen after an 8-month break. Awed by the pressure of public opinion, they both proceeded from their respective interests so that they allowed the meeting to reopen. The Soviet Union has always boasted of itself as the initiator of the CSCE and has taken "detente" as its important achievement. In its eyes, these latter can by no means be easily dropped. As far as the United States is concerned, it also finds that the rostrum of the meeting is useful and that it can continue to use the meeting as an arena to exert pressure over the Soviet Union. At the same time, in order to maintain its relations with Western European allies, the United States cannot but give consideration to their desire to keep open an East-West dialogue. Some people said that the CSCE is like chicken bones, which are tasteless, but it would be a pity if they were dropped. This sounds rather reasonable. Now it seems that the Madrid meeting will be continued for a long time on and off like before, but it is hard to see any result being achieved.

PRC PLEDGES CONTRIBUTIONS TO UN ORGANIZATIONS

[Text] United Nations, November 9 (XINHUA) -- Ninety-five countries have announced their pledges of 272.5 million U.S. dollars as contributions to the United Nations development program (UNDP) and pledges to dozens of other programs and funds.

Their announcements came at a two-day meeting of the 1982 U.N. pledging conference for development activities that ended here today.

Speaking at the opening session, U.N. Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar appealed to governments to increase their voluntary contributions to funds for multilateral economic cooperation.

The secretary-general said the voluntary contributions declined last year, and the gap between the needs of countries and the resources available to meet these needs was growing.

He warned that "a reduction in resources in support of development activities can only be detrimental to developed as well as developing countries." "The critical situation faced by developing countries requires a generous response from the international community," he added.

UNDP administrator Bradford Morse lobbied hard today to ask for more contributions.

He said contributions pledged for 1981 fell by 6 percent, while they remained virtually stagnant in 1982, and for 1983 they might well decline again from a woefully inadequate base. Least developed and low-income countries would proportionately suffer most from across-the-board reductions, he added.

At the conference, China announced pledges of 2.373 million U.S. dollars and 770,000 yuan rmb (roughly 385,000 U.S. dollars) as contributions to the UNDP, the United Nations Fund for Population Activities (UNFPA), the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF), the United Nations Industrial Development Fund (UNIDF) and four other organizations.

The United States, Japan, West Germany, the United Kingdom, France and some other countries stated that they were unable at this time to announce their pledges to all or some of the funds and programs.

BO YIBO SAYS PATENT LAW NEAR COMPLETION

[Text] Beijing, November 10 (XINHUA) -- State Councillor Bo Yibo told a U.N. delegation at the Great Hall of the People today China's patent law is near completion.

Bo Yibo was meeting with a delegation from the World Intellectual Property Organization [WIPO] led by its director-general Arpad Bogsch.

The state councillor said he appreciated the organization's efforts to introduce patent information to China.

"Summing up the experiences and lessons in the economic field during the past three decades we have come to see everything in the economic sphere requires legislation. The new patent law is nearing its completion in the wake of the recent promulgation of our trademark law," he said.

China joined the W.I.P.O. in 1980. The State Economic Commission, the China Council for the Promotion of International Trade and W.I.P.O. recently sponsored a Beijing workshop on industrial property rights in joint venture arrangements.

Ma Yi, vice-minister of the State Economic Commission, was present at today's meeting.

CHINA DAILY VIEWS U.S. ECONOMICS, POLITICS

["It Seems To Me" column by Zhao Yihe: "U.S. Economy Driven Between Two Devils"]

[Text] American capitalism has to choose between two evils -- either an inflated economy with a fast rising cost of living but fewer business failures and jobless people, or a deflated one that lands the country in a depression.

A few weeks before the mid-term elections, the Federal Reserve Board was smart enough to loosen its grip on money supply. The result was a lowering of bank interest rates, plus rallies on the stock market and a few forecasts of economic recovery. The Democrats were furious, calling this a political manoeuvre.

Losing Confidence

Whether it was purely political remains to be seen. In spirit of President Reagan's call for the nation to "stay its course," even the Reaganomists are losing confidence in Reaganomics. While priding themselves on a lowered inflation rate, they too are more afraid of depression than inflation, as indicated in a NEWSWEEK article on October 25.

Thus, instead of "staying the course," there is a vacillation toward the other course -- a loosening of monetary policy to reduce lending rates still further, stimulate investment and reduce unemployment. But is it a bit too late to pull things back?

The federal deficit was $110.7 billion for fiscal 1982 and is expected to reach $155 billion in 1983 and upwards of $200 billion in 1984. Both defence spending and government credit demands hover around $200 billion. A big deficit means a big defence budget, and a big defence budget means big military orders. If there cannot be any substantial cuts on military orders, how can you cut the other two? And if government borrowing remains heavy, prime lenaing rates at the banks cannot fall drastically from the present 12 percent. In that case, any spectacular rise in investment is unlikely.

Capital always looks for markets. Instead of a surge in domestic investment, however, the latest reports point to considerable enthusiasm in a search for foreign markets where labour is cheaper and profit margins wider.

The election results, which show a narrow victory for the Democrats and a moderate setback for the Republicans, are indicative of two things: First, people have by and large concluded that Reaganomincs doesn't work, and second, they have seen no alternative suggested by the Democrats. This explains why there was no landslide, at least not in the national elections.

Are the American people raising their voice? They are already doing so in one way or another. The antinuclear movement, for one thing, involves not just a political issue, but also an economic one -- the defence spending.

Development

Another interesting development has been the establishment of the Labour Council of the Democratic National Committee early this year. The council said it wanted to inject the demands of organized labour into the policies of the Democratic Party. How far it has succeeded is still not clear.

The United States will have to change in this changing world. In what way it will change is hard to predict. Will there be a resurgence of social reformism, perhaps more radical than that which appeared under Lyndon Johnson or even Franklin Roosevelt? Or will there be something else?

In any case, the people cannot be kicked around for too long. They will figure out what to do with the three trillion dollars' worth of material wealth they produce every year. And they do not have to keep the same politicians on the merry-go-round for ever and ever. There can be new ideas, new talent, new leaders.

KYODO: Funeral Delegation

[Text] Beijing, Nov 12 KYODO -- China is likely to send a high-powered delegation to Moscow to attend the funeral services for Soviet President Leonid Brezhnev in a bid to sound out the new leadership at the Kremlin on further rapprochement in Sino-Soviet ties, diplomatic sources said Friday.

Signs of an imminent thaw in the once frosty bilateral relations between the two communist giants were reflected in a recent flurry of diplomatic activities in both Beijing and Moscow, and diplomatic sources said it was no accident that the first word on Brezhnev's death should have come out of Beijing.

An hour before the official Soviet news agency, TASS, told world Thursday of Brezhnev's sudden death, a Soviet source in Beijing alerted KYODO that the Soviet leader had died the day before.

Diplomatic sources said Beijing has received increasing attention from Moscow since the Soviets initiated high-level talks with the Chinese aimed at improving bilateral relations.

China, apparently in a bid to shift its pro-Western diplomatic tilt, has responded in kind, and strongman Deng Xiaoping recently told Japanese visitors that "some" positive action from the Kremlin would pave the way for improved relations between Beijing and Moscow.

Deng's remarks were taken as a manifest sign that the Chinese were softening their hard line against the Soviets and were ready to drop some of their previous harsh demands.

The Chinese had all along insisted that the Soviet massive military build-up along the Chinese border, the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan and the Soviet support of the Vietnamese occupation of Kampuchea were three major stumbling blocks impeding improvement in bilateral ties.

Diplomatic sources said the Chinese are now apparently ready to move forward if the new leadership at the Kremlin showed any sign of accommodation with the Chinese demands.

In a bid to find out more about policy thinking in the post-Brezhnev Soviet leadership, the Chinese are likely to launch "funeral diplomacy" by sending a high-powered mission to Moscow for Brezhnev's funeral, the sources said.

KYODO: Ministry Statement

OW121226 Tokyo KYODO in English 0215 GMT 12 Nov 82

[Text] Beijing, Nov 12 KYODO -- China Friday expressed profound condolences over the death of Soviet President Leonid Brezhnev and said the National People's Congress had sent a condolence message to the Soviet leadership.

We wish to express our profound condolences over Brezhnev's death, the Foreign Ministry said in a statement released Friday.

The National Peoples Congress, in a condolence message sent Thursday and signed by its Standing Committee, asked its Soviet counterpart, the Presidium of the Supreme Soviet of the Soviet Union, to relay its word of sorrow to Brezhnev's family, the official Chinese news agency, XINHUA, said.

Diplomatic observers noted both the NPC message and the Foreign Ministry statement dropped Brezhnev's other title as party general secretary, a clear sign that Beijing was making a subtle, but diplomatically significant, distinction between state and party relations between the two communist countries.

FURTHER MATERIALS ON KHIEU SAMPHAN'S VISIT

Meets Hu Yaobang

OW111716 Beijing XINHUA in English 1646 GMT 11 Nov 82

[Text] Beijing, November 11 (XINHUA) -- "The most difficult moment of the Kampuchean people's struggle has passed. From now on, with greater confidence than before they are on the path of resistance against the Vietnamese aggressors in a well-organized way."

Hu Yaobang, general-secretary of the Central Committee of the Chinese Communist Party, made this remark at a meeting with Khieu Samphan, vice-president of Democratic Kampuchea here today. Hu Yaobang also extended congratulations to the Kampuchean people for the favourable situation in their struggle.

He said during a war of aggression, and during a war against aggression, though an aggressor nation with an extremely strong armed forces can defeat and even wipe out the weaker regular troops of the country being invaded, it can never wipe out the people's patriotic guerrilla armed forces."

He said "the thing in common among the Vietnamese authorities and all aggressors is they always overestimate their own strength and underestimate the people's strength. They think they can rely on their strong armed forces to exterminate the people's armed forces at one strike. However, a just war of the people cannot be suppressed by any forces. This is a truth."

He said "the final victory of the people's armed forces requires arduous struggle. It is impossible to win a speedy victory. So long as we are united, adopt a correct policy and strict discipline, and have correct military strategies and tactics, we will defeat any enemy in the world, no matter how powerful."

Hu said he is confident the Kampuchean people are sure to win the final victory in their struggle against the Vietnamese aggressors.

Khieu Sampham said "We thank the Chinese Government and the people for your support to the Kampuchean people. We shall continue to fight against the Vietnamese aggressors and have full confidence we shall succeed."

After the meeting, Hu Yaobang gave a dinner for the Kampuchean guests.

Present were Wu Xueqian, vice-minister of foreign affairs, Han Nianlong, adviser to the Foreign Ministry, and Pech Cheang, ambassador of Democratic Kampuchea to China.

Zhao Hosts Banquet

BK111250 Beijing in Cambodian to Kampuchea 1030 GMT 8 Nov 82

[Text] Zhao Ziyang, premier of the Chinese State Council, hosted a banquet 7 November in Beijing to warmly welcome Khieu Samphan, vice president of Democratic Kampuchea, and his colleagues.

During the banquet, which was held in a cordial atmosphere, Zhao Ziyang spoke first. He said:

Respected His Excellency Vice President Khieu Samphan, respected honored Kampuchean guests, comrades and friends:

A few days ago, I hosted a banquet here to warmly welcome Samdech Sihanouk and Neak Mneang, who led the Democratic Kampuchean delegation and achieved a great and important victory at the 37th session of the UN General Assembly.

Today I am very glad to welcome Vice President Khieu Samphan, who arrived from the battlefield of the struggle against the Vietnamese aggressors to visit our country. On behalf of the Chinese Government and people, I would like to express sincere congratulations on the great and important victory won by the Kampuchean people in their struggle both at home and abroad.

For almost 4 years, the Kampuchean people have been severely tested in their struggle against the Vietnamese aggressors, particularly during the first stage of the struggle, which was crucial to the survival of the Kampuchean nation. The people and patriotic army of Kampuchea were not afraid of the tanks and cannons of the Vietnamese aggressors' army and held aloft the patriotic banner against the Vietnamese aggressors. They courageously and valiantly fought, preferring to die in the struggle in the land of Angkor rather than live as slaves under the domination of the Vietnamese enemy. This determination and pledge -- as hard as steel — of the heroic combatants against the Vietnamese aggressors showed the common resolution of the Kampuchean nation and has encouraged the whole Kampuchean people in their struggle against the Vietnamese aggressors.

It was the high patriotic spirit of the brave children of the Kampuchean people and the resolute determination to fight in pools of blood that have defeated the repeated attacks and aggression of the Vietnamese army over the past 4 years. The Kampuchean people's struggle against the Vietnamese aggressors has defended and safeguarded the national independence and sovereignty of Kampuchea and made an important contribution to containing the aggression and expansion of hegemonism and safeguarding peace, security and stability in the region.

Last July the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea headed by Samdech Sihanouk was proclaimed. This marked a new stage in the patriotic Kampuchean forces' united resistance to Vietnamese aggression. We believe that under the leadership of Samdech Sihanouk as president, His Excellency Khieu Samphan as vice president and His Excellency Son Sann as prime minister, the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea will play a positive and effective role in promoting national unity and strengthening the fight against the Vietnamese aggressors.

This year's UN General Assembly has maintained Kampuchea's legitimate seat in the United Nations and, by an overwhelming majority, passed a resolution demanding that foreign troops be withdrawn from Kampuchea. This fully shows that justice is on the Kampuchean people's side and that the Vietnamese aggressors are very isolated.

At present, the Vietnamese authorities are stepping up military operations in their aggression in Kampuchea. At the same time, they are trying all kinds of political maneuvers to extricate themselves from difficulties both at home and abroad and confuse world opinion. We firmly believe that under the leadership of the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea and with the support of the peace-loving and justice-upholding countries and peoples, the Kampuchean people will surely frustrate the Vietnamese aggressors' military attacks and political tricks and will win greater victories.

The friendship between the Chinese and Kampuchean peoples is a long-lasting one and based on solid foundations. I would like to take this opportunity to affirm once again that under the direction of the spirit of our 12th party congress, the Chinese people, who are striving to fulfill the fatherland's four modernization program, resist hegemonism and defend world peace, are trustworthy comrades in arms of the Kampuchean people. The Chinese people will, as always, firmly support the Kampuchean people in their just struggle against Vietnam's aggression until the final victory is won.

It is with this sentiment that I propose a toast to new victories for the Kampuchean people in their struggle against the Vietnamese aggressors; to the traditional friendship and solidarity between the Chinese and Kampuchean peoples; to the health of His Excellency Vice President Khieu Samphan and the honored Kampuchean guests; and to the health of comrades and friends present here.

Afterwards, Khieu Samphan replied. In his speech he said:

We are very glad to come and visit the PRC once again following the successful formation of the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea, to which the PRC -- in cooperation with the ASEAN countries and other friendly countries -- has contributed.

Since our arrival, the Chinese Government and people have warmly welcomed us with profound friendship. For this, we express our sincere thanks and consider this welcome an honor for our people, combatants and cadres who are resolutely and bravely fighting the Vietnamese aggressors on the battlefield to defend our Kampuchean nation and race.

His excellency, respected ladies and gentlemen:

Following the brilliant successes over the past 33 years, the PRC is advancing courageously in a good atmosphere of stability and unity all over the country and striving to win new and greater victories in the noble task of modernization which will definitely transform China into a modern country over the next 2 decades.

Although a big country, the PRC has strictly adhered to a foreign policy based on equality and mutual respect with every country, big or small, and is firmly on the side of the just cause of the people in countries who are victims of acts of aggression. This has enhanced the PRC's prestige in the international arena.

This firm stand of the PRC in pursuing its foreign policy has been tested over many years in its relations with our country, which is only a small country. At present, at a time when our country is being barbarously attacked by the Hanoi Vietnamese, the PRC has again firmly supported our just struggle. We would like to express once again our moving gratitude to the PRC. Its precious support -- and that of all peace- and justice-loving countries the world over -- is a great encouragement to us in our present struggle against the Vietnamese aggressors for the survival of an independent, neutral and nonaligned Kampuchea. Thus, the PRC is also contributing to the safeguarding of peace, stability and security in the region as well as in the world.

His excellency, respected ladies and gentlemen:

The struggle waged by our Kampuchean people has been developing favorably in all fields, stepping up every year while the Vietnamese aggressors have been gradually heading downward every year. The decline in their fighting force, morale and economy has bogged them down both on the battlefield in Kampuchea and in Vietnam, and the situation is deteriorating year after year.

The fact that the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea was established on the clear principles of the 27 June declaration in Kuala Lumpur with Samdech Norodom Sihanouk as president of Democratic Kampuchea and that the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea has recently won a brilliant victory at the 37th session of the UN General Assembly clearly point to the favorable development of our Kampuchean people's struggle.

It is true that during the 1982-1983 dry season the Hanoi Vietnamese aggressors will strive to gather their forces in Kampuchea and Vietnam to continue their extermination of our Kampuchean people and to halt their slide toward defeat. However, they will be dealt heavier losses by our national army, guerrillas and people who are getting more and more experienced in waging guerrilla warfare. Therefore, in the military field, no matter how hard the Vietnamese try to extricate themselves, they will not escape from their downhill evolution, which has been happening for the past 3 years.

It is in this serious position of defeat that the Hanoi Vietnamese aggressors have made efforts to use tricky diplomatic maneuvers and other tricks.

Successive resolutions of the UN General Assembly since 1979 -- four all together -- have demanded that the Hanoi Vietnamese unconditionally withdraw all their troops from Kampuchea. They refuse to abide by these resolutions. On the contrary, they have been carrying out all kinds of deceitful diplomatic maneuvers to bury the Kampuchean question, the UN General Assembly's resolutions and the declaration of the international conference on Kampuchea. It is with this goal in mind that the Vietnamese have proposed to convene their so-called regional conference to solve what they call the problem between the three Indochinese countries and the Southeast Asian countries. All these maneuvers show that although they are being seriously defeated in Kampuchea, the Hanoi Vietnamese are not going to withdraw their aggressor troops from Kampuchea in accordance with the world's unanimous demand. Instead, they are carrying out tricky and deceitful diplomatic maneuvers and other means aimed at weakening the forces that are fighting them on the battlefield so they can reverse their military situation and defeated position and continue to occupy Kampuchea forever while also moving to fulfill their own strategy of expansionism and aggression as well as that of their Soviet masters.

For this reason, we are confident that all peace- and justice-loving countries the world over will thwart all the above-mentioned Vietnamese aggressors' and expansionists' maneuvers. At the same time, all peace- and justice-loving countries the world over will unite to demand that the Hanoi Vietnamese aggressors unconditionally withdraw all their troops from Kampuchea and let the Kampuchean people decide their own destiny without outside interference through a free general election by direct and secret ballots under the supervision of the United Nations.

On this occasion, we would like to once again declare -- as we have done many times before -- that if the Hanoi leaders implement the UN resolutions by withdrawing all Vietnamese troops from Kampuchea, we will be pleased to sign a nonaggression treaty and live as good neighbors with Vietnam on the basis of the five principles of peaceful coexistence. Kampuchea will remain an independent, peaceful, neutral and nonaligned country without any military bases on its territory with the guarantee of the United Nations for its neutrality.

His excellency, respected ladies and gentlemen:

The struggle of our Kampuchean people has developed most favorably, but it still has to travel a sinuous and complicated course. On the battlefield, although they are bogged down, there is no sign yet that indicates the Vietnamese aggressors are willing to withdraw their aggressor troops from Kampuchea. Therefore, our Kampuchean people must carry on the arduous struggle. As we have said before, we are determined to do everything to unite and strengthen the forces fighting against the Vietnamese aggressors and exterminators of the Kampuchean race until they are forced out of Kampuchean territory. We will not do anything which might encroach on the unity and the strengthening of the national forces and the Kampuchean people in the struggle against the Vietnamese aggressors and race exterminators.

With our Kampuchean people's efforts in the struggle on the battlefield and with the consistent assistance of all peace- and justice-loving countries the world over, including the PRC, we are confident the Hanoi Vietnamese surely will be compelled to withdraw their aggressor troops from Kampuchea.

Finally, I would like to toast to the continued blossoming of the friendship between the Kampuchean and Chinese peoples; to new and greater successes for the Chinese Government and people in their modernization efforts in all fields to achieve another Long March, which is to make China a modern country in the next 2 decades; to the good health and longevity of His Excellency Zhao Ziyang; to the good health of their excellencies, ladies and gentlemen and friends who are present here.

USSR SAID TO BE LOSING 'STICKY' AFGHANISTAN WAR

[Report: "The USSR Is Bogged Down Deeper and Deeper in Afghanistan"]

[Text] It has been 2 years and 10 months since the Soviets intruded into Afghanistan. The development of the situation, however, has run counter to Soviet wishes. What the Soviets had bragged before -- complete occupation of Afghanistan -- has now turned into a sticky, losing war, and the situation is getting increasingly unfavorable to the Soviets, as more and more Soviet officers and men are being killed. Despite repeated reinforcements, the Soviets still cannot extricate themselves from a passive situation. According to estimates, casualties among Soviet officers and men have already exceeded 20,000, 160 airplanes have been shot down or destroyed and 2,500 trucks and tanks have been damaged. In an attempt to wipe out the Afghan guerrilla bases, the Soviet aggressors, on 4 September, concentrated 2,000 troops and many tanks to launch a large-scale offensive against the southeastern part of Zabol Province. After luring the enemy into a salient, the guerrillas launched a counterattack on the night of 5 September. They repulsed the Soviets and inflicted heavy losses on them.

The defeat led to an open fight between Soviet and government troops of the Karmal regime. Blaming each other for the defeat, the dispute between the officers of the Soviet occupation force and the government troops of the Karmal regime soon developed into an exchange of gunfire. Consequently, 19 Soviet officers and 21 officers of the Karmal regime's government troops died. The incident took place at the provincial headquarters of Galat City in Zabol Province. Following the incident, the general secretary of Karmal's ruling party in the province and a divisional commander were arrested and brought to Kabul.

In addition to their frustrations in Zabol Province, the Soviet aggressor troops suffered even more ignominious defeats during the several fierce battles which took place at the Panjshir Valley. The valley, which is of great strategic significance, with its entrance only 70 kilometers from Kabul, is an important base for the Afghan guerrillas. After several unsuccessful attacks against the guerrillas in the valley this year, the Soviets, at the end of August, deployed a reinforcement of several thousand troops from home and launched a general autumn offensive from Unab, at the entrance to the valley, against the guerrillas. Advancing in two columns, the Soviet troops bore down on the Afghan guerrillas menacingly. But they were bloodied right from the very beginning. Many Soviets were killed and wounded. Although an undertaker in Kabul stepped up making coffins with flimsy wood for the dead Soviet troops, the supply could hardly meet the demand.

The Soviet aggressors' repeated defeats make the day of the Karmal regime increasingly difficult. On 3 August, a volley of gunfire was heard from Kabul's presidential building. It turned out to be a conflict between the Parcham and the Khalq, two factions in the ruling party. Some people saw bodies removed from the presidential building to a cemetery reserved for high-ranking officials. During the month-long period afterward, Karmal successively replaced five ministers. Particularly noteworthy was the replacement of Defense Minister Mohammad Rafi by Parcham strongman Qader. It is believed that this was Karmal's attempt to put the armed forces under his control to secure his rule.

At present, while the Soviets have been bogged down deeper and deeper in Afghanistan, the internal conflicts within the Karmal regime have also further intensified.

[Text] London, November 10 (XINHUA) -- A former British intelligence worker, Geoffrey Prime, was sentenced here today to 35 years in jail for 14-year spying for the Soviet Union.

The Russian-language expert, Prime, 44, pleaded guilty to seven espionage charges and three charges of assaults on young girls, for which he was sentenced to three more years.

Lord Chief Justice Lord Lane, imposing the sentence at the Old Bailey, Britain's central criminal court, said Prime's treachery had done "incalculable harm to the security and interests of Britain and its allies."

The prosecutor Sir Michael Havers, Britain's attorney general, said Prime's "14 years of treachery" from 1968 to April 29 this year had caused "exceptionally grave damage" because of his easy access to "matters of the very highest secrecy."

Prime was recruited by Soviet agents in January 1968 when he was based in West Berlin with the British air force, and then received a training in spying methods.

He left the Royal Air Force the same year and went to work as a Russian translator at Britain's top secret counter-intelligence communications centre at Cheltenham, western England, where secret messages to and from the Soviet bloc are monitored and decoded.

In 1977, he quit his top-secret job at Cheltenham and became a taxi driver and wine salesman till his arrest this year.

Under the code name of "Rowlands," Prime regularly passed secrets to the Soviet Union, the prosecutor said. During a visit to Vienna in 1980, he delivered 15 rolls of film containing 500 photographs of secret documents and was closely questioned for a few days by Soviet intelligence officers about "allied activities which were top secret."

Prime admitted at the trial that he committed similar offences in Berlin, Potsdam and London. Prime's espionage tools, found at his home after his arrest, were displayed in court. Prime said Soviet agents had promised him a pension and the rank of colonel, if he wanted to defect to the Soviet Union. He twice booked air tickets to East Europe, but twice changed his mind, he said.

The attorney-general said it was his sex offences that led to the discovery of his espionage crimes. Since the arrest of Geoffrey Prime, American intelligence sources have complained about the security at Cheltenham. The two countries are in close collaboration in intelligence work.

[Text] Warsaw, November 10 (XINHUA) -- Street demonstrations and clashes broke out here today in the capital and several other cities such as Wroclaw and Krakow, but in most Polish cities the situation remained calm and production and communications went on as usual.

Today is the second anniversary of the Solidarity independent trade union's official registration. Last July, underground Solidarity leaders called for an eight-hour strike by all the members today to protest the banning of the Solidarity by the authorities.

Police fired tear gas grenades to disperse about 3,000 demonstrators. After clashes with the police, about 300 people were detained.

According to Polish television reports, things the authorities had wished to avoid took place in the cities of Wroclaw and Krakow. Police had to intervene to bring back order. Several hundred demonstrators were detained in the two cities.

The Polish news agency, (PAP), reported that the public security institution interned one American who had connections with the underground organization of the outlawed Solidarity trade union.

Government spokesman Jerzy Urban told a press conference here today that only a dozen factories in the country stopped production. He said there were not so many people who had joined the strike. He said the call for a general strike from the underground organization of the Solidarity trade union had produced little results.

RENMIN RIBAO ON IDEOLOGICAL POLITICAL UNITY

[Editorial: "The Party's Fighting Power Resides in a High Level of Ideological and Political Unity"]

[Text] To create a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization, we should build the party, which plays a leading role in this endeavor, into a militant and powerful nucleus. The party constitution adopted by the 12th CPC Congress has regarded a high level of ideological and political unity as one of the three essential requirements for party building. This is a profound summation of the experience and lessons of the heroic struggle of the party over the past 60 years and a solemn call for all party organizations and party members in the new historical period.

During the period of the new democratic revolution, our party went through countless difficulties and paid a heavy price in order to correct the "leftist" and rightist mistakes which repeatedly occurred. Eventually, we discovered the truth with regard to the ideological and political unity of the whole party and actually realized it in practice. The Zunyi meeting enabled the Chinese revolution to take a turn for the better and avoid danger. The rectification campaign in Yanan thoroughly exposed and criticized dogmatism, empiricism and the influence of political adventurism over the party. The whole party maintained that the Chinese Communists, mainly represented by Comrade Mao Zedong, integrated the general truth of Marxism-Leninism with the specific practice of the Chinese revolution to establish Mao Zedong Thought which was a sole correct ideology guiding the Chinese revolution to march from victory to victory. On such a basis the Seventh CPC Congress worked out correct programs for the new democratic revolution and unprecedentedly unified the thinking of the entire party. After the Seventh CPC Congress, the revolutionary situation surged forward like the mighty waters of the Chang Jiang. The whole country was liberated within a short period of 4 years and the PRC was founded. During the socialist period, our party has continued to carry out arduous struggles against various erroneous tendencies. We have accumulated successful experiences and drawn lessons from setbacks. The price has been heavy.

A new historical change has occurred since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee. The 6th plenary session summed up the historical experience of the past 32 years since the founding of New China and marked the accomplishment of the task of bringing order out of chaos in the party's guiding thought. On the basis of affirming the line, guiding principles and policies adopted since the 3d plenary session, the 12th CPC Congress has further integrated the general truth of Marxism with the practical reality in China, upheld and developed Mao Zedong Thought and worked out correct programs for creating a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization. This has pointed out the orientation for building socialism with Chinese characteristics.

Looking back on the course of the struggle, we are full of pride, enthusiasm and confidence. It is just as Comrade Deng Xiaoping has pointed out: "The 7th CPC Congress led the revolution to victory and the 12th CPC Congress will lead construction to victory." At present, an important task facing the entire party is to unify the thinking of the whole party on the basis of the programs adopted by the 12th CPC Congress through studying 12th CPC Congress documents so that party organizations at all levels and all Communist Party members will highly keep in line with the CPC Central Committee both ideologically and politically. This is a matter of primary importance which will determine whether our party is able to shoulder important tasks assigned by history and lead the people of various nationalities throughout the country to create a new situation in socialist modernization.

The high level of ideological and political unity of the party is determined by the class nature of the party, the close relationship between the party and the broad masses of people, the historical mission of the party and the party's Marxist-Leninist guiding thought. During the 10 years when Lin Biao and the Jiang Qing counterrevolutionary clique ran roughshod, the party was severely sabotaged ideologically, politically and organizationally. Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, the CPC Central Committee has adhered to the practice of seeking truth from facts, proceeded from reality, employed superb tactics of leadership, reversed the course of events, brought order out of chaos and formulated and implemented the Marxist line and a series of guiding principles and policies for guiding various work, resulting in gratifying and great changes in various fields of our country. These facts have educated comrades of the entire party. In particular, through the study of "Resolution of Certain Questions in the History of Our Party Since the Founding of the PRC," the ideological and political unity of the whole party has been greatly promoted. The fact that the 12th CPC Congress was convened so effectively and smoothly and that it has rapidly accelerated the development of various work has vividly reflected the correctness of the CPC Central Committee and the unity of comrades of the entire party. However, we should also realize that since were are now effecting a great historical change and striding forward rapidly and the situation is progressing so fast, some comrades cannot adapt themselves to the new situation and have doubts or muddled views on the party's line, guiding principles and policies adopted since the third plenary session. Some people have even adopted passive attitudes to resist them. We should do painstaking and careful work to help them.

Some comrades said: "Can we air different views now that we should preserve a high degree of unity?" People observe objective things from different angles and they inevitably arrive at different understandings. It takes time to understand the objective law of things, and it also takes time to unify understanding. Therefore, it is difficult to avoid debates or controversies over differing views; without such debates or controversies, the party will not be lively and vigorous. However, just as Lenin pointed out: "The party should be unanimous in its political action. It is impermissible to issue a 'call,' either at an extensive gathering, at a party meeting or in a party newspaper, which may disrupt the unity of action that has been decided on." In the past few years, the CPC Central Committee has repeatedly stressed the necessity of promoting democracy within the party and the people and resolutely implementing the principle of "three don'ts": don't seize on other people's mistakes or shortcomings, don't stick labels on people and don't come down with a big stick on other people.

The party allows and permits controversies over differing views and in particular it supports useful debates aimed at solving new problems in the socialist modernization program. However, our party is a fighting party, a party of action and a party with strict discipline. We should never mistake promoting democracy for permission to change the party into an endlessly debating political club, for this will result in the party losing its fighting power. Every party member must unconditionally and resolutely implement the conclusions the party has arrived at or the decisions of the party. He can make reservations and present his views to party organizations at higher levels. However, he is not allowed to express, as he pleases views which contravene politically with the CPC Central Committee, nor is he allowed to manifest any opposition in his actions. The new party constitution has made a more perfect stipulation on the party's principle of democratic centralism. It stresses the necessity to ensure earnestly the democratic right of party members and the necessity for every party member to implement the party's decision to the letter and safeguard the unity and unification of the party Conscientious implementation of the new party constitution is an important guarantee for a high degree of ideological and political unity throughout the party.

Some comrades said: "Do we still stand for emancipation of the mind now that we should preserve a high degree of ideological unity?" The answer is yes. What we referred to as a high degree of ideological unity is based on the party's ideological line of seeking truth from facts. Without emancipation of the mind, seeking truth from facts is out of the question, still less can we begin to talk about testing and developing truth. Our understanding of truth is never ending and there is also no end to emancipation of the mind. Our understanding of the law of China's socialist construction is much richer and deeper than it was in the past. However, in order to build socialism with Chinese characteristics, it is still necessary for us constantly to deepen and perfect our understanding of its law through practice. To emancipate the mind, it is necessary to study constantly new situations and solve new problems in the course of practice and to make contributions in creating a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization. We should never equate emancipation of the mind with groundless fancy, still less should we set it against the party's principle of democratic centralism which all party members must observe. We should conscientiously implement the various stipulations in the party constitution and guide our words and deeds with the four basic principles. This does not hinder emancipation of the mind, nor is it contradictory to preserving a high degree of political unity with the CPC Central Committee. On the contrary, this is precisely the requirement of emancipation of the mind and is aimed at achieving a higher degree of unity.

In order to keep the party's high level of ideological and political unity, the most important task is to wage an ideological struggle correctly on two fronts against the "leftist" and rightist tendencies. Because of China's special historical conditions and for varius complicated reasons, for a very long period before the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, in theory and practice, we were seriously influenced by the "leftist" mistakes. Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, with the Central Committee's vigorous efforts in setting things right, we have shattered the heavy chains imposed by protracted dogmatism and personality cult and reaffirmed the Marxist ideological line of seeking truth from facts. However, there are people who are used to living along the "leftist track, and it is not so easy for them to shift to the correct track. The thinking of these comrades fails to keep pace with reality. They are used to looking at the line, principles and policies since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee with a "leftist" view; they always say that they do not like this or do not understand that; some even think that the line, principles and policies have become rightist and have gone backward. As for these comrades, we must do some patient ideological work and help them liberate themselves from the "leftist" chains. In addition, faced with the corrosion and influence of bourgeois liberalization, we should remain alert. We cannot underestimate its harmful and dangerous effects and we should determinedly and untiringly wage the necessary struggle against it.

In order to keep the whole party's high level of ideological and political unity, it is also necessary to eliminate disturbances and to eradicate the root of troubles which may cause destruction. The fire of class struggle has not gone out yet; class struggle still exists within certain limits in our society. A few remaining elements of the "gang of four" are still usurping some high posts. They wait for a chance to stir up trouble. This is a hidden peril which hinders the party's implementation of political unity. As for people who followed Lin Biao and Jiang Qing and became famous by rebellion; those who are seriously imbued with factionalism; those engaged in beating, smashing and looting; those who oppose the line of the Central Committee adopted since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee; and those who have committed serious offenses in economic and other spheres, we must not put them in important positions or promote them. Particularly, we must not let these "five kinds of people" become members of the leading ranks and must determinedly bring down those who have entered.

Let the understandings of the whole party be unifed on the program passed by the 12th CPC National Congress and realize our party's high level of ideological and political unity. Then, the creation of a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization will be safely ensured. We must thoroughly grasp well organizing the study of the documents of the 12th CPC National Congress and make it our primary task. At present, it is necessary to guide our study toward profundity, conscientiously grasp its spiritual substance and enhance the ideological and theoretical level. We believe, through the study of the documents of the 12th CPC National Congress, the whole party's high level of ideological and political unity will be realized. In addition, we can further promote the unity between various nationalities. In this way, we can work together with one heart and one mind to create a magnificent new situation of socialist modernization.

RENMIN RIBAO URGES COMMUNISTS TO SERVE PEOPLE

[Article by Feng Jixin [7458 4764 2450]: "Carry Forward With Major Effort the Spirit of Dedicating Oneself To Serving the People"]

[Text] The 12th party congress called on all Communists to display the devoted spirit of serving the people. This is of great significance in the creation of a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization. Communists' devoted spirit of serving the people is determined by the nature of our party. Our party is the vanguard of the Chinese working class, the faithful representatives of the interests of the people of all nationalities in China and the force at the core leading China's cause of socialism. The party's ultimate goal is the creation of a communist social system. The party requires each of its members to dedicate his whole life to the realization of communism. That is to say, members of the Communist Party must use the communist world outlook to guide their thought and action and must have the revolutionary spirit of being brave in making self-sacrifices for the party's cause.

Over the past half century innumerable Communists have held high the banner of communism and devoted themselves to the arduous struggle to realize the lofty ideal of communism in China. During the years of revolutionary wars, innumerable Communists went through thick and thin, carried on the fight left by those fallen and felt no hesitation in sacrificing their all for the revolution. Some of them shouted the slogan "The Internationale will certainly be realized!" before the enemy's knife and faced execution bravely; others could not be subdued by force or tempted by luxury under the extremely hard and difficult circumstances, always maintained the lofty integrity of Communists and set good examples for the masses. During the period of socialist construction, many party members also cherished the lofty goal of communism in their minds, worked untiringly, struggled hard and stayed honest in performing their official duties. Some even sacrificed their lives for defending the motherland and for the people's interests. It is precisely by relying on the actions of these Communists who firmly believe in Marxism and struggle bravely for the communist cause that our party can unite the people to win one victory after another.

Now, historical conditions have changed to a great extent. The position and enviornment in which our party is now situated, the tasks facing our party and other states of affairs concerning our party all differ from those in the past. The effects of the 10 years of turmoil on our party have not yet been completely eliminated, and role of the diverse mentalities of the exploiting classes has increased somewhat. The party's style of work has not been radically improved. Therefore, to encourage and carry forward the Communists' devoted spirit of serving the people is an urgent necessity at present. Of course, as compared with the years of wars, this devoted spirit will be demonstrated in a form different from the previous one. In the past, the spirit was reflected in not fearing death and prison, not being afraid of sacrificing oneself and one's family, not retreating in front of a hail of bullets and not yielding before the enemy's knife, sharing weal and woe with the masses in times of hardship and difficulties. At present, what is always confronting us are the contradictions between overall and partial interests, between long-term and immediate interests and between collective and individual interests or, in the final analysis, the contradiction between public and private interests. As far as the party cadres in leading positions are concerned, they must also pass the "test of power." That is to say, they must use the power which the people vest in them always to serve the people and never abuse the power in their hands to seek private interests, really living up to the saying: "never wet one's shoes even though walking frequently along a river bank." It is not easy to live up to these requirements.

To carry forward the devoted spirit, the most important thing is to serve the people wholeheartedly and to seek interests for the masses in real earnest. At any time and in any circumstances, a Communist must place the interests of the party and the people first, subordinate his personal interests to the interests of the party and the people, be the first to bear hardships and the last to enjoy comforts, work selflessly for the public interests, seek no private benefits and bend his back to his task until his dying day. At present, he should spare no effort in making contributions to the four modernizations. For example, Zhou Benyi, an old labor model of the Jinchuan nonferrous metal company who is reputed as being a "revolutionary willing ox," has no fear of fatigue and dirty jobs in his work of installing water-heating facilities and fulfills his tasks remarkably, being elected a model worker and model party member 20 years running. Another model party member is Yang Zhengnian at the No. 9 Beibao production team, Pingzi Commune, Ningxian County of Gansu Province. Though being old in age, he is still full of revolutionary will. Over the past 10 years he has afforested 200 mu of waste hilly land and planted 16,400 trees for the collective. He said: I shall keep fighting until the last day of my life. So long as I remain alive for one day, I will work on the mountains for one day and do something good for the masses. (Japuran), a communist of Kazak nationality famed as a "horse-riding postman fearing no hardships," has kept on rushing about on the gobi and grasslands all by himself for 16 years, covering more than 220,000 kilometers and delivering 190,000 pieces of mail without making a single mistake. The Gansu provincial post bureau has conferred on him the glorious title "outstanding postman." The reason why they can work so remarkably is that they established communist ideology in their minds and cherished the lofty ideals. They are all Communists of action who serve the people wholeheartedly. Thus, the people have shown respect for them. However, some other Communists have forgotten the pledge they made when joining the party and have abandoned the banner of communism. What they keep in mind is no longer the party's objective of struggles, nor the future of the motherland and the people's interests. Rather, they pursue a philosophy of egoism and propagate the decadent bourgeois ideas of "everyone for himself and the devil take the hindmost" and "the power in hand must be used in time, otherwise it will be invalid." These people make use of their power to seek private interests and to encroach upon the interests of the state and the masses. They always make selfish calculations on how to make more money for themselves. Some of them have even been defeated by the bourgeoisie with spiritual and material sugar-coated bullets and have degenerated into criminals. As compared with the Communist fighters, how paltry and humble these people are!

To carry forward the devoted spirit, it is necessary to have no fear of hardships and dare to fight bravely and shoulder heavy burdens. The communist movement has made and will make advances through surmounting difficulties and obstacles. It is unavoidable that we will meet with all kinds of difficulties when going in for the modernization drive. Every Communist must be willing to fight at the post the party assigns to him and must be willing to go wherever difficulties exist. Our Gansu Province is situated in a remote area of the country and is poor in natural and living conditions. However, we should resolve to take root and blossom here, open up a new aspect and score achievements. Communist Shi Qinghui, an assistant researcher of Desert's Institute, which is subordinate to the Lanzhou branch of the Chinese Academy of Sciences, is a returned overseas Chinese from Burma. Over the past 20 years and more, he has kept working in the Tengger Desert, carrying out research into plants growing in deserts. Whether in early spring, when fierce winds stir up the sand, or in dry summer, when it is sweltering hot, he always sticks to his post and quietly immerses himself in hard work. Up to now, he has collected and sorted out more than 200 kinds and more than 500 varieties of plants growing in the desert and has made a major contribution to the work of controlling wind and sand. He said: "The motherland needs me to do the work of harnessing deserts. Then my fighting post is right here. I shall contribute all my vigor and even my life to the cause of harnessing deserts for the motherland." What a noble sentiment and what firm faith this is! What our party needs are precisely these members who fear neither hardships nor difficulties and are always faithful to the party's cause.

To carry forward the devoted spirit, it is necessary to have the courage to fight against all mistakes and evil things, to safeguard the interests of the party and the people without fears of retaliation and being framed and to sacrifice one's life if necessary. It should be noted that owing to domestic factors and international influences, class struggle will continue to exist within a certain scope for a long time and will possibly become acute under certain conditions. Even within the party and among the people, there also often exist things at variance with the interests of the party and the people. Therefore, we are frequently confronted with mistaken things and evil forces. We must clearly distinguish between right and wrong, that is, take things in the interests of the people as right and take things at variance with the interests of the people as wrong. When the people's interests are harmed, we should dare to step forward bravely and wage a resolute struggle. When carrying out a just struggle, we should stand firmly as a Communist, cherish the lofty faith in the truth and the noble spirit of self-sacrifice and have no regard for personal gains and losses, safety and danger. We should not be subdued by the pressure of despotic forces, be tempted by wealth and beauty or be a bit frightened before the threats by atrocious criminals who have unleashed all their ferocity. At present, the philosophy of trying never to offend anybody and liberalism can still find their market within our party. Some of our comrades are still pursuing a philosophy of life of "planting more flowers but fewer thorns." They tend to skirt problems and evade contradictions. They fear that "offending superiors will lead to retaliation; criticizing others will impair mutual retaliation; criticizing others will impair mutual relationships; and struggling against evildoers will endanger one's family and personal life." They are afraid of losing positions as officials, losing the power in their hands and losing money, but they do not mind that the party's cause will be harmed. Therefore, we must resolutely overcome the dark side and the evil trends of extreme individualism existing within the party, vigorously commend the progressive examples of daring to uphold the party's principles and daring to struggle against evil forces and unhealthy tendencies, and cultivate a good moral standard of seeking truth, upholding justice and handling matters impartially.

Our cause is advancing wave upon wave. Each generation of Communists may shoulder a different historical mission, but the true color of communists -- the devoted spirit of serving the people -- will last forever.

CHINA DAILY ARTICLE ON RURAL INDUSTRIES

[By CHINA DAILY reporter: "Rural Industries To Play Vital Role"]

[Text] Sociologists in China today have reason to believe the country has found a way to narrow differences between city and village and between worker and peasant, said Zhang Yi, a leader in the administration of commune-brigade-team-run enterprises of the Ministry for Agriculture, Animal Husbandry and Fishing.

Last year, Zhang said, rural enterprises supported the country's agriculture with three billion yuan of capital, turned over to the state 3.4 billion yuan of taxes paid peasant employees, 11.8 billion yuan in wages and expended more than two billion yuan on rural welfare including birth control. The share of this income per peasant is around 20 yuan a year.

Employment has been given some 30 million who might otherwise be unemployed or under-employed, enabling them to sustain a rural population of 75 million, or an average of 1.5 dependents per job-holder.

Any village that enjoys an annual average per capita income above 300 yuan must have some collective enterprises, Zhang said. And more than 10,000 small towns have grown up around them.

Needful

Some rich brigades like Henan's Liuzhuang, Jiangsu's Huaxi, Zhejiang's Qingyuan, Guangdong's Yucun, Sichuan's Heihutan and others have already surpassed the annual 600-yuan per capita level, no less than a city worker's income -- or even better, considering that living costs are lower in villages and towns.

New generations of peasants have accommodated with much more spacious new housing than do their city kinsfolks.

In 1981, the production value from collective enterprises at commune and brigade levels -- about 72 billion yuan -- was second only to that of the Ministries of Machine-Building and of Light Industry. They produced 10 percent of the country's total industrial and agricultural production value. Their coal output -- 120 million tons -- was 18 percent of the state quota; gold 37 percent; bricks and tiles 70 percent; lime and sandstone 90 percent; embroidery, wicker and bamboo wares, 70 percent; daily wear 40 percent. In short, collective enterprises now cover all walks of life.

Stages

As early as 1959, during the "Great Leap Forward," the forced reduction of rural handicraft and processing enterprises, from a production value of about 10 billion yuan to 2 billion yuan, proved to impose an impossible burden on the central government. Even the most serious criticism during the drive "in agriculture, learn from Dazhai" (putting stress on foodgrains only) couldn't kill those enterprises.

The forthcoming People's Congress in November may change the system of rural organization, and the name "commune" may be discontinued. But no matter what they are called, collective rural enterprises will continue. For better management and development, a planned economy must be maintained, but not without stressing also the supplementary role of market regulation. Therefore, more channels between the two ownership systems should be opened to avoid any reappearance in new forms of speculation and exploitation.

It discourages the initiative of producers, he said, to see Shanxi's collective coal sells locally for 8 yuan a ton while the state pays 20 yuan for purchase and sells it at 40 yuan for allocation -- whereas the free market price is more than 100 yuan in Zhejiang Province.

Peasants must learn science and marketing, he said. Chasing after instant profits will not bring long-term economic gains.

Zhang noted that Sichuan's Xiangyang Commune and Beijing's Shashi Commune have formed corporation-like agriculture-industry-commerce combines to lead sub-affiliates that specialize separately in building, transport, farming, feeding material, slaughtering and the like.

As for the best choice of organizational size, it seems to be the natural village (brigade). Communes are too large and teams too small, he said.

Some day, he said, broad areas of new rural towns will open their arms to welcome volunteer tenants from the cities.

NUCLEAR ACCELERATORS REPORTED DESIGNED, BUILT

OW110953 Beijing XINHUA in English 0704 GMT 11 Nov 82

[Text] Chengdu, November 11 (XINHUA) -- China is building nuclear accelerators in Beijing, Shanghai and Lanzhou to raise its nuclear physical experimental capabilities, said Yang Chengzhong, vice-president of the Chinese Society of Nuclear Research here today.

Professor Yang Chengzhong attended the fifth congress of the society, which closed here yesterday.

"This will promote the application of research in nuclear physics and technology in industry, agriculture and medicine," he told XINHUA.

"China in the past few years has designed and been building the greatest number of accelerators since 1949," he said. These include heavy ion cyclotron system, electron linear and proton accelerators.

He said that China has achieved the following results in the research of nuclear physics in the last two years:

-- Nuclear technology has been widely applied to various fields of the national economy, especially technologies related to nuclear power generation, isotopes, nuclear analysis and nuclear radiation effect.

-- Nuclear theoretical research is being developed, for instance, the theory of nucleus, and study of heavy ion nuclear physics and medium and high-power nuclear physcis.

-- A nuclear data processing center has been established.

Chinese physicists suggested at the congress that China should pay more attention to nuclear power generation.

Further on Accelerators

[Text] Chengdu, 10 Nov (XINHUA) -- It was learned from the fifth national nuclear physics conference that the scientific research departments, the departments of higher education and the industrial departments in various parts of China have joined efforts to build charged particle accelerators. The current situation is quite gratifying. Now there are 18 accelerators of all types under construction or just completed. China now has the largest number of accelerators since the founding of the nation. All these accelerators are designed and built by Chinese engineers and technicians.

Among these accelerators, some of the large and medium-sized ones have been built for the first time in China, including a separated fan-shaped heavy-ion accelerator, a tandem electrostatic accelerator and a proton linear accelerator. The pulse output of the electron beam pulse accelerator completed this year is the largest among this type of accelerators made in China. Its output is also considered quite large when compared with similar accelerators made by other countries in the world.

Scientists have excitedly pointed out that this is a remarkable achievement scored under the correct leadership of the party Central Committee. It shows that China has added new basic equipment for the study of atomic and nuclear science and that China has entered a new stage of development for the study and application of atomic and nuclear science.

In an accelerator, a charged particle will build up energy and become accelerated and controlled. The beams of accelerated particles are used to bombard an atomic nucleus, atom, molecule, quartz or living cell to bring about changes of the atomic nuclei in order to study their structure and the inherent law governing their movement. The bright light emitted by some accelerators is used extensively in the study of physics. The highly accelerated particle beams or the radioactive isotopes produced by an accelerator can be used with a control device to conduct structure and composition analysis, to measure time, positions and the characteristics in the change of materials, to preserve food and to diagnose diseases and treat patients.

The national nuclear physics conference was held between 3 and 9 November in Chengdu.

ZHEJIANG SITE FOR NUCLEAR POWER STATION

[Text] China's first nuclear power station will be built at Qinshan in Haiyen County, Zheijiang Province, near the centre of eastern China's power supply network. Preparations will begin soon for construction.

The power station will have a capacity of 300 megawatts and will be designed and equipped by China. The design is nearing its final stage and the equipment will go into production soon, ECONOMIC INFORMATION reports.

The construction site, Qinshan, is situated New Hangzhou Bay, about 200 kilometres from Shanghai, in an area with suitable topographical conditions, water supply, and communications.

Supported by a rich supply of uranium and an established nuclear fuel industry, China's nuclear power industry will play an important part in the national energy programme.

Eastern China is considered the most favourable area for China's first nuclear power project. Although it is a major agricultural and industrial area, it has fewer natural energy resources.

According to present estimates, 60 per cent of China's coal deposits are located in the north, while 70 per cent of its hydro-power resources are located in the southwest.

Jiang Shengjie, vice-president of China's Nuclear Scientist Society, told a meeting of China's Association of Science and Technology that China can supply enough fuel for a nuclear power station of 15,000 megawatts for a period of 30 years.

SCIENCE FORUM DISCUSSES ZHAO CONGRESS REPORT

[Report: "Scientific Workers and Management Cadres in Science and Technology Meet in Beijing To Exchange Views on Zhao Ziyang's Report"]

[Text] To exchange views on studying Premier Zhao Ziyang's report, the Chinese Scientific and Technological Promotion and Development Center, scientific department of GUANGMING RIBAO and scientific and educational department of this newspaper invited natural science workers, social science workers and management cadres in science and technology in Beijing to attend a forum held on 9 November.

All participating comrades maintained: The 12th CPC Congress has put forward the strategic goal of quadrupling the gross annual value of industrial and agricultural production. To attain this objective, we should first strive to promote the progress of science and technology. Scientific and technical work should be geared to the needs of the economy and production. To bring the role of science and technology into full play, we cannot but carry out a series of reforms. They suggested ways and means for reforming the economic system, scientific research system, personnel management system, reward system, price policy and so forth.

As the forum comrades from the Chinese Academy of Sciences said that they would visit ministries and commissions concerned under the State Council, universities, colleges, factories and enterprises to solicit opinions and to ask for criticism in order to improve scientific research work. Comrades from the Chinese Academy of Social Sciences maintained that they would cooperate with natural science workers to explore jointly problems in science, technology and economy. Those who spoke at the forum included Wu Mingyu, Qian Shanqiang, Huang Shiqi, Yang Zhengming, Wu Chengwen, Luo Dongmiao, Gu Yijian, Zhang Zezheng, Chen Shuxun, Qu Yangqing, Zhang Guowei, Sun Shu, Mei Fangquan, Li Shiying, Zhang Guangdou, Li Zezhong, He Guangqian, Gao Qingshi, Yuan Zhongyu, Zhang Pan, Cheng Qingguo and others. SCIENCE ACADEMY URGES STUDY OF ZHAO SCIENCE TALK

[Excerpts] Beijing, 10 Nov (XINHUA) -- The Chinese Academy of Sciences recently issued a circular, pointing out: Premier Zhao Ziyang's speech at the national science and technology awards meeting profoundly expounded the relationship between science and technology and economic construction and put forward the guiding ideology for scientific and technological work and the tasks of scientific and technological workers. The speech is of great significance for achieving the strategic goals and carrying out the tasks set by the 12th party congress and for guiding the work of the Chinese Academy of Sciences from now on. All units and departments of the academy must organize the vast numbers of scientific and technical personnel, cadres and the masses to study conscientiously the speech, discuss how to implement the principle that scientific and technological work should be geared to economic construction and strive to create a new situation in the work of the Chinese Academy of Sciences.

In the past few days, the academy's leading party group first organized the leading cadres of various offices to study Premier Zhao Ziyang's speech. Many cadres discussed how to implement the guidelines of the speech in the work of the academy, while studying the speech. Vice President Qian Sanqiang said: Premier Zhao in his speech put forward very clear-cut and serious expectations and demands on the country's economic front and especially on the scientific and technological front. The Chinese Academy of Sciences must live up to the expectations of the party and the state.

He said: In the late 1950's and early 1960's the Chinese Academy of Sciences, in coordination with other units concerned, engaged themselves in developing the "two bombs" (atom bomb and hydrogen bomb). Only some 20 research institutes of the academy were then able to take part in the work. Our foundation at that time was a far cry from what it is now. However, we had a slogan at that time: "Let our tasks lead our studies." In the end, the "two bombs" were developed, and the academy made great advances in research work. Now our scientific and technological foundation is better than it was that time. We can muster most of our scientific and technological manpower and should make greater contributions to national economic development.

The responsible persons of various offices and departments expressed many good opinions in light of the actual conditions in their units. Some comrades suggested that the Chinese Academy of Sciences select subjects of study aimed at increasing economic results, and that some necessary readjustments be made on items of basic research which show little promise or significance.

BA YI SAYS BUILDING NUCLEAR SUBMARINES UNWISE

[Text] Since the decision to build six nuclear submarines was made, more and more people in the Military Commission, the General Staff Headquarters and the General Logistics Department have realized that the building of the already obsolete nuclear submarines is an unwise move. At the same time, Comrade Geng Biao, minister of national defense, was seriously criticized for opposing this plan. This criticism was unfair.

China must pay about 10 billion yuan for the submarines. On one hand, we have curtailed general military expenditures and reduced the number of army commanders and fighters, while on the other hand we appropriate large amounts of money to build nuclear submarines that are already obsolete. This runs counter to the party's policy of introducing the most advanced experience from abroad and making the best use of our funds. At present, science and technology, military science and technology in particular, are advancing by leaps and bounds. Even if we completed the six nuclear submarines at the end of the 1980's, other nations would be way ahead of us in this field.

France now has six nuclear submarines. Each submarine can launch 16 guided missiles equipped with multiple nuclear warheads. U.S. and Soviet technology in building nuclear submarines is several times better than French technology. Each of the 6 nuclear submarines which we expect to complete by the end of the 1980's can only launch 12 rockets with a single warhead. They cannot cruise underwater in the Arctic Ocean without being detected by the other side. Thus, these submarines cannot serve as a deterrent force against any of the powerful nations.

Comrade Geng Biao was correct in saying: The U.S. strategy is to fight on other nations' territories and commit aggression against other countries. Therefore, it has built a large number of nuclear submarines that can cruise in all the oceans in the world. It also has ample financial and material resources to back up its strategy. Our army's main strategy is to strengthen our defense on land. To achieve this goal, we, first of all, need regular troops equipped with the most advanced weapons. However, as compared with the advanced countries in the world, our army's weapons and equipment are still of the level of those in the 1950's. To spend 10 billion yuan on 6 nuclear submarines while paying little attention to arming our regular troops will seriously affect the timely fulfillment of our goal of modernizing our national defense.

NATIONAL COMMERCE CONFERENCE ENDS 10 NOV

[Excerpts] Beijing, 10 Nov (XINHUA) -- The national commercial work conference, which ended today in Beijing, decided to implement conscientiously the guidelines of the 12th party congress, further eliminate "left" influences, adopt flexible policies, reform the commercial system and create a new situation in commercial work.

The conference, which began on 20 October, discussed the situation in commercial work and concluded that since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, urban and rural markets have been brisk, prosperous and stable, and commercial readjustment and reform have begun to produce results. However, there are still many problems in commercial work, mainly in that the leadership of commercial departments has not completely rid itself of erroneous "left" ideas and cannot meet the requirements of the new situation.

The conference suggested that the basic task of commerical work in the new period be to "promote commodity production, expand commodity circulation, bring about economic prosperity in urban and rural areas and serve the people's growing material and cultural needs and socialist modernization."

After discussion, the conference decided to adopt further flexible policies and enliven the field of circulation while upholding the leading role of the planned economy and effectively fulfilling state purchase quotas. The concrete measures are as follows:

-- Adopt a flexible policy on the purchase and marketing of agricultural and sideline products. The policy on state purchases of major agricultural and sideline products should be followed. However, the items purchased by the state should be gradually reduced. Agricultural and sidelines products from the first 2 categories purchased by the state will be reduced from 46 to 22 items. Circulation should be enlivened for agricultural and sideline products of the third category and those of the first two categories should be marketed after fulfilling state purchase quotas. Purchasing and selling at negotiated prices should be actively developed, and negotiated prices allowed to rise or fall.

-- Readjust the policy on the purchase and marketing of industrial products. The difference between wholesale and retail prices of some commodities should be suitably expanded -- beginning with small commodities -- and retail outlets at the grassroots level are encouraged to expand retail business. Measures should be taken for purchases of durable consumer goods with the goods delivered first and payments made in installments.

-- Boldly develop collectively and individually operated commerce and catering and service trades, and rationally readjust the proportion of state-operated commerce in social commerce.

The conference also discussed reforming the commerical system and consolidating commercial enterprises, and decided to accelerate the reform of grassroots supply and marketing cooperatives in rural areas and to reform wholesale and retail enterprises, earnestly carry out the consolidation of enterprises and pay attention to the ideological and organizational building of the ranks of commerical workers.

XINHUA COMMENTATOR ON SHOUDU IRON, STEEL COMPANY

[Article by XINHUA Commentator: "Be Masters in Our Own House, Open Up a Path and Forge Ahead -- Important Revelations from the Shoudu Iron and Steel Company's Experience" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Beijing, 11 Nov (XINHUA) -- Not long ago, RENMIN RIBAO and dozens of other papers throughout the country published a report broadcast by this news agency concerning the experiences gained by the Shoudu Iron and Steel Company. The report, entitled "The System of Economic Responsibilities in Industry Is a New Path for an Enterprise To Improve Its Economic Results Through Relying on the Masses," is good teaching material. By means of the creative practices of the iron and steel company's 70,000 or so staff and workers, the report has vividly explained an extremely important Marxist principle: "A living, creative socialism is the product of the masses themselves." This means that as long as we bring into full play the masses' enthusiasm to be masters in their own house, a new situation certainly can be created in all fields of socialist modernization.

"Whether an enterprise can be run successfully lies mainly in whether each and every staff member and worker can be aroused to be the master in his own house." This is an important experience gained by the Shoudu Iron and Steel Company in adopting the system of economic responsibilities. The reason why the Shoudu Iron and Steel Company has been able to achieve prominent results in increasing its economic results by a great margin since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee is because it has been given the power of decision and has adopted the economic responsibility system.

As a result, it was able to eliminate the previous egalitarian and irrational economic administrative system that had exercised excessive control over the enterprise, thus motivating the broad masses of staff members and workers to improve production and administration and to work as the real masters in their own house. This clearly demonstrates that the economic responsibility system really is a new path to increase economic results through relying on the masses.

The reason that the Shoudou Iron and Steel Company has been able to greatly arouse the staff members' and workers' sense of responsibility of being the masters of their own house through adopting the economic responsibility system lies in the fact that the company has divided its economic responsibilities, authority and benefits at all levels and granted them to each post and individual. Consequently each staff member and each worker in the company is held responsible for certain clearly defined and assessable responsibilities and, as a result of defining authority and benefits in accordance with responsibilities, the tens of thousands of posts and each link in the company are closely integrated with all responsibilities, authority and benefits. Thus, the company has turned its economic responsibilities toward the state as well as its administration and coordinated operations into specific requirements for each and every staff member and worker and turned over the expanded authority from the state to the company's staff and workers; on the other hand, the performance of each and every staff member and worker is directly linked to his material benefits. Such a practice of combining responsibilities, authority and benefits has correctly reflected and handled the relationship among the state, the enterprise and individuals and helped the staff and the workers understand from their work that only when our country has become prosperous and strong can the livelihood of the people, including the staff and the workers themselves, gradually be improved; and that only by working diligently can they create a happy new life for themselves. When each individual's future, the company's destiny and the country's hope have been closely integrated, being the masters of our own house will no longer be an empty phrase. Because of its driving force and pressure as well as the authority it represents, it has become an actual motive of all staff members and workers. Now a new order has appeared in the company: Everybody is performing his duty to the best of his ability, sharing all heavy burdens, acting as a "finance minister," striving to increase the economic results and putting his heart and soul into the nation's socialist modernization.

A socialist enterprise is fundamentally different from a capitalist enterprise because the administration of the former relies on all the staff and workers. However, this issue has not been properly resolved and the superiority of the socialist system has not been brought into full play for a long time in our actual work. We cannot possibly turn the feasibility of relying on the masses to run an enterprise into a reality simply by having a good desire. We must also explore and create a specific administrative system and methods that can bring the masses' enthusiasm into full play. The Shoudu Iron and Steel Company's way of doing things is valuable because it has opened up a new path of increasing the economic results by relying on the masses. This is a successful creation of the company in implementing the party's mass line under the new historical conditions. This experience has important revelations not only for the industrial enterprises, but also for other departments.

People are the most active factor in production. The 1 billion people have a potentially inexhaustible enthusiasm for socialism and creative initiative. In his report to the 12th CPC National Congress, Comrade Hu Yaobang said: "It would be impossible for the cause of socialist construction to forge ahead without the soaring labor enthusiasm of the masses in their hundreds of millions, without the initiative of thousands of production units and without the hard work of various localities and departments. To yield the best results, all our economic work, principles, policies, plans and measures must be based on overall arrangement, on taking into consideration the interests of the state, the collective and the individual, and on fully arousing and scientifically organizing the initiative of the central authorities, localities, departments, enterprises and the working people.

"This is the most important way to bring about an all-round upsurge in the socialist economy." We believe that, as long as various enterprises and departments in our country follow the example of the Shoudu Iron and Steel Company, fully arouse each staff member and worker to be the master of his own house, go all out to build a stronger and more prosperous country, open up a new path and forge ahead, then they can surmount any difficulty and the grand objective of our country's socialist modernization certainly will be realized.

RENMIN RIBAO ON COAL MINISTRY'S EDUCATION WORK

[Report: "Ministry of Coal Industry Takes Effective Measures To Develop Education as a Strategic Priority in Economic Development"]

[Text] The Ministry of Coal Industry has adopted a series of measures to develop the cause of education as a basic link in developing coal production.

The party organization in the Ministry of Coal Industry considers education to be very important. Educational work conditions the development of the coal industry. To seek growth and change in the coal industry, we must start with fundamentals. In recent years, the chief leading comrades of the Ministry of Coal Industry have called annual party meetings especially to listen to briefings on educational work and stress the need to handle several major issues well in doing educational work. Moreover, other members of the ministry's party group have often gone to the coal mining colleges and schools to do inspection and guidance work, and help solve certain concrete problems.

The Ministry of Coal Industry has taken effective measures to promote education, achieving definite results.

1. Since 1980, the ministry has allocated a total of 153.7 million yuan for education and has built school premises covering more than 75,000 square meters. Meanwhile, some teaching instruments, equipment and reference books have been replaced.

2. The ministry's party group has invited some professors from institutes of higher learning to join its advisory group and technical inquiry committee. It has also been decided to establish an advisory committee on higher education in coal mining. For several years, coal mining colleges and schools, especially institutes of further education, have generally provided refresher courses in fundamental theory for a number of teachers in a planned and organized manner. They have also introduced forums on special themes, or research classes, to help teachers understand and master the latest scientific and technical achievements in the coal industry and relevant subjects. Meanwhile, priority is given to strengthening the training and raising the standard of backbone middle-aged teachers and pace setters in certain subjects. To this end, three foreign language training classes are now being conducted.

3. Leading groups in colleges and schools have been reorganized. An experiment was first conducted at the China coal mining college. Experiments have also been conducted at other colleges and schools in a systematic manner. It is expected that by the end of this year, two-thirds of the experiments should be completed. Efforts will be made to have all experiments completed before the first half of next year.

4. The establishment of the Beijing coal mining administrative cadres' college has been approved by the State Council. Middle-aged and young cadres' special training classes have been established at four universities and three secondary technical schools. The Ministry of Coal Industry has also sponsored the efforts of several coal-producing provinces to set up coal mining cadres schools. Now, the national coal mining system has about 53 cadre training schools. Many major coal mining bureaus have established educational or training centers.

5. The leadership of the ministry has decided that every coal mining institute of higher learning be allowed to select two coal mining bureaus with which to form a triangular base sharing the common task of training technical personnel. The China coal mining college and the Xuzhou coal mining bureau have reached an initial agreement on the problem of cooperation between school and mining enterprises. Other colleges and schools are energetically making appropriate arrangements.

6. An agreement for the joint operation of schools has been signed with two universities. Negotiations are under way with several universities on joint educational programs. Through this channel, the ministry is prepared to have an additional 3,000 students admitted. Personnel needed in coal mining, civil engineering and other fields will be trained.

Praised in Commentary

["Short commentary": "In Praise of Ministry of Coal Industry for Developing Education"]

[Text] How should economic work departments develop education? The methods adopted by the Ministry of Coal Industry provide enlightenment.

1. Guiding ideology is clearcut. There are two main rules. First, to develop production, education must be taken as the fundamental factor. Second, the development of education is not only the business of the educational department but also a strategic task of coal department. Such a way of thinking on the part of the Ministry of Coal Industry is the very embodiment of the guiding idea of taking education and science as strategic priorities in future economic development put forth at the 12th CPC National Congress.

2. The Ministry of Coal Industry pays attention to education while other members of the party organization of the ministry also concern themselves with education. This rule is of utmost importance. At present, the erroneous idea of underrating education is still quite widespread in society. If the chief leading comrades do not regard the development of education as their own duty or get personally involved, it is impossible to place education in the position as one of the strategic priorities.

3. Effective measures are taken to create a new situation in educational work as quickly as possible. The Ministry of Coal Industry has performed well, achieving remarkable results in such fields as increasing investment in education, accelerating the building of schools, carrying out the policy toward intellectuals on a solid basis, following various patterns for the development of education, and so forth. The Ministry of Coal Industry is thus unlike some other departments and areas which preach more than they act and do no more than indulge in empty talk.

In the light of conditions in the Ministry of Coal Industry, it is entirely possible to arouse forces in various fields to accelerate the development of the educational enterprise. We are confident that after the 12th CPC National Congress more departments and areas can really pay close attention to education as a strategic priority.

BEIJING MEETING STRESSES ENERGY CONSERVATION

[Text] Beijing, November 9 (XINHUA) -- Energy experts met in Beijing on November 1 and 2 to discuss energy development and conservation in China, according to the China Association for Science and Technology.

They expressed overall satisfaction with development but were critical of the present status of energy conservation.

Delegates said that effective technology has not been widely applied and that many enterprises lacked energy conservation methods.

The experts on energy urged enterprises to coordinate work in the conservation field, apply new energy-saving technology and study energy management. They put forward a number of proposals on production, conservation, utilization and management of energy.

Chongqing, Sichuan Province's largest industrial city, has organized a number of energy conservation service teams to introduce new technology, products and materials to energy-gobbling enterprises and help them train technical personnel.

Team members come from universities and colleges, design institutes and energy production and supply departments.

To date, the teams have provided 3,500 automatic switch-off devices for two-thirds of the electric welding machines in the city, this will save an estimated 10 million kWh of electricity a year.

A steel mill in the city renovated its gas furnace with preheating and heat insulation devices and other devices provided by the service teams. Gas consumption for each ton of steel dropped from 220 cubic meters to 80 cubic meters.

In Zhejiang Province, coal consumption per 100 million yuan of output value went from 29,600 tons in 1981 to 24,900 tons this year, according to the provincial energy conservation office.

The office reported that the province saved over one million tons of standard coal in 1980 and 1981. In the first nine months this year, total industrial output value registered an 8.2 per cent increase over the same 1981 period whereas the supply of energy only rose 3 per cent.

Beginning in 1980, Zhejiang imposed strict energy quotas on enterprises, with rewards given for underconsumption and penalties for overconsumption.

Other measures included restricting development of energy-consuming products, recycling cinders and encouraging use of low-caloric coal, gangue and stone coal.

3-YEAR RAILWAY DEVELOPMENT PLAN WORKED OUT

OW101344 Beijing XINHUA in English 1228 GMT 10 Nov 82

[Text] Beijing, November 10 (XINHUA) -- In the next three years China plans to build 1,700 kilometers of single railway tracks and 1,500 kilometers of double tracks, and to electrify 2,000 kilometers of existing railway lines, according to a three-year development program worked out by the Ministry of Railways.

In addition, seven switching yards are scheduled to be completed in whole or in part and three large passenger stations built at Shanghai, Shenyang and Shijiazhung.

The volume of freight transport will reach 1.2 billion tons and that of passenger transport will come to 1.1 billion by 1985.

Most of the new railway projects will be in north China, southwest China and east China, aimed at raising the capacity of transporting coal from Shanxi Province, coal and phosphate ore from Yunnan and Guizhou and relieving the pressure in the coastal areas, the ministry said.

Minister Chen Puru said that this represents only the groundwork for reaching the goal of raising the present freight and passenger transport volume by 40 percent by 1990 and of faster development thereafter.

China's present railway lines total 50,000 kilometers in length, mostly built over the past thirty-three years. By 1981, the annual volume of passenger transport was 942 million people and the volume of freight was 1,048 billion tons.

The present railway network, the ministry said, still can not meet the requirements of the rapidly developing national economy. Every year nearly 10 million more tons of coal in Shanxi Province still needs to be hauled out to energy-short areas.

"What we need are redoubled efforts on the part of the 2.7 million railway workers to accelerate the modernization of rail transport," the minister said.

The pressing tasks are the technical transformation of the coal hauling railways and the electric and internal-combustion locomotives for heavier loads. In addition, great efforts will have to be made to build new lines, boost the manufacturing capacity of rail transport facilities and train a great number of competent personnel for a vigorous development of China's railways, the ministry said.

OFFICIAL ON MODERNIZING ECONOMIC LEGISLATION

[Text] Beijing, November 9 (XINHUA) -- China needs to establish a system of economic laws that is applicable to its domestic requirements conditions, according to Gu Ming, leader of the economic legislation research center of the State Council.

Gu Ming, who is also deputy director of the legislative Affairs Commission of the Standing Committee of the National People's Congress, said that in the past three years China has enacted more than 260 economic laws and regulations, promulgated either by the National People's Congress and the State Council or directly by the departments or commissions under the State Council.

Gu Ming said that China continues to follow the economic development policy of opening to the outside world, based on the principle of equality and mutual benefit. In this connection, the formulation of some new laws and regulations related to foreign countries is underway in addition to the laws and regulations already enacted. These new laws and regulations already enacted. These new laws and regulations include the law of foreign independent enterprises in China, regulations governing importing technologies, regulations for China's investment in foreign countries and regulations concerning awarding investment by overseas Chinese.

He said approximately 200 more economic laws or regulations are in the process of formulation. These mainly concern aspects including ownership, land and resources, economic planning and management, finance, taxes, construction projects, labor, social welfare and insurance.

The laws and regulations, Gu Ming said, are rooted in China's present economic conditions: that is, a planned economy supplemented by marketing adjustment. These statutes take into consideration the current, evolving economic situation that state economy leads collective and individual economies and various ways of management and distribution channels are utilized.

While learning from foreign countries' experience in economic legislation, he added, it is more important that economic laws and regulations suit China's own conditions.

The official said, the fundamental principle guiding China's urban development -- "controlling the scale of big cities, rational development of medium-sized cities and active development of small cities and towns" -- conforms to the conditions of a populous agricultural country like China. Such a mode of urban development is calculated to raise the living standards of the peasants and narrow the gap between the city and the countryside.

Noticeable results have been achieved in a number of laws and regulations, Gu Ming said. Since the issuance of regulations regarding development of individual enterprises, the number of people who have found their jobs in such enterprises increased from 180,000 in 1976 to 1.04 million by the end of last year.

The enforcement of environmental protection laws has also had a positive impact on the protection and control of environmental pollution. Nearly all the 19 construction projects in Zhengzhou, Henan Province, completed in 1981 had environmental protection equipment.

The economic contract code has helped strengthen the management of contracts and raised the contract fulfillment rate.

Gu Ming noted that economic judicial work has also improved along with the evolution of economic legislation. So far, economic divisions have been set up at the Supreme People's Court, Higher People's Court and Intermediate People's Courts. To settle economic conflicts in railway communications, a higher railway court and more than 80 intermediate and basic people's courts were established.

In conclusion, Gu Ming called for improved training of cadres on economic laws and other laws and for the upgrading the research in economic laws.

CRIME RATE DECLINE ATTRIBUTED TO POLICY

[Text] Beijing, November 10 (XINHUA) -- Criminal cases in the first nine months of the year dropped by 15.7 percent as compared with the same period of last year, according to the Ministry of Public Security.

An official of the ministry told XINHUA that the nation's criminal cases in 1979, 1980 and 1981 averaged 750,000, with a crime rate of 7.5 per 10,000 people. The majority of the cases were minor criminal cases. Major criminal cases including murder, robbery, rape, arson accounted for only 6 percent or 50,000 of the total, the official said.

According to available reports from relevant countries, there were more than 13.3 million criminal cases in the United States in 1980 with a crime rate of 590 per 10,000 people. The crime rate in West Germany in 1980 was 620 per 10,000 people and the rate in Japan which was usually considered as comparatively low in the world was 120 per 10,000 people in 1979.

The official said that the fundamental reason for the drop in the crime rate is the policy of the past years to mobilize the whole party and the whole social forces and social circles to maintain order in their localities.

Under the policy, the official said, two major steps have been employed:

-- Schools, factories, neighborhood committees and families educate erring youth and juvenile delinquents in their respective units. In many places groups composed of teachers, parents, activists in maintaining social order and police were established for youth education.

Such groups were set up in Hebei, Liaoning, Shandong, Sichuan and Jilin Provinces since 1981. In Tianjin, education groups helped offenders to find jobs or continue their studies after they mended their ways.

— A social order responsibility system in factories, mines, enterprises and production brigades in the countryside has been introduced along with the production responsibility system. The system includes provisions giving awards or fining for losses caused in accordance with respective local social order conditions.

Another factor in improving social order, the official said, is the policy of combining police work with mass line.

The official said the rate for solving serious criminal cases has been above 85 percent for several years. In the first nine months of this year, people caught and sent to the police stations offenders and suspects in more than 50,000 cases, he said.

XI XIANGQIAN RECEIVES SISTER OF PLA MARTYR

[From the "Review of the Beijing Press"]

[Text] JIEFANGJUN BAO: On the afternoon of 5 November, Xu Xiangqian, vice chairman of the Military Commission of the CPC Central Committee, cordially received (Yuan Shulan), a new fighter and sister of martyr (Yuan Mandun), and wrote an inscription for her to encourage her to become a brave fighter for the ideals of communism.

Last 24 February, Comrade (Yuan Mandun), a fighter of the 1st Company of a PLA unit under the Beijing Garrison District, sacrificed himself in rescuing the two workers from drowning. After his death, his younger sister (Yuan Shulan), with the support of their parents, volunteered to take up her brother's weapon to stand guard for the motherland and the people. Her application was approved by the leading organ of the PLA units in this year's conscription. On 4 November, she reported to duty at the unit to which her brother had belonged.

In receiving (Yuan Shulan) in his residence, Comrade Xu Xiangqian joyfully told her: Thousands of revolutionary martyrs sacrificed their lives for the cause of communism. Their spirit will live forever. We the living ones must not forget them. Man lives to perform good service for the people and to do his best for the revolution. Your brother sacrificed himself to save others and thus performed good service for the people. His life radiated with communist ideology. You should learn from him. You should become a good fighter like your brother and do your part for building our army and for achieving our country's four modernizations.

RENOVATION OF GENGHIS KHAN MAUSOLEUM COMPLETED

[Text] Hohhot, November 11 (XINHUA) -- Renovation of the mausoleum of Genghis Khan (1162-1227), strategist, statesmen and unifier of the Mongols, has been completed in southwestern Inner Mongolia and listed for national protection by the State Council.

A five-meter high statute of Genghis Khan, whoise Mongolian name was Temujin and whose descendants founded the Yuan Dynasty (1271-1368), adorns the main of three domed palatial halls. A mural in a passageway depicts major episodes in his life.

Archeologists believe Genghis Khan was secretly buried according to the customs of the Mongolian nationality. However, to offer sacrifices, his descendants built eight white yurts, low Mongolian tents, which were placed in the Ih Ju League in the region's southwest in the mid-sixteenth century during the Ming Dynasty (1368-1644)

The mausoleum was built in the league in 1956. Four yurts draped with golden silk and satin are housed in a hall. Inside the yurts are coffins in honor of Genghis Khan, his wife and relatives.

TEXT OF FENG HONGZHI LETTER TO CHIANG CHING-KUO

HK091144 Beijing ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE in Chinese 0231 GMT 7 Nov 82

[Text] Beijing, 7 Nov (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- New York's MEIZHOU HUAQIAO RIBAO carried on 2 November a letter from Feng Hongzhi, son of Gen Feng Yuxiang, to Chiang Ching-kuo. The text of it follows:

Dear Ching-kuo: Owing to the vast expanse of sea and sky, I have not heard from you for a long time. Recently it has been said that you have not been getting on very well over the past year or so with regard to your administration and your health. Being an old family friend, I am deeply worried by this! I often recall those days when we studied together in the Soviet Union with our brothers and sisters and the days when I studied in Germany with your younger brother Wei-kuo. They seem to have happened only yesterday. At that time we all had the determination to study for our motherland. Thirty years ago an earth-shaking historic change took place on China's mainland. You then went with your respected father, Chiang Kai-shek, to Taiwan. As a result, our motherland was divided. Accordingly, our long-cherished high aspirations for the country and the nation were not realized. Instead, they were damaged. I have been working hard for many years since I came to live in the United States but have made a very small contribution. I cannot but feel regret for this whenever I think of my old friends.

This year, on the occasion of the 100th birthday of my father, Huanzhang (note: Feng Huanzhang was an alias for Feng Yuxiang), the Chinese Government and people from various circles held a grand ceremony to commemorate his contribution to the country and the nation, which he made through his life of exhausting labor. I also returned to China from abroad to cherish the memory of my father's meritorious deeds with my brothers and sisters. Being generously treated by the Chinese Government, I was able to join the memorial ceremony held before my father's tomb at Taishan with people from various circles and to fulfill my filial piety and duty. I also took this opportunity to take a glance at the magnificent scenery of our motherland. Our compatriots throughout the country are now advancing bravely like galloping horses and rushing clouds in the construction of socialist modernization. I am greatly inspired by the prosperity and good situation in various fields and am full of confidence in the rejuvenation of China. All descendants of the Chinese nation should be glad and feel proud of this. In past years, in order to realize Dr Sun Yat-sen's revolutionary ideals and thoroughly implement the three principles of the people, your respected father, Kai-shek and my father, Huanzhang, acted hand in hand, like brothers with the shared aspiration of seeking the country's well-being and they fought against common enemies. Kai-shek took the following oaths: "The sea may run dry and the rocks may crumble and I may also die for my belief, but I will always share good and bad with my comrades and never give a thought to my personal safety." My father also made the following pledges: "The true essence of alliance is to realize our principles. For this I will persevere to the end even if my body is cut into 10,000 pieces." If the cooperation had continued in this way, the country and the nation would have benefited more from it. Unfortunately the conceited highest authorities meant to conquer the whole country. Thus, our fathers had to separate halfway and fell out with each other. The KMT-CPC cooperation established by Dr Sun Yat-sen was damaged, and the vitality of our country, which had been plunged into war for many successive years, was seriously drained. At that time, the enemy was glad and the people were sad. The Japanese militarists took this opportunity to invade our country, thus putting our country and nation onto the verge of destruction. Then our fellow countrymen and some wise people appealed to all parties to abandon previous hostilities for the sake of the country, and a good situation was created in the war of resistance against Japan by all the people. My father spared no effort in fighting the enemy. He fought bravely on the battlefields in the central plains, helping his chief commander save the nation. The people throughout the country, with everything ready for war, fought heroically in the bloody battles.

Their spirit would even have made heaven and the gods tremble. The Chinese people were finally victorious after 8 years of fighting. Originally, the people were to have been united to recuperate and China was to have been reconstructed and invigorated again. However, the highest authorities were infatuated with hegemony and military force. The second KMT-CPC cooperation was damaged and the country was again plunged into war and disaster. This was why my father had to le ve China for a strange foreign country and why the people throughout China had to endure hardships and wage another struggle for a righteous cause.

Finally New China was founded. You went with your father to Taiwan and continued to use the old name of the republic in the Taiwan and Penghu areas. Thus, China was once again divided rather than united. More than 30 years have quickly passed since then. The people throughout China earnestly and eagerly hope that China will be reunified. At about this time last year, Chairman Ye Jianying issued a nine-point policy for the reunification of China. This policy represents a righteous cause. It is fair and reasonable and enjoys support from the people throughout the country. So far as I have seen and heard, most overseas Chinese are eagerly expecting the realization of this policy. This is the trend of the times and the desire of the people. I believed that you loved your country so deeply and were so foresighted and wise that you would certainly act in conformity with the people's desires and the trend of the times and would lead your men back to the embrace of the motherland so that the great cause of the reunification of China could be completed. Unexpectedly, you still persisted in preserving the division of China under the pretext of "reunifying China under the three principles of the people." After Dr Sun Yat-sen's death, for more than 20 years your father commanded the armed forces and claimed to be the central power of the whole country. It was not a short period of time, but how was the true essence of the three principles of the people implemented then? Moreover, in the more than 30 years since you and your father have been confined within Taiwan, how many facilities have been established there which are in conformity with the theory and practice of the three principles of the people? This time when I returned to China, I saw with my own eyes the progress of both the spiritual and the material construction on the mainland. Not only have the three principles of the people and the ideals advocated and assiduously sought for by Dr Sun Yat-sen throughout his life been realized, they have even been greatly surpassed. If Dr Sun Yat-sen were still alive today, he would certainly feel pleased with these realities, rather than merely the blueprint he made half a century ago for building the country. Dr Sun Yat-sen's thinking has been developed with the passing time. It will continue to be respected by our descendants. However, even to this day, you still refuse to hold peaceful talks. Thus, people cannot but blame you for perpetuating the long-term division of the motherland under the pretext of the three principles of the people. Time and tide wait for no man. We are all old. If you can put an end to the troubles started by our forefathers, you will prove yourself a good son to our ancestors and will be praised by our descendants. You must be responsible to the country, to the nation and to history. A prompt decision will decide the path to be followed. Both positive contributions and crimes go down in history for hundreds of years. You are a wise man and should choose between these two yourself. It is autumn now, and I hope you are taking good care of yourself.

With best regards,

Yours in brotherhood,

Feng Hongzhi

TAIPEI SPOKESMAN COMMENTS ON BREZHNEV'S DEATH

OW111415 Taipei Domestic Service in Mandarin 1200 GMT 11 Nov 82

[Text] In answering questions raised by reporters about the death of Russian leader Brezhnev, Liu Ta-jen, spokesman of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, said: Before his death, Russian chieftain Brezhnev wantonly engaged in infiltration and subversive activities and carried out aggression and expansion abroad in an attempt to communize the world and to enslave all mankind. He was the biggest dictator of the communist bloc. The Soviet Union will in no way alter its objective of communizing the world, no matter who succeeds Brezhnev as Russian chieftain.

U.S. MAGAZINE STORY ON TAIWAN TROUBLES REBUTTED

OW101030 Taipei International Service in English 0100 GMT 10 Nov 82

[Text] One of the American news magazines recently had a cover story on the Republic of China. It was entitled "Troubled Taiwan" and made interesting reading except that Taiwan is in [words indistinct] trouble. This is not to say that free China has no troubles. It has plenty of them in company with every country in the world. With unemployment of over 10 percent, the United States certainly has troubles. So do Japan and West Germany. Taiwan's unemployment is still under 3 percent, which could be the lowest figure in the world. The economy is not growing as fast as formerly, but neither is anyone else's.

The troubles singled out by the magazine are mainly in the field of international politics. Taiwan is depicted as isolated and alone and in danger of losing its best friend, the United States of America. Maybe that is the way it looks to a visiting reporter, but not to the people of the Republic of China. Consider, for example, the statement that free China has diplomatic relations with only 23 countries, most of them military dictatorships in Latin America. To begin with, those 23 countries include South Korea, Saudi Arabia and South Africa, all of considerable importance.

More important than that, the Republic of China's foreign relations have shown that internationalism is a good deal more than formal diplomacy. You do not have to exchange embassies in order to have close ties. In point of actual count, free China has relations with nearly all of the free countries and certainly with all of the important ones. These relationships involve trade worth more than U.S. $40 billion a year. Social and cultural exchanges are also involved. The United States, Japan and the major European countries have offices in Taipei, and the Republic of China has offices in their capitals. These are not called embassies. There are not ambassadors and consuls, but the work done is about the same. The friendships are just as important.

In the case of the United States, the relationship is established under the Taiwan Relations Act and is entirely formalized as an agreement to establish diplomatic relations. Although the Taiwan Relations Act is not a military pact, it includes aspects bearing on defense of the people of Taiwan. The TRA pledges, for example, that the United States should supply Taiwan with defensive arms sufficient to hold off any aggressor. It also says that aggression against the island would be regarded as a breach of peace in Asia and the Pacific. The president of the United States could order American troops into action under the TRA, or the Congress could declare war. Free China hopes that these things do not happen, but the Chinese Communists know that they are possibilities.

Much has recently been made of the August 17 communique between the United States and Red China. This said that the United States would reduce arms sales to the Republic of China provided the Chinese Communists show peaceful intentions toward Taiwan. That is the catchword of course -- peaceful intentions.

Red China has not held out a genuine hand of peace to free China and is not likely to do so. In any event, the Taiwan Relations Act is a law of the United States passed by the Congress and signed by the president, whereas the communique is a policy declaration of the president. The TRA [words indistinct] under the communique is binding only to the point that the TRA is adhered to. So when the news magazine says that the communique is one of Taiwan's troubles, that is not quite true. The communique was an effort of the Reagan adminstration to appease the Chinese Communists, who would like to cut off the Republic of China from it sources of defense weapons. The Peking regime is now beginning to find this out and is making a lot of noise, but it will not do them any good because the Taiwan Relations Act still governs relations between the United States and the Republic of China.

Free China has troubles, yes. But they are neither fatal nor even so serious as some of those afflicting its neighbors. It has, for example, a united people, and that is a good deal more than Red China can say.

TA KUNG PAO ON PRC RELATIONS WITH U.S., USSR

HK100708 Hong Kong TA KUNG PAO in Chinese 10 Nov 82 p 2

["Political Talk" column by Shih Chun-yu: "Sino-U.S., Sino-Soviet and Sino-Vietnamese Relations"]

[Text] Reagan's Message to Taipei

Reports from Taipei said that David Kennedy, the U.S. representative to the annual U.S.-Taiwan economic meeting, yesterday read a message of greetings from President Ronald Reagan.

In a news report on this by the REUTER news agency, the reporter specifically stressed in the headline: Reagan's message points out: "The unofficial relations between the people of our two countries are important."

In his message, Reagan weighed the word "unofficial relations." It seems that he has protested his innocence too much. Reagan termed the relations unofficial, but he took up the matter himself and sent a message of greetings in the name of the U.S. President. Thus, people cannot but ask what the relations actually are.

China has repeatedly pointed out that since Sino-U.S. diplomatic relations were established, the United States should no longer take Taiwan as a political entity. If Reagan only says something plausibly but does not follow through with action, then Sino-U.S. relations can hardly be developed on a sound basis.

Waiting for Real Actions To Be Taken by the Soviet Union

There was another meeting yesterday, one between Deng Xiaoping, chairman of the CPC Central Advisory Commission, and Japanese guest Tokuma Utsunomiya. During the meeting, they talked about Sino-U.S. and Sino-Soviet relations.

Tokuma Utsunomiya arrived in Beijing as head of a delegation from the Japan-China Friendship Association. As an old hand at the fishery trade in Japan, he has numerous contacts with the Soviet Union regarding the north Pacific fishing grounds.

On the occasion of the 65th anniversary of the October Revolution this year, the Chinese and Soviet ambassadors respectively attended some activities to mark the day. In addition, the vice ministers of foreign affairs of the two countries held consultations recently. So, the Japanese side paid great attention to these contacts between China and the Soviet Union, hoping to discern the ins and outs and find a suitable path for itself.

During the meeting, Deng Xiaoping specifically noted the threat posed by Soviet troops massed along the Sino-Soviet border and once again pointed out that we must judge people by their deeds, not just by their words.

In an interview with French journalists last month, Hu Yaobang also pointed out: "China sincerely hopes all obstacles to the normalization of Sino-Soviet relations will be removed." It seems China is still waiting for real actions to be taken by the Soviet Union.

The Issue of Resuming Normal Relations Between China and Vietnam

Since the arrival of Mr Leonid Ilichev, the Soviet deputy foreign minister, in Beijing (he has already returned home) to consult with his Chinese counterpart, foreign news agencies have reported some rumors that Vietnam also intended to make contacts with China.

Over the past few months, Beijing has all along kept silent on the matter. But, the day before yesterday, China made her position on the normalization of Sino-Vietnamese relations known when her permanent delegate to the United Nations, Ling Qing, took the floor at the General Assembly session. This was the first such event in many years.

In his speech, he said that as for improving relations, there are no obstacles on the Chinese side. Sino-Vietnamese relations can be immediately normalized, provided the Vietnamese authorities give up their aggressive and territorial expansionist policy, withdraw their troops from Kampuchea and stop their hostilities toward China.

Now, we will see what actions Vietnam will take.

Struggle Against Hegemonists, Big and Small

Judging from its relations with the United States, the Soviet Union and Vietnam, we can see that China is obviously and unswervingly carrying out its independent policy in foreign affairs.

By taking Taiwan as a political entity, the United States is now interfering in China's internal affairs, pursuing the policy of "two Chinas" and wrecking the territorial integrity of China. All this has constituted a major problem in Sino-U.S. relations.

Regarding Sino-Soviet relations, there are three obstacles: 1) the Soviet troops amassed along the Sino-Soviet border; 2) the Soviet's wanton invasion of Afghanistan, a neighbor close to China's border in western Asia; and 3) Soviet support for Vietnam's aggression and territorial expansion, invasion of Kampuchea and hostilities toward China.

The third obstacle to Sino-Soviet relations is also the problem which should be solved in resuming Sino-Vietnamese relations.

In his opening speech at the 12th national party congress, Deng Xiaoping pointed out: "No foreign country can expect China to be its vassal, nor can it expect China to swallow any bitter fruit harmful to China's interests."

The superpower hegemonists as well as hegemonists in other places should take note of this solemn indication.

UN ADOPTS DECLARATION ON PEACEFUL SETTLEMENT

[Text] United Nations, November 15 (XINHUA) -- The U.N. General Assembly today unanimously adopted the Manila Declaration calling for peaceful settlement of international disputes.

"Every state shall settle its international disputes exclusively by peaceful means in such a manner that international peace and security, and justice, are not endangered," the declaration says. It also calls for respect for the sovereign equality of states and the free choice of means in settling a dispute as stipulated in the U.N. Charter.

In the event of failure to achieve a settlement, the declaration says, the parties to a dispute shall refer it to the Security Council in accordance with the U.N. Charter. It rules out the use of force or threat of force in settling disputes between states.

The declaration says that states would be encouraged to make greater use of the fact-finding capacity of the Security Council and of the International Court of Justice, as the principal judicial organ of the United Nations.

CONFERENCE ON RARE METAL PRODUCTION ENDS 11 NOV

[Text] Hangzhou, November 11 (XINHUA) -- China expects to undertake cooperation in technology, trade and exploitation of rare metal resources with other countries, according to Zhou Chuandian, Chinese vice-minister of metallurgical industry.

The vice-minister made the statement at an international conference on rare metals production and application which ended here today.

The four-day conference in Hangzhou, capital of Zhejiang Province, was attended by 143 metallurgists from 12 countries, and jointly sponsored by the Chinese and British metals societies. Zhou Chuandian also serves as vice-president of the China Society of Metals.

According to papers presented at the conference, countries have been progressing at various rates in the development of rare metals production and application.

For its part, China has rich reserves of rare metal resources and has established a fairly comprehensive capacity to produce metals such as tungsten, antimony, titanium, vanadium, rare earth, nickel and molybdenum. With extraction and processing knowhow acquired since its founding in 1949, China has been able to produce new materials for developing its nuclear, electronics, aviation and astronautics industries.

Zhou Chuandian told participants that China is now planning to further exploit and utilize its rare metal resources to meet the growing needs in the country's modernization program. Foreign metallurgists at the conference expressed a willingness to strengthen technical exchange and cooperation with their Chinese counterparts in production and application of rare metals.

Those attending the conference heard 44 papers, 17 of which were presented by Chinese metallurgists.

'ROUNDUP' ON U.S. LIFTING OF PIPELINE SANCTIONS

OW151540 Beijing XINHUA in English 1523 GMT 15 Nov 82

[Roundup: U.S. Lifts Sanctions on Pipeline Deal -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Washington, November 14 (XINHUA) -- U.S. President Ronald Reagan's decision to lift sanctions against European and American firms under contract with the Soviet Union for the laying of the natural gas pipeline has temporarily eased tensions between the United States and its European allies.

The conflict between the United States and European countries over the pipeline deal lasted nearly one year. After martial law was imposed in Poland last December, Reagan announced sanctions against the pipeline deal, protesting Soviet "interference" in Polish internal affairs. He also appealed to the European allies to follow his suit.

Considering their own political and economic interests, France, Britain, West Germany and Italy refused to cooperate. They signed contracts with the Soviet Union before or after Reagan's announcement.

Without consulting the allies, Reagan announced in June that the sanctions were extended to U.S. companies' subsidiaries abroad and European firms with American licenses. To this action the European countries concerned responded strongly. Despite U.S. sanctions, these countries continued to implement the contracts signed with the Soviet Union. For a time, the Atlantic alliance was engaged in a quarrel and the relations between the United States and its allies became tense. The ruling and opposition parties in these countries also squabbled endlessly.

When the effort to exert pressures on its allies failed, Reagan made a concession. U.S. Secretary of State George Shultz met NATO foreign ministers twice last month, agreeing to discuss further with their ambassadors in Washington. After a few weeks' discussion, the United States and its allies reached an agreement which included limitation of export of strategic goods and technology to the Soviet Union, coordination in the credit and import policy and finding a way to reduce dependence on the Soviets on energy resources. Before a new plan was worked out, no new contracts would be signed with the Soviet Union, but the European countries could implement the already signed contracts.

Reagan's announcement was made after the above said agreement with Europe was reached. It should be noted that Reagan's decision was announced following Soviet President Leonid Brezhnev's death.

Reagan claimed that the agreement would be more powerful and effective in limiting Soviet gains from the West and constituted a victory for all the allies. But soon after Reagan's announcement, the French Government issued a statement saying that France was not a party to the agreement. The U.S. press commented cautiously that the agreement was only a working outline and would take time to be fulfilled.

[Article by Zhang Yunwen [1728 0336 2429]: "Tension in U.S.-European Relations Eases"]

[Text] On 13 November U.S. President Reagan announced the lifting of the ban on the supplying of equipment to the Soviet natural gas pipeline project in Siberia. Reagan said that an agreement on the pipeline issue had been concluded between the United States and its West European allies. He said, we unanimously agree that none of us should engage in any economic transaction which may, militarily or strategically, benefit the Soviet Union or which may assist that country in realizing a high degree of militarization. Therefore, the sanction is "no longer necessary" thanks to such a "more powerful and more effective measure."

Reagan announced this decision just after he returned from the Soviet Embassy in Washington where he expressed condolences on Brezhnev's death.

As reported, the "substantial agreement" concluded among the Western countries mentioned by Reagan is mainly a complete series of methods to restrain granting loans on preferential terms and transferring the possession of highly sophisticated technologies to the Soviet Union, as well as to avoid dependence on the energy resources of that country.

This action taken by the United States is extensively welcomed by West European countries and Japan. Therefore, it will ease the increasingly serious tension in relations between the United States and its allies.

Reagan had imposed the ban to prohibit U.S. companies from exporting natural gas pipeline equipment to the Soviet Union soon after Poland enforced martial law in December last year. On 18 June this year he extended this ban to U.S. companies' subsidiaries in Europe and all West European companies which were using U.S.-patented petroleum and natural gas equipment. This decision evoked powerful reactions among the West European countries. The French, West German, British and Italian Governments declared one after another that they would ignore the ban imposed by the United States and would continue to fulfill the obligations stipulated by the contracts they had concluded with the Soviet Union. On 8 October the U.S. Customs Service confiscated $3 million-worth of U.S.-made steam turbine components owned by Italian companies and thus provoked the Italian Government's reproach. However, on 15 October Reagan told U.S. farmers that the U.S. Government had decided to sell 2.3 million tons of grain to the Soviet Union and assured them the United States would never impose a grain embargo on the Soviet Union, even if the latter invaded Poland. The Reagan administration's "double standard" toward the embargo on the Soviet Union further irritated its West European allies and thus intensified the conflict between the United States and Europe.

The development of the situation has shown that the sanctions imposed by the United States failed to stop Western Europe from concluding the transactions concerning the natural gas pipeline project with the Soviet Union, but instead "caused losses on the part of the United States and Europe" and thus created a "large gap" in the unity of the West European alliance. The sanctions by the Reagan administration also faced much opposition at home. The embargo made some companies in those states facing serious unemployment, especially those in Illinois, lose the chance to sign $90 million worth of contracts and increase job opportunities. The media of the Western world stated that U.S. industrial enterprises in fact suffered even more than their European counterparts did.

Facing setbacks domestically and internationally, the Reagan administration was forced to seek a compromise so as to break the deadlock, relax the tension in U.S.-European relations and mitigate the conflicts at home.

At the NATO foreign ministers conference held in Canada in early October, U.S. Secretary of State Shultz held initial consultations with the foreign ministers of West European countries on formulating a common policy on trade with the Soviet Union. Later, in Washington, high-ranking officials of the U.S. State Department held a series of secret talks with the ambassadors of four European countries in the United States. Similar talks were also held with Canada, Japan and the EEC countries. Although both sides hoped to settle their disputes, they disagreed with each other on how to go about it. Therefore, the negotiations were carried on for several months without reaching any notable conclusion.

The United States decided to drop its sanctions so that Western Europe would make greater concessions regarding its trade with the Soviet Union. However, Western Europe was only willing to reach an agreement similar to that of the Versailles declaration issued in last June. It has refused to make any more promises.

Among those West European nations, France has taken a particularly uncompromising stand. It has maintained that since the sanctions were unilaterally imposed by the United States, it is the United States which should change. It is unnecessary for Europe to make any concession in actual practice. President Mitterrand made a statement again on 5 November that France was only willing to discuss its trade relations with the Soviet Union. He stresed that it was "impossible to negotiate problems which cannot be negotiated." The negotiations were speeded up in the latter half of last October. The United States demanded that West European nations restrain their credit to the Soviet Union, impose firm restrictions on technological transfer and refrain from concluding any new energy contracts with the Soviet Union. The issue of credit was the main point. France did not agree to stop providing the Soviet Union with export credit because in its trade with the Soviet Union it had imported a large quantity of energy and raw materials, resulting in a large French trade deficit. It was absolutely necessary for France to export industrial goods in order to reduce the deficits.

In early November, Italian Prime Minister Giovanni Spadolini visited the United States. It was reported that the Italian prime minister talked with the U.S. President on the special topic of the gas pipeline and informed the United States of the unified stand of the principal European countries. This played a considerable role in ending the dispute.

The dispute between the United States and Europe on the gas pipeline issue reflected the divergence of views of the West on its strategy toward the Soviet Union and their conflicting interests. Furthermore, this dispute also demonstrated that France is markedly seeking more and more independence and that it is difficult for the United States to control its allies. Obviously, this was one of the reasons the United States lifted the ban before it attained its objectives. Therefore, public opinion in the United States also held that the U.S. Government should learn a lesson from this incident and refrain from interfering in other countries' internal affairs and taking unilateral actions.

The agreement on iron and steel reached not long ago and the settlement of the dispute on the gas pipeline have relaxed the tension between the United States and Europe only temporarily.

The conflict will continue to surface from time to time. However, because they have common strategic interests and are interdependent militarily and economically, their contradictions will not intensify to an uncontrollable degree.

U.S.-CHINA CONFERENCE ON ENERGY HELD IN BEIJING

Wang Shien Attends

[Text] Beijing, November 8 (XINHUA) -- Chinese State Councillor Kang Shien met here this evening with 350 delegates in the Great Hall of the People from China, the United States, 17 other countries and Hong Kong to a five-day U.S.-China conference on energy, resources and the environment. He also attended a reception given by the conference after the meeting.

He said China's modernization requires huge inputs of energy and resources, the means to exploit and use them efficiently, and technology to protect the environment. Therefore, it is necessary to supplement domestic efforts with foreign cooperation and exchanges of experience with scientists of other countries, he said.

He hoped the conference would promote both exchange and cooperation between China, the United States and other countries and regions. Zhou Peiyuan, president of the China Association for Science and Technology, Gao Yangwen, minister of coal industry, and others attended the meeting and the reception.

Development of Coal Industry

[Text] Beijing, November 9 (XINHUA) -- China plans to speed construction of coal mines, especially surface mines, to meet the needs of the national economy, a leading coal expert said here today.

Addressing the first China-U.S. conference on energy, resources and environment, Wu Jing, deputy director of the science and technology committee of the Ministry of Coal Industry, said energy supplies are falling short of the increasing demand in China, affecting the growth of national economy. He noted that over 70 percent of the country's current energy consumption comes from coal.

In developing China's coal industry, he said, priority is given to developing new mines within and around the existing coal bases, to new coal bases with rich reserves and transportation facilities, and to surface mines.

The official said that China will focus its attention on Shanxi Province, east and northeast China and Henan Province.

China has considerable known coal reserves suitable for strip mining, he said. The Pingshuo coal field in Shanxi Province, for example, and the Jungar coal field in inner Mongolia autonomous region each has a reserve of over 3 billion tons of "long flame" coal. The former field is scheduled to be developed in cooperation with the Occidental Petroleum Co. of the United States and plans are being made for the latter. In addition, the lignite reserve in the Huolinhe, Yiminhe and Yuanbaoshan coal areas are slated for strip mining.

Wu Jing estimated that in the coming 4-5 years, China's coal production would increase by an average of 20 million tons each year.

China's coal-bearing area is over 500,000 square kilometers with the total proven reserves amounting to 640 billion tons, according to Wu Jing. In 1981, China turned out 620 million tons of coal, he said.

Conference Ends

[Excerpts] Beijing, November 12 (XINHUA) -- In the future -- perhaps in a decade or so -- the way a plant is able to convert sunlight into a stable chemical may help us devise a totally synthetic process that will do the same thing. This was predicted by Professor Melvin Calvin, a 1961 Nobel chemistry prize winner, from the University of California, speaking at the first China-U.S. conference on energy, resources and environment.

The professor said the fact that we will require renewable fuels for the future is inescapable. This is due not only to the exhaustion of the existing energy minerals, but to the almost intractable air pollution problem which the combustion of fossil carbon produces. The most immediate source of renewable energy is the annual growth of plants themselves.

At the conference, which closed here today, Calvin demonstrated his theory of artificial photosynthesis and declared that a prototype for a laboratory device has already been built.

The five-day conference was attended by more than 350 experts from 19 countries and Hong Kong region. Over 70 papers were presented, advancing a number of theories and techniques for saving energy, opening new resources and controlling environmental pollution.

Experts at the conference also suggested many practical techniques and measures for further exploiting and better utilizing coal, petroleum, hydropower, solar energy, shale, geothermal energy and other energy resources.

PRC SUSPENDS INDIRECT TRADE WITH SOUTH KOREA

OW131105 Tokyo KYODO in English 0953 GMT 13 Nov 82

[Text] Tokyo Nov 13 KYODO -- China has cut off trade with South Korea through Hong Kong or any other third country apparently because of its recent improved relations with North Korea, trade sources here said Saturday.

China's policy has been communicated to Japanese trade circles, the sources said. But the sources said there are no Japanese firms directly involved in business between the two countries.

The Chinese policy followed a visit to Beijing by North Korean President Kim Il-song in September, his first in seven years. In April, Chinese strongman Deng Xiaoping visited Pyongyang to celebrate Kim's 70th birthday.

Although there are no diplomatic relations between China and South Korea, bilateral trade totaled $93 million during the first six months of this year, according to South Korean statistics.

Officials of major Japanese trading companies said, however, that China has been taking tough measures against trade with South Korea via Hong Kong since earlier this year.

As a result, the officials said, trade between the two countries has virtually come to a standstill.

South Korea says it is willing to do business with China as part of its diplomacy to open dialogue with pro-Pyongyang communist countries in an attempt to win their participation in the 1988 Seoul olympics.

XINHUA VIEWS ITALIAN GOVERNMENT'S COLLAPSE

OW151524 Beijing XINHUA in English 1249 GMT 15 Nov 82

[What Caused Italy's Government Crisis? -- By XINHUA correspondent Huang Changrui -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Rome, November 14 (XINHUA) -- Italy's 83-day-old government headed by Premier Giovanni Spadolini fell yesterday, thus bringing about a new government crisis.

On the surface, the crisis resulted from squabbling between Socialist Finance Minister Rino Formica and Treasury Minister Beniamino Andreatta, a Christian Democrat.

But the real cause, as most observers here believed, was the degeneration of the country's economy and sharp contradictions between the Socialists and the Christian Democrats over economic policies.

Italy's economic situation has reportedly been gloomier than predicted since last summer. Numbers are telling:

-- Industrial production has fallen since June. In September, it fell by 5.8 percent over the same period last year.

-- The inflation rate has stood at 17.2 percent in the three consecutive months from August, surpassing the government's original goal of 16 percent.

-- The unemployment rate has been running at more than 10 percent which means that more than 2.3 million people are out of work.

-- The lira has lost more than 23 percent against the U.S. dollar just since the beginning of the year. Only in October, the country lost 1.7 billion U.S. dollars in foreign exchange reserves to support lira's position.

-- The trade deficit was 13,773 billion liras (roughly 9 billion U.S. dollars) in the first nine months of this year because of higher value of U.S. dollars.

-- The financial deficit was more than 65,000 billion liras (roughly 45 billion U.S. dollars), while public debts are close to 200,000 billion liras (about 134 billion U.S. dollars).

Facing the economic situation, Spadolini's second coalition government, consisting of Christian Democrats, Socialists, Social Democrats, Republicans and Liberals, was deeply divided on ways to cure the economic ills, with the Socialists and Christian Democrats fighting with each other the fiercest.

Basically, the Socialists want to increase taxes without cutting public spending to stimulate production and save jobs, while the Christian Democrats want to cut spending, curb wage increases and control credit to cope with inflation, even if it means higher unemployment.

In addition, the two parties are in sharp conflict over an abandonment of the wage index system, known as the "scala mobile" -- moving staircase or escalator. This system adjusts earnings every four months to the cost of living.

Spadolini is a Republican and his party holds only three percent of the seats in Parliament. However, the fact that he led two coalitions for 16 months is rarely seen in Italy, where political situation remains unstable and governments are changed frequently. Although he has a "distinguished ability to mediate contradictions," a new government crisis has broken out as a result of the sharp disputes between the two ruling parties.

PRC DELEGATION AT SFRY TRADE UNION CONFERENCE

[Text] Belgrade, November 11 (XINHUA) -- To maintain and strengthen political stability is the basic task of the vanguard of the working class and of the trade union organizations at all levels, said Mitja Ribicic, president of the Presidency of the Yugoslav Communists League Central Committee, in a congratulatory message to the Ninth Trade Union Congress of Yugoslavia which opened here today. He read out the message at the congress on behalf of the Presidency of the Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia and the Presidency of the Central Committee of the League of Communists of Yugoslavia.

Ribicic said strengthening of unity and relations between different nationalities on the basis of equality is the way to attain political stability. In his opening speech, Bogoljub Nedeljkovic, president of the Confederation of Trade Unions of Yugoslavia, pointed out emphatically that the Yugoslav working class will march forward unswervingly along the road pointed out by Tito.

1,650 delegates from all parts of the country and 80 foreign delegations attended the conference, including a Chinese trade union delegation headed by Wang Chonglun, vice-President of the All-China Federation of Trade Unions. The conference, which takes place once every four years, is scheduled to close on November 13.

Congress Ends

[Text] Belgrade, November 13 (XINHUA) -- The Council of the Confederation of Trade Unions of Yugoslavia today called on Yugoslav workers to work harder and practise more economy, persistently pursuing the policy for a stabilized economy. This call was made in a resolution adopted at the three-day first session of the 9th Congress of the Trade Union Council which ended here today.

The resolution urged all workers to show a greater sense of responsibility for their work. It noted that the socialist distribution principle of "from each according to his ability, to each according to his work" must be adhered and behavior of idleness and irresponsibility must be firmly opposed. Every joint working unit must try its best to make production more practical and profitable, raise productivity and the quality and quantity of products to promote export.

The congress also adopted a proposal to amend and supplement the existing trade union constitution. The congress, in a message of greetings to the party and government leadership, expressed the determination of the Yugslav working class to further strengthen the socialist self-management system and work for stabilizing the country's economy, along the road of self-reliance as pointed out by the late leader Tito. The congress elected Bogoljub Nedeljkovic as council president for a one-year term.

RENMIN RIBAO ON ISRAELI ANNEXATION OF WEST BANK

[Report: "Israel Speeds Up Annexation of West Bank of Jordan River"]

[Text] On 7 November the Israeli vice minister of agriculture, who is in charge of coordinating government departments dealing with affairs related to the establishment of Jewish settlements, brazenly announced in a radio broadcast that Israel had decided to establish and expand 20 settlements on the West Bank of the Jordan River and planned to increase the number of the existing settlements from 103 to 160 and the number of Jewish settlers to 100,000. This is another serious step toward annexation of the West Bank adopted by Israel in defiance of the opposition of the Palestinian people and the condemnation of world public opinion.

During the 15 years since Israel took the West Bank, it has gained control of 55 to 60 percent of the land there by means of establishing Jewish settlements, building barracks and purchasing and confiscating the land of Palestinian people.

Israel, furthermore, plans to increase the number of Jewish settlers on the West Bank to 1 million by the year 2000. This will put the 850,000 Palestinian residents now on the West Bank in a minority position.

Even some Israelis are strongly indignant at Israel's vicious measures and treacherous schemes in annexing the West Bank. Recently, Meron Benvenisti, former deputy mayor of Jerusalem, and a number of Israeli social scientific workers published the report of an investigation into the settlements on the West Bank. The facts listed in this investigation report are most disgusting and infuriating.

In order to rob the Palestinian people of their land, the Israeli Government even resorted to invoking a decree of the ancient Ottoman Empire, which empowered the government to take the land of the Palestinian villagers for its own use. When the Israeli occupation authorities decided to take over a certain piece of land, they ordered the residents to show their title deeds for the land in 21 days; the land of those who could not show their title deeds was treated as "nonoccupied land" and taken over. In 1967, when Israel occupied the West Bank of the Jordan, it registered land in accordance with the overelaborate procedures of the period of the Ottoman Empire. Because the procedures were overelaborate and irrational, only one-third of the Palestinian villagers got their land registered. In 1968, the registration was suspended and has not been resumed since. Thus, most of the Palestinian villagers cannot get the title deeds for their land and cannot produce any evidence to prove ownership of their land.

Moreover, during the past 15 years, the Israeli occupying army has published more than 1,000 decrees. The most notorious, the 59th Decree, stipulates that all the property of the former Jordanian Government be handed over to Israel. This has greatly helped the Israelis to rob the Palestinians of their land.

What is most sinister and ruthless is that the Israeli occupation authorities have selected places around the major Palestinian towns to establish settlements so as to encircle these major towns. Some Palestinian people have said that "the development of this situation will mean that Palestinian autonomy will be meaningless, because the Palestinians will in fact be living in a concentration camp."

PROSPECTS OF NATIONAL RECONCILIATION IN LEBANON

[By CHINA DAILY Commentator: "Opportunity Not To Miss"]

[Text] Prospects of national reconciliation in Lebanon are more cheering now than they had been for a good many years, since President Amin al-Jumayyil was sworn in and a 10-man cabinet headed by Prime Minister Shafiq al-Wazzan given an overwhelming rule by decree for the next six months.

An end to the presence of foreign troops in that country also looks more promising after leaders of the 22-nation Arab League agreed to terminate the mandate of the 25,000-man Syrian Army that has functioned as the league's deterrent force since 1976 to quell the civil war between Christian and Muslim militias.

It is hoped that all this will eventually provide the Lebanese people with a chance for national unity and recovery that has been so long delayed.

Meanwhile, the Arab leaders meeting in Fes, Morocco, unanimously approved a unified Middle East plan that could very well form the basis for negotiation of a just and lasting peace settlement.

Fes Plan

This plan holds promise in that it represents the views of a majority of the Arab countries; it has incorporated American President Ronald Reagan's proposals on the Palestinian question, and has since been supported by a similar proposal put forth by the late Soviet President Leonid Brezhnev.

An agreement in principle between Chairman Yasir 'Arafat of the Palestine Liberation Organization and Jordan's King Hussein on establishing a unitary relationship leading to an eventual federation between Jordan and a Palestinian state to be established in the now occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip with its capital at Jerusalem, also bodes well.

Both the Fes plan and the PLO-Jordan agreement contain a de facto recognition of the Israeli State and, what is more, a clear indication of Arab willingness to coexist peacefully with Isarel if it so wishes.

A recent opinion poll showed that even in Israel, there is a majority who are ready to give up the West Bank and Gaza Strip in exchange for a lasting peace with their Arab neighbours.

All the new developments demonstrate once again that the only stumbling block to a peaceful settlement of the Middle East problem is the obstinate stand of Begin and his Zionist backers.

Begin's Goal

With Israel's 70,000 invading troops still in Lebanon, the Begin regime is brazen enough to demand the withdrawal of the Syrian troops and a few thousand Palestinian guerrillas as a precondition for ending their aggression which has ravaged half of Lebanon and massacred thousands of Lebanese and Palestinians, including many innocent women and children.

The Begin government is also going ahead with its plan to populate 160 West Bank settlements with 100,000 Jews within five years. There are about 25,000 Jews in 103 settlements built since Israel seized the West Bank from Jordan in 1967. Begin's announced goal is to move altogether a million Jews over to the West Bank by the end of the century, thus making the 850,000 native Palestinians a minority.

Meanwhile, the Begin regime has rejected outright all the plans for a general Middle East settlement as it had refused to return all the Arab territories it has occupied since 1948 to their rightful owners despite repeated UN resolutions to that effect.

What makes the Begin regime so stubborn in face of domestic protests and international condemnation has been clear to all. It is time for the U.S. Government to stop paying lip service to a Middle East settlement while giving all the support Begin needs to frustrate any genuine attempt toward a solution.

The world is waiting to see if the U.S. Government is serious about what it has claimed. And now there is an opportunity not to miss for achieving Middle East peace and stability.

BEIJING COMMENTS ON NAMIBIAN INDEPENDENCE

["International Current Events" program commentary entitled: "On the Struggle for the Independence of Namibia"]

[Excerpts] In the course of realizing decolonization, the Namibian issue is the most pressing one in the world today. It is also an important, and the final, issue to be solved prior to the realization of decolonization in Africa.

To help Namibia promptly achieve independence is not only the Namibian people's strong desire but also that of all the peoples in Africa and the world. However, due to South African racists' stubborness in clinging to their colonialist stance, the issue of Namibian independence has not been solved.

Some time ago there was a sign of a possible breakthrough in the talks on the independence of Namibia. However, the talks have run into new obstacles, mainly because the South African authorities have tried to play for time and refused to conduct elections. With the support of the United States, they have deliberately complicated the issue by saying that to solve the Namibian issue it is necessary to have Cuban troops withdrawn from Angola.

The issue of the withdrawal of Cuban troops from Angola has nothing to do with Namibian independence. These two issues should not be lumped together. The United States and the South African authorities have persistently demanded that these two unrelated issued be solved simultaneously. They try to make things even more complicated in order to prevent Namibia's achieving independence. While undermining the talks, the South African authorities have also strengthened their military activities. Not long ago South African armed forces intruded into Angola on a large scale, and attacked the SWAPO army camps and the frontline African countries which support the Namibian people's struggle. It is obvious that these activities carried out by the South African authorities are aimed at making use of their military strength to hit and weaken SWAPO's armed forces, forcing the frontline African countries to stop supporting Namibia, compelling these nations to make even greater concessions at the negotiating table and solving the Namibian issue on South Africa's own terms.

Namibia produces diamonds in large quantities and has the largest uranium mine in the world. The South African authorities have made large investments in Namibian mines, reaping an annual profit of nearly 100 million dollars. Namibia is also a big market for South African commodities and a supply center for raw materials. South Africa monopolizes Namibia's export and import businesses. Most of the production equipment and daily necessities in Namibia come from South Africa. Namibia has become a dumping ground for South African merchandise. Therefore, South African authorities have refused to give up their rule over Namibia for both political and economic reasons.

In order to protect its vested interests in South Africa, the United States has regarded South Africa as a strategic allied nation and tried to shield it by hook or crook. This is one of the reasons Resolution 435 of the U.N. Security Council cannot be implemented and why Namibia cannot achieve independence even now.

The road taken by the Namibian people toward their independence is rugged and rough. However, their struggle has won extensive support from peoples throughout the world. So long as they persist in their struggle, they will definitely score victories in their just struggle for national independence.

HU YAOBANG PAYS INSPECTION VISIT TO FUJIAN

[Text] Fuzhou, 15 Nov (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- CPC Central Committee General Secretary Hu Yaobang recently carried out an inspection of Fujian Province.

On 3 November, accompanied by Fujian Provincial CPC Committee First Secretary Xiang Nan and others, Hu Yaobang inspected the harbor and airport of the Xiamen Special Economic Zone, now under construction, and the mechanical and electrical industries in the export processing zone. He expressed satisfaction with the progress of these projects. General Secretary Hu Yaobang reiterated that there will be no change in the guiding principle laid down by the central authorities on implementing special policies and flexible measures in Guangdong and Fujian.

On 4 November General Secretary Hu Yaobang and Water Conservancy and Electric Power Vice Minister Li Peng inspected small hydroelectric stations in the mountain areas of Yongchun County. They also viewed domestic electric appliances used by the peasants there. Hu Yaobang expressed great concern for expanding the scope of the use of electricity in the rural areas and gradually realizing Chinese-style rural electrification. He hoped that small hydroelectric stations would be able to provide still better service for the peasants.

On his journey, Hu Yaobang visited the porcelain factory at Fujian's porcelain capital, Dehua. He praised the superb collection of porcelain utensils and the art and craft products for export. General Secretary Hu Yaobang also inspected agriculture in Ningde Prefecture.

During his inspection, Hu Yaobang paid numerous visits to the armed forces on the Fujian front and saw the PLA commanders and fighters. He also inspected naval bases.

HE JINGZHI: CRITICIZE 'ULTRADEMOCRATIC' WORKS

OW140359 Beijing XINHUA in English 0114 GMT 14 Nov 82

[Text] Xian, November 13 (XINHUA) -- The general condition of literature and art in China is gratifying, said He Jingzhi, deputy head of the Propaganda Department of the party Central Committee at the national conference on drama that closed here today.

But a few works advocating ultra-democracy, individualism and statements running counter to Marxism and to the interests of the people should be criticized. "The right of the writers and democracy in art must be respected; but writers should also develop the ability to listen to opinions from readers and audiences", he said.

"Democracy in art is an expression of democracy in politics," he said. "Socialist literature and art is one embodying highly developed democracy. The policy of 'let a hundred flowers blossom and a hundred schools of thought contend' is not an expedient measure, but a long-term policy. In accordance with the policy, writers have the right to decide on the themes, content, points-of-view of their works and their interpretations of social life under the guidance of Marxism", he said.

He said: "As an important part of the socialist spiritual civilization, socialist literature and art must have communist ideology as its nucleus and educate the people in communism.

"An important thing the party has done in recent years in upholding and developing Mao Zedong Thought in literature and art is a readjustment of policy, replacing the slogan of 'literature and art serve politics' with 'literature and art serve the people and socialism', a more scientific statement with a broader significance."

Communist culture does not fall from heaven, he said. All cultural achievements in human history, including democratic and progressive literature and art which remain instructive and inspiring, are components of today's socialist literature and art. All fine traditional cultures of the feudal and capitalist eras are to be reformed and inherited. But priority must be given to building and developing the new culture.

Literary and art works embodying communist ideology should strive to occupy a leading position in the development of our socialist literature and art, he said. Nevertheless, works of a number of authors who are not Marxists, which reflect democratic ideology in the revolutionary course and show high artistry, should also be welcome.

He called for developing a socialist literature and art with national characteristics. The policy of "make the past serve the present and foreign things serve China" should be continued, he said.

China has a brilliant historical and cultural tradition. The national features, characteristics and style of Chinese literature and art should be cherished. Literary and artistic theories and techniques of Western countries including those of the modernistic school can be used for reference, he said, but there should be no blind worship, mistaking rubbish for good things.

The struggle on the two fronts in literature and art will continue, he said. Both interferences from the "left" and the right should be eliminated. In judging the major tendency, specific conditions in different cases should be taken into consideration.

"Since socialist literature and art is led by the party, its orientation and prosperity depends largely on the party's leadership," he said.

Although the party's leading departments had made mistakes in the past, these should not be used to negate the party's leadership in literature and art. Of course the mistakes must be resolutely corrected, he said.

HONGQI COMMENTATOR VIEWS PROBLEMS IN CPC STYLE

[Text] Beijing, 15 Nov (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- HONGQI No 22, which will be published tomorrow, points out: Inside the Communist Party, an extremely small section of the members, the absolute number of whom is not small, demonstrate in their own deeds and words that they do not deserve the glorious title of Communist Party member. At present, it is true that inside the Communist Party there is the problem of ideological and organizational impurity and impure work style.

HONGQI says the above in the commentator's article which bears the title: "We Firmly Believe That Party Style Will Certainly Make a Turn for the Better."

The article says: Facts have demonstrated that not all old members can stand the test of bayonet and flattery, not all old members can both enjoy victories and endure defeats. Under peaceful circumstances, with the change in the party's position in the entire national life, certain people who harbor evil intentions take membership as the ladder to getting personal gains, satisfying their lust for power and enjoying material pleasures.

The article expounded the six main points on which the realization of the improvements in party style in the 5 years between the 12th CPC National Congress and the next CPC national congress is based: 1) The leadership of the CPC Central Committee is correct, firm and united. In addition, a Marxist line and a series of policies and principles which suit the concrete situation in all aspects have been formulated. 2) The masses of Communist Party members have stood severe positive and negative tests and they have learned much from history and actual practice. 3) The state is beginning to take the road to a truly healthy socialist legal system. 4) The people are concerned with the party. Their political consciousness, creative spirit and historical responsibility is increasingly promoted. In this way, in promoting party work and supervising every party member, they play an increasingly important role. 5) Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee in 1978, the focal point of our work has been shifted to the track of building socialist modernization. 6) The CPC Central Committee has determination, careful policies, effective measures and clear steps in improving party style.

RETIRED CADRES CONTINUE TO SERVE PUBLIC

[Text] Beijing, November 13 (XINHUA) -- In Beijing, 2,600 veteran cadres who joined the revolution ranks before the 1949 founding of the People's Republic have retired in the past three years, according to Liang Zhimin, Deputy head of the Beijing municipal bureau in charge of old cadres founded last May.

As a result of the current government streamlining, Liang Zhimin predicted the number will increase to 20,000 by the end of the year.

The government has made arrangements for the retirees to spend their remaining years in social activities of their choice, keeping in close touch with their professional fields and social life, Liang Zhimin said. Many have already started working as neighborhood committee directors, legal advisers, civil issue mediators, price-checkers in the markets or after-school counsellors for the pupils.

Their suggestions and opinions regarding the work at their original units are solicited and they are kept well informed with the social development.

In as much as these veteran cadres have contributed to the foundation and construction of the People's Republic, they are entitled to the same wages and welfare benefits as before, Liang Zhimin said.

Administrative departments in charge of their well-being have been set up in various districts, counties, bureaus and major companies. Centers for retired cadres are usually located in pleasant environments and consist of a meeting room, recreation room, clinic, study and lounge.

For instance, in Tongxian County in Beijing's eastern suburbs, Liang Zhimin said, an institution consisting of 40 rooms for different purposes has been set up for 156 retired veterans in the county.

Gao Yuying, 75, who joined the Communist Party in 1938, donated 1,500 yuan of his own saving to establish a sparetime art school for the young people in cooperation with an established painter and a retired veteran teacher. The school has invited artists to give training courses in calligraphy, music, photography, and painting to a thousand trainees, among whom were government workers, students, soldiers, and job-waiting young people. Gao Yuying said he is glad to be able to help cultivate young people in his old age.

Chen Mingjin, a veteran army doctor before his retirement, helped found a neighborhood clinic and is treating an average of 50 patients everyday.

Li Lin, 61, who joined the revolution in 1939, has been a neighborhood committee director and party secretary since her retirement in 1979. She has sponsored a children's center for after school activities, neighborhood clinic, service center, commission agent and kindergarten for the people in the locality.

TAN QILONG ARTICLE ON SOCIALIST MODERNIZATION

[Article by Tan Qilong [6223 0796 7893]: "Thinking, Action, Leading Group and Work Style"]

[Text] The task for the whole party at present is creating a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization. We must concentrate all our efforts and wisdom on this task and give the party and the people a satisfactory reply with our action. Then what should the leading cadres do in order to achieve the goal of creating a new situation? I would like to say something about this question on the basis of the following four aspects concerning thinking, action, leading group and work style.

Foster the Thinking of Creating a New Situation

In order to create a new situation in all fields, the most important matter is to arm ourselves with the spirit of the 12th CPC National Congress so that our understanding can be raised to a higher level and the thinking of creating a new situation can be fostered. We must be clearly aware that since the historical turn was completed, our socialist modernization construction has entered a new stage. Our thinking must follow the development of the situation. Otherwise we will not be able to fulfill our historical mission. Without the thinking of creating a new situation, we will not be able to create a new situation in our work. When we look back at the progress of our understanding since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, we feel that the earlier we understood the party's line, policies and principles and the more closely we followed them, the better our work was done and the faster the situation developed. In contrast, the later we understood the spirit of the third plenary session and the more we hesitated, the worse was our work. This time when we study the spirit of the 12th CPC National Congress, it is necessary to learn from this experience and lesson and make a conscientious study so that we can keep pace with the development of the situation. It is also necessary to continue to implement the policy of "emancipating the mind, using the brains, seeking truth from facts and uniting and looking forward," and stride forward in creating a new situation. We must not hesitate and waver and let our party's cause suffer losses.

There are certainly many concrete ideological problems to solve in order to raise our ideological level to the high plane required by the creation of a new situation. In my opinion, the main problem is the problem of confidence and faith. The main content of the thinking of creating a new situation, which we are going to foster, is to have firm faith in our great party and the leadership core of our party, to have firm faith in the communist cause and the Chinese-style socialist road we have been following, and to strengthen our confidence and resolution in the realization of our great goal. The present CPC Central Committee is a really reliable and staunch leadership core which is capable of dealing with various complicated situations, leading the people in conquering all hardships and obstacles, and striving for victories. In particular, the long-tested proletarian revolutionaries, who enjoy high prestige and command universal respect, are playing the role of the mainstay in this leadership core. The old comrades, who enjoy high prestige both inside and outside the party, the army and the country, continued to be elected members of the central leadership core. This completely conforms to the fundamental interests of the party, the nation and the people throughout the country. It enjoys wholehearted support of the broad masses of party members and people.

The 12th CPC National Congress required that the total industrial and agricultural output value be quadrupled by the end of this century. This ambitious target is based on scientific analysis and is completely realistic. However, it needs our hard work and great efforts. We must neither be blindly optimistic nor short of confidence. At present, what merits more attention is the latter. Some comrades, owing to their incorrect way of thinking, are not able to predict correctly the future of economic development. This is why they lack confidence. Proceeding from old conventions and past experiences, some of these comrades are thinking that there will be another "Great Leap Forward" and "high targets" will be set again on hearing of the "quadrupling" of the output value. They have lumped together the realistic objective of our struggle put forth by the CPC Central Committee after thoroughly eliminating the "leftist" guiding ideology with the past "leftist" errors. Some other comrades have approached the problem from their narrow circles. For example, on agricultural development, they have merely considered the development of grain production and failed to have an overall consideration to development in all fields including the development of a diversified economy and the application of new science and technology. Similar phenomena also exist in various trades and professions. Still some other comrades have looked at the problem one-sidedly. They have overstressed temporary and partial difficulties and neglected the basic favorable conditions which will play a long-term role. Sichuan Province, for example, has the following main favorable conditions:

1. The stable and united political situation was achieved earlier in this province than in other provinces and the mental attitude of the great majority of the members of the leading groups and the broad masses of cadres and people is good.

2. Owing to the steady growth of agricultural production over the past few years, a relatively good foundation has been established. With the development of third-line construction, industrial production capability has greatly expanded, with fixed industrial assets of 31 billion yuan. In the future the state will build a number of new key projects in our province.

3. With 1/10 of the national population living there, Sichuan is a big market. Moreover, in promoting industrial and agricultural production, Sichuan has profound potential in natural and manpower resources as well as in applying science and implementing policies. Provided we grasp the three strategic stresses, control the growth of population, avoid serious mistakes in giving instructions, give full play to the favorable conditions and fully tap potentials, we will surely achieve an ideal speed in our economic development, and the objective of quadrupling the output value will surely be attained.

Disseminating communist ideas does not at all mean to change the present policies and to stir up the "communist wind" again.

Similarly, while emphasizing the confidence in our great objective, we do not mean that it is right to boast and talk big or to again stir up the "evil wind of boasting and exaggeration." The past "leftist" mistakes have brought us great harm. We must never forget this bitter lesson and must always keep a clear head. We must not repeat all those stupid things in the future. With regard to rural work, it is necessary to carry out continuously the various forms of the responsibility system and adhere to a series of policies for a long time to come, and gradually perfect them so that both our country and the people can benefit from them. We should not go against the will of the people and change them indiscreetly or even take the road back. Instead we should forcefully support the development of the specialized and key households and various forms of economic combining. We should encourage the peasants to get righ through labor. Since our party has summed up both positive and negative historical experiences, such phenomena as being envious of some peasants' success, egalitarianism and eating out of the same big pot, as well as "giving arbitrary orders" and making rash advances when seeing the economy developing a bit more smoothly can certainly be prevented. In short, in order to implement the line, policies and principles of the 12th CPC National Congress, the leaders should take a firm stand, and proceeding from realities, carry out timely and correct ideological struggles on the two fronts against both the "leftist" and rightist tendencies. Only thus can they keep ideological and political unanimity with the CPC Central Committee.

Take Action To Create a New Situation

In order to create a new situation, it is necessary to work out a feasible plan and act in a down-to-earth manner. On the basis of studying the documents and unifying understanding, various provinces, prefectures, counties, departments and units must, in accordance with the spirit of the 12th CPC National Congress and in light of their specific conditions, work out plans for creating a new situation. In these plans there must be clear and concrete objectives for the next 2 and 5 years and effective measures. Generally speaking, in the next 5 years, whether a new situation is created, with regard to the overall situation, will be judged chiefly by the achievements gained in making a fundamental change in the state economic and financial situation, social atmosphere and the work style of the party. But all units should have their specific requirements. When plans are made, it is necessary to lead the masses to carry out these plans so that the problems can be solved one-by-one and the set objectives can be reached one after another. Socialist modernization requires concrete efforts. We must never be empty talkers or do things rashly, but must work energetically and creatively and be men of action who are capable of creating a new situation. If we support the 12th party congress only in words and not in actions and continue to work negligently and dilatorily as usual, how can we open up a new prospect? We need both the revolutionary spirit of "cleaving through ten thousand li of waves with soaring enthusiasm" and the rigorous scientific approach of proceeding from realities in all actions. Of course, on the road of advance, we are bound to meet many difficulties. In face of difficulties, they are always firm and indomitable and continue to advance after summing up experiences. In the recent world championship, China's women's volleyball team once again won the world championship. The players did not lose heart when they were defeated in the first game and went all out in the following games, regardless of the difficult situation, to seize every possible point. Hence their success. Leading cadres at various levels should also have this spirit. They must bravely shoulder the tasks entrusted by the party and advance in the face of difficulties to win victory.

The leading cadres must also make concrete efforts to correct the party work style. Of the three fundamental improvements, the improvement in the party work style is the key link.

However, whether the party work style can be improved depends on whether the leading cadres can themselves set a good example. The great majority of cadres at various levels in our province, including the broad masses of grassroots cadres, are loyal to the party's cause. They are working conscientiously and without complaints, and, having set high demands on their daily life, are sharing the comforts and hardships of the masses. All the remarkable achievements we have scored over the past several years are inseparable from their efforts. However, a small number of cadres have taken advantage of their work and posts which the party and the people gave them to seek private interests and privilege. They have thus injured the prestige of the party and have become divorced from the masses. Some of them have even violated the law and committed crimes. For a party in power such as ours, the greatest danger is being divorced from the masses. The broad masses of people always judge our party directly from the activities of the party and the actions of our party members and cadres. Whether our party work style is good or not has an important bearing on the will of the people, which is vital to the future of the party. The 12th CPC National Congress suggested that an all-round rectification be carried out within the party step-by-step and in a planned way and that the struggle against serious criminal activities in the economic field be carried on through to the end. These are all important strategic measures. However, in our work to strive for a fundamental improvement of the party work style, we must not wait until all-round rectification begins. We must begin right away.

Leading cadres must take immediate action to examine themselves, their families and their units, and set a good example in resisting unhealthy tendencies and the corrosive influence of decadent ideas. We must set strict demands on ourselves according to the new party constitution and serve the people heart and soul. We must not seek private gains and privilege and practice favoritism, just as we have said, and must set an example in rectifying the party work style and resisting decadent ideas. If we have done anything counter to the party constitution and discipline, we must conscientiously and promptly correct it so as to prove ourselves qualified members and cadres of our party. If our leading cadres are "qualified" and have set a good example, they will no longer blush because of what they have said and done. The party's prestige will become greater and greater, and the realization of a fundamental improvement of the party's work style will have a reliable foundation.

Build the Leading Groups in Creating a New Situation

At present, a sharp contradiction exists between the status quo of the leading groups at various levels and the demands of the new period on leadership work. The problems of being aged and lacking knowledge have widely existed, and in some places have very seriously existed. If this is not fundamentally changed, the party and state organizations will become less vigorous and less efficient, and the party's political line will be incapable of being carried out, not to mention carried out for a long time to come. The CPC Central Committee has put forward correct policies, principles and methods to solve this problem. It has made a firm resolution and taken proper steps. The central leading body elected at the 12th CPC National Congress reflects the cooperation between old and new cadres and the succession of the old by the new. The first step of streamlining party and government organizations at the central level has been basically completed. This provides experiences for the provinces, prefectures and counties. In accordance with the arrangements of the central authorities, the streamlining of our provincial organizations has already begun. The core of this streamlining is building the leading groups at various levels into powerful fighting headquarters capable of creating a new situation in light of the principle of being small in number but highly trained and the policy of making our cadre ranks more revolutionary, younger in average age, better educated and more professionally competent.

This is a matter concerning the overall situation in Sichuan. We must unify our thinking and make concerted efforts to do it well.

In order to solve the question of the succession of the old by the new, it is first necessary that elderly cadres be successively relieved from their posts, and at the same time, large numbers of young and middle-aged cadres who possess both political integrity and ability and who are capable of creating a new situation be promoted to various leading posts. To our veteran comrades, the correct attitude toward this "in and out" means a real test. The great majority of our veteran cadres have valued the interests of the party above everything else and consciously obeyed the needs of revolution and the arrangements of the party organization. Being overage, they have voluntarily and joyfully left their posts and continued to do what they can to serve the party, such as passing on their experiences to the young and middle-aged cadres. They are writing the history of their remaining years with their actions. Many veteran comrades have repeatedly expressed their wishes to retire from the leading bodies. Some of them have even written earnest applications. We have joined the revolutionary ranks for carrying out revolution, not for securing an official position. When the revolution needs us to do leadership work, we must be bold at shouldering heavy loads. When we are not competent at leading posts and need to retire, we should retire with joy. We must think about the interests of the party at all times and obey the arrangements of the organization in all our actions. At the same time, veteran comrades must carefully select outstanding young and middle-aged cadres to be their successors and enthusiastically support their work. We should be pleased by the fact that there is no lack of successors to carry out the revolutionary cause and that the ability of the young successors surpasses ours, for this is an expression of the prosperity of our revolutionary cause. When the elderly comrades withdraw from the "front line," they must cooperate with the new cadres and continue to play their due role. When Comrade Hu Yaobang visited Chongqing, he instructed the elderly comrades "to say more but to command less, to contact more but to work less, and to cut short the workday and prolong life." This shows that withdrawing from leading posts by veteran comrades meets the needs of the development of the revolutionary cause and the loving care of the party organization as well. The young and middle-aged cadres who are promoted to leading bodies at various levels must study hard and work boldly so that their abilities can be enhanced through practice. When their positions are changed, they must be more modest and prudent. They must respect and show consideration to elderly comrades and establish close ties with the masses. They must treat others as equals and learn from the elderly comrades and the masses. They must always think about the people's needs and their own weakness and realize that they have only the duty to do more work and have no right to seek personal comforts. They must be worthy of the trust the party and the people have placed in them. While promoting young and middle-aged cadres, it is necessary to ensure political quality and never let the "three kinds" and other "two kinds" of people sneak into the leading bodies. If such people have already been promoted, they must be removed. It is necessary to respect realities in solving this problem. We must grasp ample evidence and investigate and handle the cases one by one. Such practices as those called "a gust of wind" should be prevented.

In order to change the situation in the leading groups of a lack of knowledge, it is necessary boldly to promote large numbers of outstanding intellectuals who are professionally competent and are capable of management to the leading posts, and at the same time, strengthen education and training among the leading cadres who are at their posts. On the question of promoting and using cadres of intellectual origin, there are still some problems of recognition which need to be solved.

In the past, owing to the influence of the "leftist" ideology and the concept of small production, the erroneous ideas of looking down upon education, science and culture and discriminating against intellectuals widely existed within our party for a long time. Even to this day, this "leftist" influence has not yet been completely eliminated in some people's minds. They do not really recognize that intellectuals, like workers and peasants, are the forces on which to rely in our socialist construction. Some comrades have even erroneously held that the intellectuals are much liked at present and the cadres of worker and peasant origin are neglected. We must make them fully recognize the position and role of the intellectuals in the new period by means of meticulous persuasion and education. It is especially important to let them know that most of the middle-aged intellectuals who are playing an important role at the mainstay in many fields have been brought up since the founding of new China under the care of the party, and that to promote some of these comrades into leading groups is in conformity with the interests of the workers and peasants and the interests of the whole nation. They themselves are a part of the working class and quite a few of them came from worker and peasant families. How can we say the cadres of worker and peasant origin are neglected? The cadres of worker and peasant origin, who have a comparatively lower cultural level, should realize that along with the development of the construction of socialist modernization, they are demanded to acquire more and more professional knowledge and raise their scientific and technological level. The CPC Central Committee has made a policy decision to train in rotation the cadres who are at their posts. We must answer the party's call and study culture, theory and professional knowledge. We must strive to achieve a record of formal schooling and professional knowledge. Have not many comrades become experts and chief leaders who are proficient in professional work through long-term and unremitting study?

While carrying out organizational reform and promoting cooperation between old and new cadres and the succession of the old by the new, it is particularly necessary to emphasize and strengthen the unity of the leading bodies and the unity of the cadre ranks. The great progress in various fields of our work in Sichuan Province over the past several years was achieved on the unity within our party and the unity between the party, government, army and the people. We must treasure and develop the stable and united situation and unite and look forward rather than quibble over past issues. Recently, when hearing a report in Xichang, Comrade Hu Yaobang pointed out that we must treasure unity, preserve unity and attach primary importance to unity.

Unity is the premise for doing a good job and is most important. In order to strengthen unity, we must follow three principles: 1) attach primary importance to unity; 2) place the debates on principled questions on the table and ask the CPC committee at the higher levels to help solve the problems if they still cannot be solved; 3) be good at making concessions and compromises on small problems and never let small problems become big ones. We must follow these three principles and further strengthen the unity of the leading bodies and the unity of the cadre ranks.

Cultivate a Good Work Style in Creating a New Situation

In order to create a new situation, we must have a perfectly good work style. Leading organs and cadres at various levels must make a great change in their work style and work methods. They are required to go deep into realities, blaze new trails and firmly grasp their work.

It is necessary to go deep into realities and among the masses and not remain on the surface. The fundamental reason why we can achieve victory in bringing order out of chaos in an all-round way and achieve successes in various fields since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee is that we have reestablished the ideological line of seeking truth from facts, proceeding from realities in all aspects and combining theory with practice.

This ideological line requires us to go deep into realities and among the masses and make a systematic and scientific investigation and study so that we can know exactly what the people are thinking. The reason we have achieved a rapid development in the rural situation over the past few years is that our leading cadres at various levels and the comrades who are doing rural work have gone deep into realities, listened to the demands of the peasants, summed up the experiences of the masses and led them to blaze new trails under the guidance of the CPC Central Committee and in accordance with the spirit of the third plenary session.

Now we have deeply realized that many problems which we are unable to solve in the office, no matter how long and how hard we ponder, can still be solved after making investigation among the masses and holding discussions with them. The masses do have a vast reservoir of enthusiasm and creativeness for socialism. The firm confidence and correct decisions in our work can only come from profound investigation and study of the objective world and from the wisdom and strength of the masses. If we remain on the surface, do not grasp the first-hand materials and do not know what the people are really thinking, we will be unable to grasp the essence of the problem and take effective measures, or else we will commit such mistakes as "groundless resolutions and methods," "giving devil's advice" and "giving subjective and blind commands." For this reason we must continue to encourage the work style of going deep into realities and opposing empty talk, and the method of adhering to the mass line so that we can become wiser and more resolute.

We must boldly blaze new trails and must not indiscriminately copy the experience of others. In order to fulfill the tasks set forth by the 12th CPC National Congress and build socialism in the Chinese style, we are bound to meet many unprecedented new situations and problems. If we indiscriminately copy the experience of others or stick to convention, it will not be possible for us to create a new situation. Over the past several years, we visited many counties, communes, brigades, factories and mines. We found that in those places where the directives of the higher levels were implemented in light of the local conditions and the people were good at breaking old conventions and blazing new trails, the work was done vigorously and production rapidly developed. In contrast, in some other places where conditions were almost the same as the above-mentioned places, the work lagged behind due to sticking to old conventions.

Some comrades say that blazing new trails is running a risk. When things are done correctly it will be all right, but when they are not done correctly, we shall be unable to extricate ourselves. This requires analysis. When we say blazing new trails, we do not mean acting blindly and rashly. Instead we mean to blaze new trails on a solid basis of implementing the policies and principles put forth by the central authorities, making investigation and experiments and following the mass line. If we do this in this way, we shall not lose our general orientation and commit big mistakes. It is natural that some common mistakes will be made and even losses will occur in our work. In this the leaders should offer their help in summing up experiences to improve the work rather than lay much blame on it.

It is necessary to raise work efficiency and prevent arguing over trifles. One of the knotty problems at present is arguing over trifles, that is, some relevant departments do not take concerted action and both the vertical leadership and linear leadership do not cooperate with each other. They all stick to their own views and dispute small matters for a long time. On some occasions, a certain department makes a decision without discussing the matter with other relevant departments. On other occasions, various departments issue their own circulars separately which contradict each other. Sometimes the documents of some departments even negate those of the CPC committees and governments at higher levels. Another knotty problem is being dilatory in doing things, redtape and shirking responsibility. Some very important and urgent matters required almost a year to be done.

This is a typical expression of bureaucratism, which exists to a rather serious extent in our provincial organs and units. If we do not make up our minds to overcome it, the construction of the four modernizations will be hopeless. In order to eradicate bureaucratism, it is necessary to follow the instructions of the central authorities and reform our present leading bodies and cadre and management systems. We must not wait, but must immediately work out regulations which include the following: 1) solving problems concerning several departments through negotiation; 2) settling disputes by leaders at higher levels by calling together the heads of relevant departments to make on-the-spot joint investigation so that they can differentiate between right and wrong; 3) establishing a strict personal responsibility system and affix responsibility for serious losses due to dereliction of duty and redtape.

In order to attain the great goal put forth by the 12th CPC National Congress, to fulfill the three great tasks for the 1980's and to achieve the three fundamental improvements in the next 5 years, we must firmly grasp every year, every month and every day and must never allow any waste of precious time. Let us throw ourselves into the socialist modernization drive with a new attitude, boost our spirits, blaze new trails in our advance, be resolute and fight unremittingly to make contributions to opening up a new situation!

ECONOMIC COMMISSION OFFICIAL ON ECONOMIC SYSTEM

[Excerpts] Beijing, 11 Nov (XINHUA) -- Industrial departments in various localities are studying and promoting the experience of the Shoudu Iron and Steel Company in currently implementing the system of economic responsibility. In this connection, a responsible person of the State Economic Commission told a XINHUA reporter: The experience of the Shoudu Iron and Steel Company includes, not only experience of specific methods of management, but also experience of implementing the party's policy of activating the economy, relying on the masses to run a socialist enterprise correctly and taking a new road in increasing economic results. Their experience can be universally applied to various units.

The responsible person said: If all our enterprises, especially large- and medium-size backbone enterprises, can conscientiously learn from the Shoudu Iron and Steel Company's experience in the light of their own actual situation and improve the system of economic responsibility, the mental outlook of staff members and workers and production technology of various industrial departments will be greatly improved and the potential of various enterprises in increasing economic results can be fully tapped. We can thus create a new situation in building socialist modernization and make greater contributions to realizing the strategic goals put forward by the 12th national party congress. This is precisely why it is important to study and promote the experience of the Shoudu Iron and Steel Company.

The responsible person said: The experience of the Shoudu Iron and Steel Company is quite comprehensive and abundant. When we learn from them, we should grasp the key points. We should, first of all, learn from their experience in creatively implementing the party's policy of activating the economy in the light of the actual situation and increasing economic results by relying on the broad masses of staff members and workers. The key to the Shoudu Iron and Steel Company's achievements lies in its having a good leading group and making an advanced and sound development plan in accordance with the state plan and the demands of society.

On the question of how to learn from the experience of the Shoudu Iron and Steel Company, the responsible person of the State Economic Commission recalled how the department concerned had run four training classes in the first half of this year and trained a number of people for various industrial units in order to establish a number of "seed plants" for improving the system of economic responsibility.

He pointed out: In learning from the Shoudu Iron and Steel Company, it is necessary to take a positive attitude and pay attention to actual results. The main requirements are as follows:

It is necessary to learn from the Shoudu Iron and Steel Company's experience, which has a general character in light of the actual situation and in line with the local conditions of various enterprises and trades. Copying mechanically, in disregard for specific conditions, should be prevented. It is necessary to advance and make efforts to surpass achievements while learning from the Shoudu Iron and Steel Company's experience.

Leading cadres at various levels should take the lead in learning from the Shoudu Iron and Steel Company's experience. They should fully understand the importance of implementing the system of ecnomic responsibility, actively improve the management system and constantly make efforts to improve the system of economic responsibility, while consolidating various enterprises.

It is necessary to lay stress on grasping the economic responsibility system within various enterprises. From leading personnel to staff members and workers of various workshops, offices, teams and sections, everyone should clearly understand his own economic responsibility and strictly check and implement various tasks. Without doing so, various enterprises would not be able to fulfill their economic responsibility towards the state and the system would become a "castle in the sky."

It is necessary to grasp typical cases and establish "seed plants" for various departments and localities. Before the end of this year, various departments in several localities should select a number of key enterprises which are related to the development of the entire national economy as typical examples in improving the system of economic responsibility and use those typical examples to lead the work of the entire area in order to extend the experience of the Shoudu Iron and Steel Company to more enterprises and bring about good results.

ECONOMIC COMMISSION ARRANGES INDUSTRIAL WORK

[Text] Beijing, 13 Nov (XINHUA) -- To create conditions for implementing 1983 plans and strive to create a new situation in industrial and transport output, the State Economic Commission recently put forward opinions on arrangements for industrial and transportion work in the first quarter of 1983.

According to arrangements by the recently held national planning conference, the growth rate of industrial production in 1983 was still set at 4 percent while efforts should be made to achieve a 5 percent growth. The State Economic Commission suggests that the general goal of industrial and transportation production in the first quarter of 1983 is under the guidance of the 12th party congress guidelines to continue to implement the principle of readjusting, reforming, reorganizing and upgrading and, centering on raising economic results, pay attention to enterprise consolidation, industrial readjustment and technological advances, laying foundations and raising standards.

On industrial and transportation work in the first quarter of 1983, the State Economic Commission pointed out that it is necessary to complete as early as possible the following tasks: drawing up plans, preparations of materials, maintenance of equipment and linking up of industry and commerce. In the first quarter conditions should be created for the work in the second quarter to ensure steady growth for the whole year. Efforts should be made so that output in the first quarter will reach 24 to 25 percent of the annual plan. Priority should be given to production of energy and raw and semifinished materials in short supply, striving to increase production of steel products, nonferrous metals, acids, sodas and so forth which are in short supply.

Proper arrangements should be made for coal mine workers and staff to work on New Year's Day and the Spring Festival holidays and for the allocation and transport of coal during the holidays. It is necessary to properly arrange production of seasonal means of agricultural production, building materials for civilian use and other products. It is necessary to continue to pay attention to the production of consumer goods for daily use and put more goods in the markets, which are rich, varied and highly marketable, so that the people in both urban and rural areas will spend a good first New Year's Day and Spring Festival after the 12th party congress.

The State Economic Commission also suggested that to increase transportation volume in the coming year, the transport departments should mainly rely on tapping the potential capacities of existing equipment, carrying out reforms and strengthening transportation organization. In the first half of the year, attention should be paid to ancillary facilities for the major railway and harbor renovation projects now in progress so that the projects will be put into operation in good time. It is necessary to continue to adopt some emergency measures to ease the pressures on railways and harbors, strengthen transport control and direction, and earnestly arrange coal transportation and passenger and frieght transportation on New Year's Day and the Spring Festival. It is necessary earnestly to step up small commodities production. It is necessary to strengthen coordination and links between industry and commerce, actively broaden circulation channels between urban and rural areas and do a good job in delivering industrial products to the countryside. It is also necessary to pay attention to precautions against cold weather and frostbite and ensure safety in production.

The State Economic Commission called on all areas and departments in organizing production during this winter and next spring to be sure to base themselves on conserving energy. From now on they should further grasp energy conservation, make careful calculations, consume what is available and leave nothing to chance or hope for increased supplies by the state. The State Economic Commission also set concrete demands in consolidation of enterprises, perfection of the economic responsibility system, technological advances and reforms, reorganization and merging of enterprises and regional economic and technical cooperation, cadre education and training of workers and staff members, strengthening ideological and political work in enterprises and so forth.

According to figures supplied by the State Economic Commission, the country's total industrial output value from January through October this year increased by 8.1 percent over the same period last year. It is estimated that the total annual industrial output value may increase by about 6 percent over last year. The State Economic Commission felt that so long as all areas and departments pay serious attention to work in this winter and the next spring, they will be able to lay a good foundation for the 1983 industrial and transportation production plans to be fulfilled in an all-round way.

REFORM OF SUPPLY, MARKETING COOPERATIVES PROMOTED

[Excerpts] Beijing, 7 Nov (XINHUA) -- The reform of China's system of supply and marketing cooperatives in being carried out on a trial basis throughout the country. The trial reform has been carried out in 32 counties of 18 provinces, municipalities and autonomous regions and the experiences in trial reform are being summed up in Sichuan, Henan, Hebei and Heilongjiang Provinces so that the trial reform can be further promoted gradually on a larger scale.

According to the materials provided by the Ministry of Commerce, the reform of the supply and marketing cooperatives is carried out in various localities, mainly by reviving the fine traditions of the supply and marketing cooperatives and improving their features of serving the masses in a democratic and flexible way. And on the basis of attracting more peasants to join the cooperatives as shareholders and practicing democratic management of the cooperatives, efforts are being made to extensively promote various forms of joint agricultural and commercial operation in production, processing work and sales so as to establish closer economic alliance with peasants.

At the supply and marketing cooperatives where the reform work is being carried out on a trial basis, the money paid for shares has been worked out; the shareholders are allowed to exercise their rights and share profits and extra dividends; and efforts are being made to attract more peasants and production teams to join the cooperatives as shareholders. In this way, the cooperatives at the basic level have come to be run by the people. In many counties where the trial reform is being conducted, shareholders include about 80 percent of the total number of local peasant households. In Heilongjiang's Hailun County, 88 percent of the peasant households and about 80 percent of the total number of the production teams in the county are shareholders.

Since the reform was conducted at various supply and marketing cooperatives on a trial basis, there has been a distinct improvement in management and the cooperatives have become more closely linked to the peasants. In the past, some peastants regarded the supply and marketing cooperatives as "bureaucratic merchants," saying that it was a hard job for them to in and face the staff members of the cooperative and buy or sell commodities there. Therefore, the cooperatives became more and more divorced from the peasants. Nowadays, many workers and staff members of the cooperatives regard peasants as the "owners of the store," receive them warmly and offer them good service. The supply and marketing cooperatives at the basic level in Hebei's Wangdu County broke away from the past regulations of not dealing in spare parts for farm machinery. They now deal in more than 100 spare parts for farm machinery, thereby making things convenient for the peasants in repairing farm machinery.

A responsible comrade from the Ministry of Commerce holds that it is necessary to carry out the reform of the supply and marketing cooperatives; and the trial reform has been carried out quite successfully. The task at present is to achieve further unanimity in thinking and understanding and step up the process of the reform. In those provinces where trial reform has been conducted, it is necessary to do a good job in summing up the experiences gained, continuously expand the extent of their services based on the needs of the peasants in both production and their homelife, improve and perfect various rules and regulations, improve the economic impact of the enterprises and gradually expand the reform work. In those localities where the trial reform has just been started, it is necessary effectively to strengthen the leadership, do a good job ideologically in arousing the masses to action and promote the trial reform work as quickly as possible.

LIAONING OFFICIAL RAPS STATE OF RURAL EDUCATION

["Excerpts" from RENMIN JIAOYU [PEOPLE'S EDUCATION] article by Liaoning Vice Governor Zhang Zhiyuan — title not stated]

[Text] Education is a priority in the economic development programme outlined by the 12th party congress. Two problems -- universal primary school education in rural areas, and reform of secondary school education -- should be given more consideration.

The rural people are now more eager than ever to learn science, technology and culture. They expect their children to have a better education.

Some administrators do not pay enough attention to this, or adopt effective measures; they regard it as something simple. Others want only to send more secondary school graduates to college, and devote most of their energy to supporting high schools.

Nearly 29 percent of Liaoning Province's counties have yet to fulfill the task of providing universal primary education. Not all the pupils in the remaining counties complete their five-year course and leave the school as qualified graduates. This severely affects the education in secondary schools and even colleges.

If the state can pass laws to ensure a primary education to all rural children, it will certainly help. It will take a long time to consolidate rural primary schools and turn out really qualified graduates. The standards for these schools must be realistic and vary according to the economic and cultural conditions of different localities.

Some major obstacles have to be removed. Rural primary schools are now overstaffed and the teachers incompetent. This is because during the "Cultural Revolution," large numbers of qualified primary schools teachers went to secondary schools, and incompetent teachers were recruited by rural primary schools.

Primary school teachers have long remained low on the social scale. They have more work and less pay. Proper policies and arrangements have to be made to raise their incentives.

Rural primary schools are in very difficult financial straits. They do not have much money to more than pay for their teachers. Yet they lack facilities, including furniture and library books.

The rural areas should be encouraged to seek funds, in addition to state allocations, to repair school facilities.

Reform Needed

Secondary school education should be reformed according to the needs of society and the development of the economy. After receiving a secondary education, most graduates will seek employment. But they usually have not learned any skills. So the present secondary school is wasteful. It provides students only with cultural knowledge, but no vocational skills.

Not only should a system of vocational education be established, but vocational courses should be included in the curricula of regular middle schools.

Vocational schools should develop in a well-planned way, based on manpower needs. Technical teacher's colleges and institutions of a similar nature should be established to provide teachers for vocational schools.

Before a comprehensive plan is worked out, a certain number of university graduates from all specialities should be assigned to strengthen the teaching staff of general secondary schools and vocational schools.

AIR FORCE SETS GOALS FOR SPIRITUAL CIVILIZATION

[Text] Beijing, 13 Nov (XINHUA) -- The plenary session of the PLA Air Force party committee suggested that from now on the air force in building the socialist spiritual civilization concentrate on increasing the communist consciousness of cadres and fighters and show results in five areas.

The comrades attending the recently held plenary session of the air force party committee conscientiously studied Comrade Hu Yaobang's exposition in his report to the 12th party congress on building a high level of socialist spiritual civilization. They came to understand that the party Central Committee has set higher demands on the building of socialist spiritual civilization. In light of the actual conditions in air force units, they suggested that new results should be achieved in the building of spiritual civilization in the following five areas:

1. A new level should be achieved in understanding. The building of spiritual civilization is a matter of strategy and principle in building socialism. It is a fundamental guarantee for adherence to the socialist road and realization of the four modernizations. As far as the armed forces are concerned, it is a major question of preserving their proletarian character and strengthening and improving the units' fighting capacity. By studying the documents of the 12th party congress, leading cadres at all levels and all comrades of the air force should, from the theoretical level of scientific socialism and the political level of the future of our social development, fully understand the relationship between the building of a spiritual civilization and a material civilization, clearly understand the content and goals of building spiritual civilization, further increase their understanding of the great significance and effects in building spiritual civilization and enhance their political consciousness.

2. Communist consciousness should be increased markedly. In accordance with the call of the 12th party congress, we should conduct in-depth education in communist ideology and eliminate the wrong views that communism is but a "dim illusion" and that it "has not been tested in practice." We should organize cadres in a planned way to study Marxist philosophy, political economy, scientific socialism, modern Chinese history and the history of the Chinese revolution. Grassroots units should earnestly organize study of the history of the Chinese revolution to further inspire the patriotic fervor among cadres and fighters. It is necessary to continue to develop in depth the activities of "keeping the revolutionary ideal in mind while doing one's own job well" to enable cadres and fighters to further strengthen their communist belief, consciously subordinate personal interests to the interests of the revolution, stay contentedly in the units, love their jobs and conscientiously do their work well in all fields.

3. Notable results should be achieved in education. Education is an important component in building spiritual civilization, and an important factor in enhancing the units' fighting capacity. It is necessary to continue to do a good job in education in the units by running training classes and other forms of training so that by the end of the next year cadres under 40 years old with a below-junior-middle-school educational level will reach the level of junior middle school graduates and earn their diplomas. In the meantime, arrangements should be made for cadres to study senior middle school subjects in a planned way. From now on, in assigning and promoting cadres, we should attach importance to educational background and academic records as well as to experience and achievements in work. Leading cadres at all levels should take the lead in studying. It is necessary to further enliven cultural and sports activities in the units and set up clubs at various levels so that through rich and varied cultural and sports activities cadres and fighters will acquire scientific and general knowledge and cultivate communist morality and sentiment.

4. Great efforts should be made further to reduce accidents of all kinds. It is necessary through in-depth activities in building the spiritual civilization to increase the ability of cadres and fighters to resist corruption and guard against degeneration, prevent and reduce violations of law and discipline and further reduce accidents of all kinds.

5. It is necessary to develop vigorously activities of civilized flying, civilized services, civilized driving, civilized handling of official business and civilized family life so that the building of spiritual civilization involves every aspect of life and so that a new appearance will emerge in the construction, order and security, sanitation and hygiene, tree planting and environmental beautification of areas under the jurisdiction of the air force.

ENERGY CONSERVATION CENTERS SET UP NATIONWIDE

[Text] Chengdu, November 13 (XINHUA) -- China has set up a nationwide network of 55 energy conservation service centers for training managerial and technical personnel in energy conservation.

According to a national conference on energy conservation service that closed here Friday, the centers mainly help factories avoid waste and save energy, and disseminate information on energy conservation and energy-saving equipment.

Energy conservation -- called by some experts the "fifth energy source" after coal, oil, electricity and nuclear power -- is the top priority in China's energy development policy.

A number of the service centers were recommended at the conference for their good jobs serving local enterprises.

The Chengdu testing station of the Sichuan energy conservation service center has in the past year tested 660 industrial boilers in the city and provided useful information for transforming these low efficiency boilers.

The technical service center in Shenyang, a heavy industrial city in northeast China, helped scour out 880 boilers using new methods, which have resulted in an estimated savings from 10 to 25 percent in coal. The center also worked out water quality standards for more than 1,000 factories.

An energy conservation service team in Shanghai helped a solvent factory raise the heat efficiency of its furnaces which consume 60,000 tons of coal annually. Over the past three years, the factory's output value increased at an annual rate of 13 percent while fuel consumption decreased at an annual rate of 5.5 percent. Now its fuel consumption is only half as much as that of similar enterprises.

The conference called on cities that have not set up such service centers to act soon and urged such centers that have already been set up to improve services.

RURAL ENTERPRISES FORUM ENDS IN BEIJING 13 NOV

OW160526 Beijing Domestic Service in Mandarin 1200 GMT 13 Nov 82

[Text] A national forum on the consolidation of commune- and brigade-run enterprises, sponsored by the Ministry of Agriculture, Animal Husbandry and Fishery, came to a close in Beijing on 13 November. The forum called for an all-round consolidation of commune- and brigade-run enterprises, with the stress on better economic results. It is necessary to improve enterprise management in order to promote the sound development of such enterprises.

The forum called on all localities to do the following things:

1. It is necessary to do a good job in consolidating the leading bodies of commune- and brigade-run enterprises and to promote to leading positions sensible persons in the rural areas who are in their prime and have ideologically acquired themselves well, who are educated and can understand policies and who are professionally proficient to a certain extent and have an ability to manage.

2. It is necessary to institute and improve the economic responsibility system, to institute a personal responsibility system for cadres, workers and staff members and to popularize the economic contract system step by step and in a well-guided way.

3. It is necessary to strengthen financial management and to improve the financial system in order to straighten out the financial confusion in enterprises.

4. It is necessary to combine enterprise consolidation with enterprise readjustment. Under the guidance of state planning, commune- and brigade-run enterprises should be geared to the needs of the peasants, agriculture and rural areas. Such enterprises should be rationally distributed according to local conditions in order to avoid their blind development.

TAIWAN LEADER ATTACKS PRC TO GAIN U.S. ARMS

[Commentator's Article: "Why Is Sun Yun-hsuan Complaining Again of 'Communist China's Intention to Attack Taiwan by Force'?" -- ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE headline]

[Text] Hong Kong 15 Nov (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- On 12 November CHUNGYANG JIHPAO (airmail edition) published on its front page a speech made on 11 November by Sun Yun-hsuan, president of Taiwan's "Executive Yuan." In his speech, Sun again said: "Communist China's ambition to attack Taiwan and Penghu remains unchanged." He also said: "We must never overlook the importance of preparations against war and emergency measures." "We must be prepared for danger in times of peace and ensure the security of the base for rejuvenating China."

Why is Sun Yun-hsuan again making a great show of being serious and shouting this view at the top of his voice? Why was this report not published in ZHONGYANG JIHPAO but emphasized in its airmail edition?

If we carefully read reports published in the Taiwan newspapers over the past few days, we will easily understand Sun Yun-hsuan's intention. On 10 November, CHUNGKUO SHIPAO carried a special dispatch by its reporter in Washington, which reads: "Last month, the U.S. Government ransported to Taiwan all the 500 air-to-surface Bullpup missiles it had ordered and handed them over to the military authorities as agreed. These missiles will be used by F-5 fighters."

The dispatch also says: "In the 1982 fiscal year (ending 30 September), the United States approved arms sales to Taiwan totalling over $530 million. If the 60 F-5 fighters sold by the Northrop Company are included, the total value of U.S. arms sale to Taiwan in 1982 exceeded $900 million."

On 11 November, TZULI WANPAO carried reports on Sun Yun-hsuan receiving some U.S. congressmen, assistants and governors the previous week. It can be seen from these reports that Sun Yun-hsuan's swashbuckling speech made at the "Executive Yuan meeting" was after all meant for the Americans.

In the past year, Sun Yun-hsuan has repeatedly spread the lie of "Communist China's armed attack on Taiwan," which has aroused resentment among men of insight in Taiwan and abroad. On 7 and 10 November, TZULI WANPAO carried comments made by Pennsylvania University Professor Chang Hsu-cheng at a press conference after he attended the "meeting on Asian-Pacific security and cooperation" in Taiwan. He said:

"A government official said that Communist China would resort to force against Taiwan in 3-5 years. This has led to panic among the ordinary people. If the aim of purposely playing up the idea that Communist China will attack Taiwan is to make the Americans sell weapons to us, such an aim will never be attained. The United States understands very well what attitude Communist China may take against us. Its information service and reconnaissance by means of satellites are well organized. Therefore, without strong proof, it will be difficult to convince the United States. Such an act will only increase the people's panic and spark an outflow of funds. Therefore, in doing propaganda work, we must stress the overall situation and not just partial interests."

SPOKESMAN VIEWS PRC-USSR THAW, BREZHNEV DEATH

[Text] Taipei, Nov. 13 (CNA) -- Peking's recent gestures of trying to mend fences with the Soviet Union while moving away from the United States and Japan is clearly an international united front plot, Dr James C.Y. Soong, director general of the Government Information Office and government spokesman, told the Legislative Yuan Saturday. He called special attention to the Chinese Communist machinations behind this development.

Red China, he said, seeks help in defeating enemies that it cannot defeat by itself. So the regime frequently resorts to the tactic of "feigning adherence in the East while attacking in the West." This accounts for the sudden resumption of talks with the Soviet Union in an attempt to improve relations.

The Chinese Communists' ulterior motive is to cash in on the West's fear of the Soviet Union, thereby creating pressure on the West to further isolate the Republic of China internationally.

Dr Soong said he did not believe the governments and peoples of the West would allow themselves to be deceived by the communists.

"But we cannot afford to take this lightly and relax our vigilance," he said. "We must more actively use all available channels to assure that governments and peoples of friendly nations understand the communist conspiracy and are not deceived again."

Dr Soong was commenting on activities of the Government Information Office at a joint session of the legislature's Committees on External Affairs, Interior Affairs and Education.

He said: "The Chinese Communists have recently amde a series of gestures to show their disinterest in relations with the United States. The Chinese Communist 'ambassador' appeared at the October Revolution military parade in Red Square for the first time in 20 years. Teng Hsiao-ping told members of the Japanese Diet that the United States is unreliable. This overnight change in the Chinese Communist attitude toward the United States shows that Peking's friendly overtures were false from the beginning and merely intended to lure the United States away from its close relationship with the Republic of China.

"We may recall the conditions under which the Chinese Communists broke off their negotiations with the Soviet Union. The United States had switched diplomatic recognition from Taipei to Peking. Russia had invaded Afghanistan and was supporting the Vietnamese Communist invasion of Cambodia.

"So Peking decided to show its support of the U.S. position. When the situations in Afghanistan and Vietnam did not change, the Chinese Communists decided to resume their negotiations with the Soviets. This is a rude awakening for those who have stressed the supposedly parallel interests between Washington and Peking. If the Chinese Communists had really believed they had such interests with the United States, they would never have so treacherously resumed negotiations with the common enemy.

"When the Chinese Communists usurped the mainland, they 'leaned to one side' toward Soviet Russia. Then they abandoned Russia to seek U.S. recognition. Now they have leaned toward the Soviet Union again. These flip flops provide convincing evidence of Peking's unreliability.

"The Chinese Communists have always professed to be the leader of the so-called Third World. Many people believed they would never again lean toward the Soviet Union.

"But the new developments have shown that the Chinese Communists were attempting to ingratiate themselves with Third World countries only because they wanted to make them into chips for use in bluffing the United States. Peking's interests are not consistent with those of the Third World. In fact, its export of revolution is the root cause of turmoil in the Third World nations.

"The Chinese Communists gained something, more or less, each time they sought to blackmail the United States. The malicious and momentous intention behind the real or phony thawing of Soviet relations was to compel the United States to reviae or repeal the Taiwan Relations Act. We hope the United States will remember the lessons of the past and not be misled again. But we cannot afford to take this lightly and relax our vigilance. We must more actively use all available channels to assure that the government and peoples of friendly nations understand the communist conspiracy and are not deceived again.

"Brezhnev's death may bring some internal changes in Russia, especially in the senile Soviet hierarchy. But the hand-in-glove collaboration between Moscow and Peking to blackmail the Free World for mutual gain will not be changed.

"I must point out further: The Chinese Communists played the 'Russian card' against the United States while the Soviet Union was playing the 'China card,' also against the United States. If either succeeds, the communist bloc will gain and the Free World and the United States will lose. The Free World should wake up from its daydream of uniting with Communist China against Soviet Russia."

Dr Soong told legislators that the Government Information Office will strengthen its international publicity activities, especially in the United States, to offset these new developments. The office will try to make Americans in all walks of life understand that "China is China" and the"Chinese Communists are the Chinese Communists." The goal is to prompt them to "halt their horses at the brink of the cliff" and adopt a correct U.S. China policy.

TAIPEI COMMENTS ON ROLE OF BREZHNEV'S SUCCESSOR

[Unattributed commentary]

[Text] The death of Brezhnev made headlines in the Republic of China as in the rest of the world. But Chinese experts on the Soviet Union don't think it will make much difference to the Russian people or to the world. As one commentator remarked, communism is communism. Brezhnev was an old commie, but that doesn't necessarily make him better or worse than new commies. It is communism and not any specific individual that has to be changed before peace and freedom can be brought to the world.

There is a recent example of this. Mao Tze-tong was as powerful as Brezhnev, perhaps more so. Mao died. The gang of four took over. For a time, it appeared that things would be worse. Then Teng Hsiao-ping and others got rid of the gang of four. Teng talked about freedom and allowing people to write big-character posters. The door to the West was opened more widely. The United States and the Chinese Communists exchanged recognition. Teng went to Washington. Then, communism reasserted itself. The posters came down. The underground newspaper editors went to jail. Teng told the people quite frankly that nothing was going to get in the way of communism. Nothing had.

There was no period of even pseudofreedom in Brezhnev's life. Khrushchev had been Russia's Teng. He opened some doors and talked about free expression. He didn't last long. Brezhnev brought back the communism of Lenin and Stalin. No nonsense. Weapons first and the living standards of the people at the bottom of the economic pile.

Brezhnev moved into Afghanistan. He moved down the Asian coast to Vietnam. He sent the Soviet fleet into the Indian Ocean. Recently, it was said that he stretched out a hand to the Chinese Communists. But not to the point of meeting Peking's terms. He did not pull back forces from the Chinese mainland border. He did not get out of Afghanistan and Vietnam. Communism and its advances came first, and so will it be with his successors.

Collective leadership will follow Brezhnev. Not for long, however. The communists don't do things that way. Out of the collective will emerge one strong leader. His principal assignment will be to defend and strengthen communism. He will be an agressor and hegemonist. Brezhnev was somewhat on caution's side. He didn't push the United States too hard. He failed to move against Europe. His successors will come from the ranks of the younger communists and could be more dangerous. Mao shelled Kinmen and Matzu but he didn't move against the Republic of China on Taiwan. He recognized the danger of pushing ahead too fast. Teng has been moving faster. He has pledged to seize Taiwan within the decade of the 80's. After trying to (?cooperate with) the United States, he turned against the Americans because they declined to hand over the Republic of China.

So it may be with the successor to Brezhnev. He cannot relax the hold on the communism. He knows as Teng knows on the Chinese mainland that the people don't like communism and don't want it and they would get rid of it if they could. So he must not only defend the communist system but maintain an enemy that the people fear more than the tyranny under which they live.

The successor to Brezhnev cannot reach out for friendship with the United States. If the American enemy does not exist, the Russian Communists would have to invent it. Two enemies are better than one. So the Soviet troops will continue to man the Chinese mainland border. Communism requires enemies lest the people come to understand that the communists are the real enemies. Brezhnev will be replaced by a communist who has been raised under and conditioned by the system. He won't be easy to deal with.

VICE FOREIGN MINISTER ASSESSES USSR-PRC TALKS

[Text] Taipei, Nov 16 (CNA) -- Vice Foreign Minister Fredrick F. Chien Monday urged Western nations to heighten their vigilance over the normalization of relations between Soviet Union and Communist China.

Speaking at a ceremony in celebration of the 37th anniversary of National Taiwan University in the morning, Chien pointed out that it is wrong for the Western countries to make the Republic of China a scapegoat for the detente between Moscow and Peiping by thinking that the rapprochement was caused by improvement of relations between Taiwan and the United States.

In fact, Chien said, whether there is conflict or rapprochement between the two communist regimes, it all stems from internal power struggles within each of those countries and has nothing to do with influence from outside.

Chien noted that the Peiping-Moscow normalization talks, which started last month, will continue in Moscow later, and the Western nations are worrying about how they develop.

If the relations between Soviet Union and Communist China are getting better, Chien predicted that the United States, Russia and Communist China will gradually return to an equilateral triangular confrontation status.

In the short run, Chien said, it is harmless to the Free World. But in the long run, the rapprochement between Moscow and Peiping may make the world realize that only a free and democratic China can benefit the Free World.

The vice foreign minister also criticized some domestic scholars for their suggestion of playing the Russia card. This "childish opinion" will not only endanger themselves but will also endanger the nation, Chien said.

In his capacity as an alumnus of the university, Chien urged students of National Taiwan University to develop their own opinion and to carry out their mission as intellectuals.

PRESIDENT CHIANG INTERVIEWED BY LE FIGARO

OW160935 Taipei International Service in English 0100 GMT 14 Nov 82

[Text] In an interview with the French weekly LE FIGARO magazine, President Chiang Ching-kuo has said there have been no changes on the Chinese mainland since the death of Mao Tse-tung, and the Communist Party's control of power and the people's minds is as all-embracing as ever.

The president criticized the modernizations program of strongman Teng Hsiao-ping as being a deceptive ploy, adding that the liberalized zones shown to foreigners were just a patchwork of the regime.

Chiang urged the West to never forget that the Chinese Communists are Marxist-Leninists with only one objective: to spread Communism throughout the Free World.

When speaking on the recent warming up of relations between Moscow and Peking, Chiang said relations between the two were complex and paradoxical. The two communists powers are antagonistic because both want to be leaders of the world movement. However, they are both communist and therefore cooperative in their goal for world revolution.

The president said he was optimistic about future relations between the Republic of China and the United States, predicting they would strengthen in the years to come.

During the interview with the French magazine, the president expressed his discontent with discriminatory trade attitude European countries have toward Taiwan, pointing out that the Republic of China has always given Western European countries preferential customers' tariff.

BEIJING REVIEW ON UN SUPPORT FOR KAMPUCHEA

HK160803 Beijing BEIJING REVIEW in English No 45, 8 Nov 82, pp 9, 10

[By Ren Yuan: "Democratic Kampuchea Wins Fourth Major Victory"]

[Text] The 37th session of the UN General Assembly accepted the credentials of Democratic Kampuchea by a vote of 90 to 29 on October 25. Since the last session on the same issue, the number of countries favouring Democratic Kampuchea has increased by 13 while those against dropped by 8. The Soviet-Vietnamese attempt to deprive Democratic Kampuchea of its lawful seat in the world organization has become increasingly unpopular.

A Result of Hard Struggle

This important victory was a result of hard struggle. Since the last session of the UN General Assembly the Soviet Union and Vietnam have created various preposterous pretexts for their untenable position. They called the puppet regime of Phnom Penh "the legal government through elections," when in fact the Heng Samrin regime is only in power as a result of foreign aggression and the so-called "elections" were conducted under the bayonets of the foreign aggressors. The Soviet-Vietnamese scheme was an attempt to legitimize the Vietnamese invasion of Democratic Kampuchea.

Moscow and Hanoi boasted that the Phnom Penh regime "effectively controlled the whole territory and people," so it should take Kampuchea's seat in the United Nations. In fact the patriotic army and people of Kampuchea have continued to fight the Vietnamese invaders in many areas of Kampuchea. The Phnom Penh regime could not live for a single day without 200,000 foreign aggressor troops and foreign "advisers."

Another plot of the Soviet Union and Vietnam was to unseat Democratic Kampuchea. They attempted to deprive Democratic Kampuchea of its legal seat in the United Nations so as to replace it some day by the Heng Samrin regime.

After the opening of this year's UN General Assembly session, Vietnamese Foreign Minister Nguyen Co Thach hurried to New York. There he began frenzied diplomatic activities attempting to influence international opinion in favour of Vietnam's aggressive policy. But he failed. The credentials committee recommended acceptance of Democratic Kampuchea on October 6. The body rejected an amendment proposed by Vietnam, Laos and Cuba that would have invalidated Democratic Kampuchea's credentials.

Justice Enjoys Much Support

In his speech at the UN, Chinese Permanent Representative Ling Qing said that to deprive Democratic Kampuchea of its seat would be to condone Vietnamese aggression and to violate the UN Charter and international norms. This is unacceptable to the international community, he said.

Singapore, Thailand, Malaysia, the Philippines, Yugoslavia, Japan, Zaire, Colombia and Papua New Guinea supported Democratic Kampuchea. Many stressed that rejection of the credentials of Democratic Kampuchea would imply UN acceptance of the situation in Kampuchea. The Yugoslav representative said that the people of Democratic Kampuchea and their legal government are fighting aggressor troops and the regime installed and supported by those troops. This regime only represents the apparatus of aggressive war. The UN's acceptance of Democratic Kampuchea's credentials once again shows that the Kampuchean people's struggle against Vietnamese aggression and for national independence has gained tremendous international support, while the Vietnamese aggressors find themselves in an increasingly more difficult and isolated position. Vietnam's failure is irreversible.

XINHUA CITES GATT REPORT ON WORLD, PRC TRADE

[Text] Geneva, November 16 (XINHUA) -- The economic recession in the Western world has caused a shrinkage in the exports of the Western developed countries as well as many developing countries, according to the 1981-1982 annual report on international trade just published here by the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT). In the meantime, the report also notes the substantial increase registered by China in her exports in the past year.

The GATT report recalls that the combined GDP growth of Western industrial countries slowed down from 1.5 percent in 1980 to 1 percent in 1981, and the economic recovery started in North America in the second half of 1980 was short-lived.

As a result, it says, the growth of exports of Western industrial countries slowed down in terms of volume from 4.5 percent in 1980 to 3 percent in 1981, whereas imports declined by 2 percent, as in the preceding year.

The terms of trade deteriorated for most West European countries, whereas they improved for North America and Japan in 1981, mainly reflecting exchange rate movements in favour of the U.S. dollar and the Japanese yen, according to the GATT report.

Referring to the oil-exporting developing countries, the report says that these countries' total export revenue fell by 3 percent in 1981, a sharp reversal from the higher rates of growth in the preceding two years. This mainly resulted from a decline in the volume of petroleum shipments. The trade surplus of these countries was thus reduced from its record level of 145 billion U.S. dollars in 1980 to 112 billion in 1981. There was a further sharp decline in the overall current account surplus of these countries during the first half of 1982, GATT estimates.

For the oil-importing developing countries, the GATT report notes the trend of falling export earning due to the shrinking markets in the recessionary Western world and increasing indebtedness resulted from higher interest rates. The situation sees no prospect of improvement in a period of economic recession.

Referring to China's trade activities, the GATT report states that its exports increased substantially in value in 1981, with its imports standing on the same level. China's exports to developed countries grew by 20 percent in 1981 and those to developing countries increased also by 20 percent or more. China's trade deficit with developed countries, which had been steadily growing in the preceding four years, was almost halved in 1981, while its trade surplus with the developing countries continued to grow in 1981.

REAGAN, KOHL LOOK FOR BETTER EAST-WEST RELATIONS

[Text] Washington, November 15 (XINHUA) -- U.S. President Ronald Reagan and West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl today announced their desire to improve relations with the Soviet Union.

We "are ready to conduct relations with the new leadership in Moscow with the aim of extending areas of cooperation to their mutual benefit if Soviet conduct makes that possible," the two leaders said in a joint statement issued after their two-hour talks on relations with the Soviet Union. But, Reagan and Kohl also urged the Soviet Union "to comply with internationally recognized rules of conduct" and pursue "a world-wide policy of moderation and restraint."

Kohl arrived here Monday for a three-day visit, the first he has paid to the United States since taking office in October. His visit is reported to bolster German-American ties, which apparently weakened in the past few years because of their differences over the West-East relations.

In the lengthy statement, Reagan and Kohl said the West should approach the Soviet Union "with a clear, steadfast and coherent attitude which combines the defense of its own interests with the readiness to pursue constructive relations, dialogue and cooperation with the leadership of the Soviet Union."

"Afghanistan remains an acid test of Soviet readiness to respect the independence, autonomy, and genuine non-alignment of Third World countries and to exercise restraint in its international behavior," they said.

They said the Soviet arms expansion in recent years "has threatened the security of the alliance and international stability." Therefore, the West must "maintain its defenses to the level necessary to meet the threat" before talking about true nuclear disarmament. Although they are really for arms control, they said, they regarded the proposal for freezing the existing levels of nuclear weapons as "harmful to the security of the Atlantic alliance."

"The comprehensive program for arms control proposals" put forward by the United States provides "the best hope for true reductions in arsenals of both intermediate and intercontinental strategic weapons," they added.

During the talks, Kohl reaffirmed his government's commitment to the deployment of Pershing II missiles and cruise missiles in West Germany, if negotiations on this subject now underway in Geneva do not result in a concrete agreement making deployment unnecessary.

The chancellor also expressed his appreciation for the lifting of the U.S. sanctions against the Soviet gas pipeline. The two leaders agreed that the Western countries should consult and cooperate closely in dealing with the East-West economic relations. Those relations should be approached in a "prudent and diversified manner," consistent with the political and security interests of the Western alliance, they said.

The United States has strived to prevent its West European allies from developing closer economic relations with the Soviet Union. Kohl is scheduled to meet Treasury Secretary Donald Regan and Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger before leaving for Bonn.

BEIJING VIEWS LIFTING OF PIPELINE SANCTIONS

["International Current Events" program commentary: "The Conflict Between the United States and Western Europe Over the Natural Gas Issue Has Come to an End for the Time Being"]

[Excerpts] On 13 November, U.S. President Reagan announced in a radio address that the United States and its Western European allies have reached agreement on issues of economic relations with the Soviet Union, and that the United States has decided to lift the sanctions against the Western European companies supplying natural gas pipeline equipment to the Soviet Union. The U.S. decision to lift the sanctions is generally welcomed by Western European countries and Japan. Thus the sharp conflict between the United States and Europe on the natural gas issue has come to an end for the time being and the contradictions among the Western allies have eased somewhat.

The United States has always taken a negative attitude toward the natural gas pipeline project and has repeatedly pressed the Western European countries to give up the deal. However, out of their own strategic considerations and economic interests and needs, the Western European countries finally reached an agreement with the Soviet Union despite U.S. opposition. The United States was deeply annoyed by this and a very acute conflict ensued between it and its Western European allies.

In the meantime, the United States decided to extend the U.S.-Soviet grain agreement and increase grain supplies to the Soviet Union. Reagan even pledged that the United States would not impose a grain embargo even if the Soviet Union were to invade Poland. The United States does not allow its allies to expand economic ties with the Soviet Union, but increases its own grain supplies to the Soviet Union by a large margin. Such behavior -- one may steal a horse while others may not look over the hedge -- aroused protests and censures at home and abroad.

In the past few months, U.S. sanctions failed to prevent the natural gas pipeline deal between Western Europe and the Soviet Union. Instead they caused a serious rift in the U.S.-Western European alliance and economic losses to many European and U.S. firms.

Under the circumstances, the Reagan administration was forced to find a way to reach a compromise, break the deadlock, repair relations between the United States and its allies and ease resentment at home and abroad. Nor did the European countries want to prolong the dispute with the United States. There have been frequent exchanges of views and secret meetings between the United States and Western Europe since early October to iron out their differences.

The details of the agreement reached between the United States and its Western European allies on economic relations with the Soviet Union have not yet been made public. Judging by President Reagan's 13 November radio address and disclosures by the Western papers, the agreement covers mainly three areas: First, the Western European countries will begin a study in reducing their dependence on Soviet energy and no new contracts for purchase of Soviet natural gas will be signed during the course of the study. Second, measures will be increased to restrict the extension of loans at preferential interest rates and the transfer of strategic materials and high technology to the Soviet Union. Third, the United States will lift sanctions against the companies supplying technology and equipment for the Soviet natural gas pipeline.

There is an overall identity of strategic interests and an interdependence in military, political and economic fields between the United States and its Western European allies. They do not want the contradictions between them to get out of hand.

Now the dispute between the United States and Western Europe over the natural gas pipeline has come to an end for the time being, but new contradictions and conflicts may still arise in the future.

The U.S. press holds that the U.S. Government should draw a lesson from the dispute and refrain from taking unilateral actions in the handling of relations with its allies and from interfering in other countries' affairs.

VICE PRESIDENT BUSH ENDS VISIT TO NIGERIA

During his stay, Bush discussed with Nigerian Vice-President Alex Ekwueme the situation in Chad, Western Sahara and the independence of Namibia in particular. At a press conference yesterday, Bush said that the United States still insists on the withdrawal of Cuban troops from Angola as a condition for independence of Namibia.

Ekwueme said at a state banquet in honor of Bush yesterday, "the tortuous negotiations over Namibia have already gone on for too long." He reaffirmed, "in the considered view of this administration, there can be no question of formally linking the independence of Namibia with the withdrawal of Cuban troops from Angola."

George Bush will continue his African visit after attending Soviet leader Leonid Brezhnev's funeral.

HUANG HUA IN MOSCOW WITH 'IMPORTANT' MESSAGE

LD161604 Zagreb Domestic Service in Serbo-Croatian 1400 GMT 16 Nov 82

[TANJUG Correspondent Branko Stosic report from Moscow]

[Excerpt] What attracts the most attention now is the meeting between Huang Hua and Andrey Gromyko, the foreign ministers of China and the USSR respectively, and the likely reception of the Chinese foreign minister by Yuriy Andropov. There has been no official confirmation yet about the talks, but it is known that the guest from Beijing is bringing with him an important message from the Chinese Government. Precisely for this reason, and coupled with the unconcealed Soviet wish and readiness that the big neighbors may improve the state of their relations, there is no doubt that this will be a significant step toward normalization and that this process will contribute to the overall stabilization of the situation and consolidation of peace not only on the Asian Continent but in the world as a whole.

TV COVERAGE OF HUANG HUA'S CONTACTS IN MOSCOW

HK161422 [Editorial Report] Beijing Domestic Television Service in Mandarin at 1100 GMT on 16 November during its regular evening news broadcast shows a male announcer reading the news headlines in which he includes Huang Hua holding meetings in Moscow with "leaders of Romania, Yugoslavia, Korea, Pakistan and America." The news headlines do not include Huang Hua's meeting with Soviet Communist Party Leader Yuriy Andropov. After all domestic news items are broadcast, the domestic television service at about 1124 GMT shows the same male announcer reading a report. This is the text of the report:

"According to XINHUA, Huang Hua, special envoy of the PRC, state councillor and foreign minister, met in Moscow the day before yesterday or yesterday, on separate occasions, with Ceausescu, president of the Socialist Republic of Romania; Stambolic, president of the Presidency of the Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia; Pak Song-chol, vice president of the DPRK; and Ziaul Haq, president of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan. Huang Hua had cordial and friendly talks with them. Huang Hua also met yesterday with U.S. Vice President Bush and Secretary of State Shultz and had friendly talks with them."

After the reading of this report, which is the television service's first international news item, a filmed report is shown on Huang Hua's meeting with CPSU General Secretary Andropov. The filmed report, which is less than a minute long, opens with a shot of Andropov, Soviet Foreign Minister Andrey Gromyko and two unidentified men entering an unidentified hall to attend a Kremlin reception for foreign delegations after the funeral of President Brezhnev.

This is followed by a long shot of many men standing in the hall. Beginning with this shot the video reception becomes poor. Huang Hua is shown in the hall shaking hands with Andropov, an unidentified Soviet official, Gromyko and another unidentified official. Canadian Prime Minister Trudeau and a foreign leader (who cannot be identified because of poor reception) are shown shaking hands with the Soviet leaders. The film ends with a closeup shot of Polish leader Jaruzelski leaving the hall.

While this filmed report is being shown, a Chinese announcer speaking in Mandarin says the following in the voice-over: "The Soviet Union yesterday held a reception for foreign delegations which had attended Brezhnev's funeral. During the reception, newly elected CPSU Central Committee General Secretary Andropov extended a warm welcome to Chinese Foreign Minister Huang Hua. According to a report, the U.S. vice president and the Soviet leader discussed issues concerning relations between the Soviet Union and the United States for half a minute [as heard] at the reception."

BEIJING REPORTS ON RADIO, TV GROUP'S DPRK VISIT

["International Current Events" program report by station correspondent (Chen Kexin): "Sino-Korean Friendship Is Passed on From Generation to Generation"]

[Text] Recently our Chinese radio and television observation group spent more than 20 days in the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, our fraternal and friendly neighbor, on a friendly visit and observation tour. We were warmly received everywhere. Just as Comrade Deng Xiaoping said not long ago, the relationship between China and Korea is no ordinary one. It has a long history and is deep-rooted in the hearts of the people of both countries.

The Chinese radio and television observation group's visit to Korea took place at a time when President Kim Il-song had just successfully completed his state visit to China and a new situation had been created in the development of Sino-Korean friendship. Throughout our visit, Korean friends in all walks of life told us repeatedly that they were grateful for the warm reception and lavish hospitality accorded President Kim Il-song by the Chinese Communist Party and the Chinese people and grateful to Comrade Hu Yaobang and Comrade Deng Xiaoping, who personally accompanied President Kim Il-song on the trip to distant Chengdu and Xian.

(Yi Yong-il), chairman of the Korean Broadcasting Commission, told us that activities and events during president Kim Il-song's state visit to China were promptly reported on radio and television. Chairman (Yi Yong-il) happily said: The brotherly friendship between Korean and China was fostered by Chairman Mao Zedong, Premier Zhou Enlai and President Kim Il-song during the war of resistance against Japan. Now this friendship has been inherited and developed by the great Chinese Communist Party and the Government of the People's Republic of China. The relationship between our two countries is one of militant unity and friendship and of sharing weal and woe, a relationship no one can destory.

On the day we arrived in Pyongyang, (Yi Chong-nam), vice chairman of the Korean Broadcasting Commission, gave an evening banquet for us. He cordially suggested that neither side read prepared texts of speeches when speaking at the banquet, but talk freely and cheerfully. In other words, all should do away with diplomatic language. We accepted our host's friendly suggestion with great pleasure. Everyone talked freely and cheerfully in a friendly atmosphere. Before we knew it, the banquet had gone on for 2 hours, from 1930 to 2130. Although meeting for the first time, it was like a reunion of old friends after a long separation. There were endless things to talk about.

The Korean Broadcasting Commission attached great importance to our visit. The activities arranged for us were wide-ranging, involving party, government, military, mass education and other spheres. The responsible comrades of the broadcasting commissions and foreign affairs departments of (South Hamgyong Province) and Kaesong City, who received us, expressed thanks to our party and government for their consistent support in the struggle of the Korean Workers' Party and the Korean people for the independent and peaceful reunification of their fatherland and the support to the reunification of establishing the Democratic Confederal Republic of Koryo proposed by President Kim Il-song. They repeatedly expressed their firm support for the correct principle put forward by the Chinese Communist Party and the Chinese Government on the peaceful reunification of China with Taiwan's return to the motherland.

They spoke highly of the 12th national congress of our party which successfully closed recently and wished the Chinese people success in achieving the great strategic goals under the guidance of the fighting program of the 12th CPC Congress.

All Korean comrades who once fought side by side with the Chinese People's Volunteers against U.S. imperialist aggression showed a special militant friendship in seeing us. Comrade (Yi Kwang-sin), deputy director of the Chollima (Yongsong) machinery plant in Hamhung, which employs more than 10,000 workers and staff, received us when we visited the plant. He said cordially that in the past he fought side by side with the Chinese People's Volunteers against the U.S. aggressors on the west coast in the war of liberation of the fatherland. He was very happy to see Chinese comrades visiting the plant. He said he felt it was like meeting with his own brothers.

Comrade (Chong Hi-tae), director of the Hamhung patriots' daily-use articles factory, is a disabled veteran who lost a leg in the war of liberation of the fatherland. He was very excited to see us. He held our hands tightly and said with deep feeling that, among the disabled soldiers in the factory, some had taken part in China's liberation war and some had fought side by side with the Chinese People's Volunteers against the U.S. imperialists. They had been very happy to learn that we would come to visit their plant. He stressed: The friendship cemented with blood between Korea and China is unbreakable and must be passed on from generation to generation.

In our visit to the rural areas, we came to the (Taean) Korean-Chinese friendship cooperative farm in suburban Pyongyang and were warmly received by (Mun Song-il), secretary of the farm's party committee, and (Choe Tu-ha), chairman of the administrative committee of the farm. They treated us to newly harvested honey, apples, pears and baked sweet potatoes. We learned that the (Taean) cooperative farm and the (Hongxing) Sino-Korean friendship people's commune in surburban Beijing have long been linked as friendly units. Like relatives, they have frequent contacts. They always treat Chinese visitors to the farm with their abundant special local farm and sideline products. They mentioned that in autumn of this year the cooperative overcame a drought that had lasted more than 2 months thanks to the (Monnong) Reservoir, which the Chinese People's Volunteers helped them rebuild after repeated bombing by U.S planes. Some comrades of the Chinese People's Volunteers gave their lives while repairing the reservoir. Despite the drought this year, the (Taean) cooperative farm still achieved a bumper harvest because there was irrigation water in the reservoir. They said: In every bumper harvest season, members of the farm cannot help remembering the Chinese comrades who gave their lives for Korean-Chinese friendship and cherishing a feeling of respect for the Chinese People's Volunteers' internationalist spirit.

The ardent sentiment of the Korean young people was even more unforgettable. In Pyongyang we visited the (Yanggang) girls middle school and the (Hyaching) primary school. After we had observed classes, the students gave a rich and varied singing and dancing performance for us. When we were leaving, the students of the two schools surrounded us, held our hands and said together and repeatedly: Please come again.

China and Korea are linked by mountains and rivers and are as closely related as lips and teeth. During our entire visit, we lived in an atmosphere of friendship every day and we felt that the friendship had taken root among the people of the two countries. The Korean friends and the comrades of our group had a common wish: that Sino-Korean friendship would roll on like the water in the Yalu Jiang and last forever like the pine trees on the Changbaek Mountain.

DENG XIAOPING, WANG ZHEN MEET JSP DELEGATION

[Text] Beijing, November 16 (XINHUA) -- Deng Xiaoping, chairman of the Central Advisory Commission of the Chinese Communist Party, and Wang Zhen, member of the party Central Committee's Political Bureau, met and had a cordial conversation here today with leading members of a goodwill delegation from the Socialist Party of Japan [JSP].

Deng Xiaoping said that Sino-Japanese relations hold an important place in China's foreign policy. "In the present changing international situation," he said, "the continuing development of friendship and cooperation between our two countries is conducive to the peace and stability of the Asia-Pacific region and of the world."

Delegation leader Isamu Koyanagi, who is a member of the House of Councillors and vice-chairman of the Socialist Party, outlined the present situation in Japan. He thanked his Chinese hosts for the warmth and hospitality his delegation has been met with.

Deng Xiaoping appreciated the Socialist Party's decades of efforts to promote Sino-Japanese friendship. He hoped for still more people-to-people exchanges between the two countries so as to advance China-Japan friendship.

Also present were Shoichi Shimodaira, advisor to the delegation, member of the House of Representatives and president of the Japan-China Special Committee of the Socialist Party; and Takatoshi Fujita and Hitoshi Kubo, deputy leaders of the delegation and members of the House of Representatives. Among the hosts were Han Kehua, director of the national tourism administration, and Sun Pinghua, vice-president of the China-Japan Friendship Association.

DENG XIAOPING RECALLS WARNING AGAINST U.S.

OW161149 Tokyo KYODO in English 1140 GMT 16 Nov 82

[Text] Beijing, Nov 16 KYODO -- Chinese Communist leader Deng Xiaoping Tuesday mentioned a 1959 warning issued by then opposition Japan Socialist Party Chairman Inejiro Asanuma who said "U.S. imperialism" was the common enemy of the Japanese and Chinese people. Deng, chairman of the Central Advisory Commission of the Chinese Communist Party, touched on the matter during a meeting with a visiting Socialist Party delegation.

His reference to Asanuma's warning, which the Socialist issued in Beijing during a 1959 visit, was a deviation from China's public silence about it since 1972 when China and the United States achieved rapprochement with the historic trip to China by then President Richard Nixon.

Diplomatic sources here said Deng's remark Tuesday apparently indicated that coordination of China's foreign policy, centering on moves to take a harder stance toward the U.S., is currently underway among Chinese policy makers.

Asanuma was hailed in China for his warning but drew harsh criticism in Japan because he made it at a time when the Japanese Government was negotiating with the United States on a new security treaty. A rightist youth stabbed Asanuma while he took part in an open political debate at a public hall and he later died of the wounds.

China is currently taking a second look at the Japan-U.S. security treaty, for several years regarded by Beijing as a deterrent against the Soviet Union.

RENMIN RIBAO PRINTS HOANG VAN HOAN ARTICLE

[Text] Beijing, November 5 (XINHUA) -- A former Vietnamese leader, Hoang Van Hoan, has contributed to the PEOPLE'S DAILY here an article denouncing the wilful distortion of Ho Chi Minh's works by Le Duan and his company. The "Selected Works of Ho Chi Minh" they published in 1980 contain wilful abridgements and alterations, the article says.

Hoang Van Hoan, once vice-chairman of the Standing Committee of the National Assembly of Vietnam, writes under the title "'Selected Works of Ho Chi Minh' and Renegade Le Duan." The article reads in part as follows:

The works written by President Ho Chi Minh during his 50 years of revolutionary activities are all truths proven by the revolutionary practice of Vietnam, having served as a torch lighting up the rocky road for the Vietnamese revolutionaries and their army.

When republishing a new edition of the "Selected Works of Ho Chi Minh", the writings selected in the 1960 edition must be published intact because they were approved by President Ho Chi Minh himself. As to the works he wrote after 1961, they might be compiled into a new volume, as "Selected Works of Ho Chi Minh, Volume II".

However, Le Duan and his ilk, for their own sinister aims, have made the decision (in the words of the publisher's note): "A new edition of 'Selected Works of Ho Chi Minh' must be published as soon as possible... as a substitute for the 1960 edition for the study of cadres, party members and the whole people."

Why is the need of a substitute? The reason is that the 1960 edition is incompatible with their counter-revolutionary line. A substitute would serve their purpose to prohibit the reading of the original edition of the selected works, so that everybody must read and study what they have altered and selected in their new edition. The original edition contains 249 articles written by President Ho Chi Minh from 1920 to 1960. They are all his most important works. But Le Duan retains only 74 of them and leaves out all the other 175 articles, that means dropping out 70 percent of the articles published in the 1960 edition.

In the remaining 74 articles, Le Duan and his company have flagrantly blue-penciled quite a lot, including President Ho's political report to the Second National Congress of the Vietnamese Workers' Party in 1951, a report approved by all the delegates present.

As to President Ho's works from 1961 to 1969, preliminary estimates show that more than 700 articles have been published in the Vietnamese paper NHAN DAN alone. But only 52 articles are selected in what they call their new edition. The 52 articles and some others taken out from the original edition were compiled into two volumes of the same size. This obviously is a trick to make people ignorant of many important ideas removed from the original edition, for now they are allowed access only to the new one which has been implemented and revised by the Le Duan clique.

Anti-China is the nucleus of the Le Duan clique's domestic and foreign policies. Haunted by the fear that the people will know about the excellent situation in China and most of all, about what President Ho said with deep affection about the Chinese people and revolution, this clique brazenly removed nearly 70 articles as well as paragraphs and sentences in other articles about China from the "Selected Works of Ho Chi Minh", when they prepared the 1980 edition.

But the profound Vietnam-China friendship cultivated by President Ho and Chairman Mao has taken deep roots in the hearts of the two peoples, and no force can undermine it. The publication of 1980 edition of the "Selected Works of Ho Chi Minh" on Le Duan's order is null and void. The Le Duan clique must immediately withdraw and destroy all copies of this edition, and reprint the 1960 edition as it was for the broad masses to study.

"President Ho's Will", last article in the new edition, has also been distorted by the Le Duan clique. In spite of the alterations by the Le Duan clique to the original edition of the "Selected Works of Ho Chi Minh", President Ho's theories, political line, thought and moral values will live for ever in the hearts of the Vietnamese people and always remain as a beacon showing the road of their advance.

All patriotic Vietnamese should firmly rise to defend President Ho's political line and achievements of the revolution, smash the despicable conspiracy of the Le Duan clique and its ruthless, corrupted ruling body, and strive to build a peaceful, unified, independent and democratic Vietnam to fulfill President Ho's expectations.

SRV VESSELS SEIZE THAI FISHING TRAWLERS

[Text] Bangkok, November 15 (XINHUA) -- Seven Thai fishing trawlers carrying 200 crew-members were seized by armed Vietnamese vessels in international waters yesterday, BANGKOK POST reported today. Thai fisheries sources said last night that four armed Vietnamese vessels chased and opened fire at a Thai fishing fleet operating in high seas about 30 nautical miles south of the Thorn Island yesterday morning.

Two of the seven trawlers contacted the radio center of the fish marketing organization in Samut Sakhon Province at nine a.m. when they were chased and machine-gunned, but radio contact was lost later, the sources said. No injuries were reported. The fate of the 200 crewmen was still unknown.

The Supreme Command of the Thai Armed Forces reported late last September that the Vietnamese-backed Heng Samrin forces had equipped many siezed Thai trawlers with weapons and telecommunications systems and converted them into gun-boats for intrusion into Thai territorial waters to attack other Thai fishing vessels.

AGRICULTURE MINISTER RECEIVED BY MARCOS

XINHUA ANALYZES YUGOSLAV ECONOMIC DIFFICULTIES

OW131600 Beijing XINHUA in English 1520 GMT 13 Nov 82

[News Analysis: Yugoslav Economy -- Difficult But Remediable by Bao Guangren -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Beijing, November 13 (XINHUA) -- A package of urgent measures sympathetically accepted by the public seem to have given brighter hopes to the Yugoslav economy which has for some time been in difficulty -- characterized above all by heavy foreign indebtedness.

These measures, mostly approved by the Federal Assembly in mid-October as part of the government's economic stabilization program, are designed to promote production and exports, rationalize the use of foreign exchange and reduce domestic spendings to make the two ends meet.

Priority is given to financing reproduction rather than capital construction and self-managed enterprises have to bear greater responsibility for the loss they have incurred.

In the wake of a law promulgated in May which requires the pooling of hard currency earnings of all the republics into a national bank account, a ban has been imposed on private foreign exchange transactions, although citizens are still free to withdraw their foreign exchange earnings which reportedly total 7.5 million dollars on which they receive in interest rate of 12.5 per cent.

Yugoslavs travelling abroad have to deposit 5,000 dinars (about 100 U.S. dollars) each for the first trip and an additional 2,000 for a second one. The number of the missions and offices abroad has been reduced from 1,300 to 500, saving several hundred million dollars a year.

Gasoline is rationed at 40 liters per month for each automobile, as oil imports, which normally accounted for two-thirds of domestic consumption, has been cut by one million tons this year.

The government has also decided to raise electricity rates to discourage families consuming power more than strictly necessary.

Another major move, taken on October 22, was to devalue the national currency by 20 per cent to a rate of 63.5074 dinars to the U.S. dollar.

The idea was to make Yugoslav goods more competitive on world markets and to boost tourism which used to bring in over a billion dollars.

The current budget has been reduced by 3 to 8 per cent, and work is underway to draw up a plan to cut down federal administration spendings by 10-15 per cent over the next few years.

The host of measures show the firm resolve of the government to revitalize the economy.

Yugoslav leaders have stressed on many occasions the need to spare no efforts to overcome the difficulties by relying on national potentials. Vice-Premier Borislav Srebic, referring to the 19 billion dollars Yugoslavia owes externally, said the nation is resolved to preserve its foreign liquidation capacity and subsequently "economic and political independence," even at the cost of a "larger drop in the living standards."

For this reason, they have told the people about the situation as it is and are encouraging them to discuss it freely for a way out. The whole nation seems to have been mobilized to war against pestering economic woes.

As many people see it, the measures were the result of an undelayable sum-up of economic realities.

The economic crisis "has sobered us up," Vice-Premier Zvone Dragan once said.

There are many factors that plunged Yugoslavia's economy into difficulty.

As world-wide recession has cut its exports and high interest rates have added to its indebtedness, its foreign liquidation capacity has been reduced.

Internally, there is lack of coordination in investment so that various parts of the economy do not fit together. Plants built with foreign loans sometimes produce nothing for export but instead increase dependence on imports because they need inputs from abroad.

The sharp cut of imports, sometimes in the wrong places, caused the shortages of imported raw materials on which many plants are depending. This has affected industrial production.

Another internal cause was lack of adequate emphasis on responsibility and economic efficiency. There had been pell-mell investment in the 1970s. And today, there are moves to sharpen "the political and material responsibility of all" who have committed mistakes or acts of negligence, "be they individuals, organs or enterprises."

As a matter of fact, Yugoslav leaders were not without foresight about the country's problems. They started to take measures three years ago to turn the economy better. The effort proved effective to a certain extent in 1980 and 1981: current account and trade deficits came down.

This year the country, helped by a loan of 1.1 billion dollars, has managed to repay four billion dollars in principal, with only 500 million dollars remaining uncovered till now.

Foreign trade deficit for the first nine months, while still standing at 2.7 billion dollars, represented a 34 per cent improvement as compared with the same period in 1981. The rise of prices has also been moderated a bit to one of 24.6 per cent.

Apart from the effectuality of the government measures, public acceptance is the most important guarantee for their success, in a country based on the institution of socialist self-management.

In the context, cooperation between enterprises in developed sectors and those in less developed sectors is gaining new momentum, on top of a total of 183 joint-investment agreements already concluded by mid-September for the construction of new plants costing 98 billion dinars.

Agriculturists are planning to reap 1.5 billion dollars for farm exports next year, apart from meeting the domestic needs. Under the slogan of "all for agriculture," the sector is quite sure to earn 438 million dollars for the country this year as set in the export plan.

A plucked up power industry aims to generate about 71.5 billion kWh next year. Coal production is planned at some 60 million tons, or 5 million tons more than this year.

Yugoslav leaders assessed that the present economic difficulties can not be overcome very soon because foreign debts will be higher next year. A remarkable upturn will probably come around in 1984.

One British paper depicted the urgent measures as "one of the cold showers that herald the Balkan winter." But one having made a closer look at them tends to think it is the very cold wintry days that harbinger a warm spring time.

XINHUA ANALYZES FORTHCOMING CARIBBEAN SUMMIT

["News Analysis: Caribbean Summit in Prospect" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Kingston, November 9 (XINHUA) -- The third summit meeting of the Caribbean Community member nations will be held here from November 15 to 18 after a lapse of six years because of repeated postponements. The last summit was held in Saint Kitts in 1975.

The forthcoming summit will be held against the background that nearly all the Caribbean nations are in the grip of economic troubles as a result of the worldwide economic recession and that the stepped-up superpowers' rivalry has turned this region into one of the trouble spots of the world.

According to the Secretariat of the Caribbean Community, the summit will discuss international situation and regional security.

Earlier, the Standing Committee of Foreign Ministers of the community nations had studied the possibility of creating a "zone of peace" in the region, free from military intervention and manoeuvres, and leaving the regional problems to the local people to resolve.

Antigua and Belize have proposed the establishment of a regional security force to cope with external threats, and late last month, seven east Caribbean nations have arrived at an agreement to set up a joint coastal defense force.

The upcoming summit reportedly will also discuss the U.S.-proposed Caribbean aid program with a view to adopting a common stand toward it. Community Secretariat sources have repeatedly made it clear that the proposed program should contribute to the region's integration movement by helping its economic development and not to lead the movement astray.

It is expected that much attention will be paid by Caribbean leaders to economic problems. Apart from dealing with all-round economic difficulties at home, Caribbean Community member nations have to mitigate trade conflicts between them.

The community has recorded achievements since its founding in 1973. Politically, it has supported the national independence movement in the region; economically, it has strived for the trade and economic integration there. It was reported that the trade volume among its member countries increased to one billion dollars in 1981 from 235 million dollars in 1973. In addition, various member countries have cooperated with each other in the fields of culture, education, medicine and journalism.

However, as a result of the political and idealogical differences between member nations, the foreign policies of these nations are not always in concert. The short-term interests of some member countries also constitute an obstacle to the process of economic integration.

The convening of the summit after a six-year delay is a success in itself. People hope that the summit will give new impetus to the growth of the community, promote the cooperation and development in the Caribbean region and strengthen the position of the community in face of superpowers.

LEGAL SCHOLAR VIEWS REVISED STATE CONSTITUTION

[Text] Beijing, November 15 (XINHUA) -- China's new draft of revised constitution is a socialist constitution with Chinese characteristics, said legal scholar Zhang Youyu here today. Zhang is deputy director of the Commission of Legislative Affairs of the N.P.C. Standing Committee and deputy secretary-general of the National Constitutional Revision Committee.

Zhang made the comment in a meeting with a Japanese friendship delegation of lawyers led by Hiroshi Kashiwagi. He briefed the Japanese guests on the draft of revised constitution. He said the draft constitution is of socialist characteristics suitable to present realities of China. He gave the following examples:

-- The draft provides that the People's Republic of China is a socialist state of the dictatorship of the proletariat led by the working class and based on the alliance of workers and peasants.

-- The People's Republic is a unitary multinational state. The people's congresses are an effective democratic system. The draft expands the functions and powers of the Standing Committee of the National People's Congress, especially its legislative power, in order to facilitate the deputies' work.

-- As to the economic system, while providing that state ownership and collective ownership are the basis of the socialist economy, the draft also says the state allows a private economic sector with ownership by individuals, foreign investment in China and economic cooperation between China and foreign countries.

As to the rights and duties of citizens, the draft provides that a citizen's personal dignity is inviolable, with the consideration of the lessons drawn from the 10 years of the Cultural Revolution. All these provisions, Zhang said, are formulated in accordance with present conditions. "They will be guarantees to building up a socialist country with a high level of civilization and democracy," he said.

LE MONDE REPORTS ON TRIAL OF DISSIDENTS

PM161645 Paris LE MONDE in French 12 Nov 82 p 6

[Manuel Lucbert dispatch: "New Sentences Passed on Democratic Movement Members"]

[Text] Beijing -- A reliable source in Beijing has confirmed that Chinese dissident Liu Qing, author of the account "I Accuse Before Society's Court," the first manuscript to emerge from a political detainees' camp in the PRC, was given a 7-year prison sentence a short time ago. That sentence comes on top of the 3 years of "reeducation through labor" which were passed on him in July 1980. Nonetheless it is not known on what date the trial was held -- it apparently dates back to early summer -- or the precise grounds for the sentence.

At the same time as Mr Liu Qing, Mr Liu Nianchun, his brother, and Mr Lu Lin, another member of the democratic movement, were apparently also given prison sentences, about 10 years for the former and 4 years for the latter. Both had been arrested in Beijing during the summer of 1981.

Mr Liu Qing has been in detention since November 1979. At that time he had given himself up to the police to try and secure the release of several dissidents apprehended in front of "Democracy Wall" while selling the minutes of the trial of Wei Jingsheng, the famous dissident who ran the magazine EXPLORATIONS and who was himself sentenced to 15 years imprisonment in October 1979.

The sentences passed on Mr Liu Qing, Mr Liu Nianchun and Mr Lu Lin follow those, already known, passed on Mr Xu Wenli (15 years), formerly active on the 5 APRIL TRIBUNE and Wang Xizhe (14 years), a dissident from Guangzhou.

Following the repression of opposition groups starting in early 1979, these trials show the government's desire to deal an irreparable blow to democratic or liberal dissidence, even if it is Marxist, as in the case of Mr Xu Wenli and Mr Liu Qing.

In addition another trial of supporters of the gang of four is reported in the southern province of Yunnan. Mr Huang Zhaoqi, the main defendant, has been sentenced to 18 years' imprisonment. Some of the evidence against him dates back to the Cultural Revolution during which, as a result of the actions of the revolutionary committee of which he was one of the leaders, more than 1,380,000 people were allegedly persecuted in Yunnan. According to the prosecution, 17,000 of them were beaten to death and 61,000 were left disabled as a result of ill-treatment.

RENMIN RIBAO ON ECONOMIC RESPONSIBILITY SYSTEM

[Editorial: "Workers Are the Masters of Enterprises"]

[Text] In our socialist country, there would seem to be no question of whether workers are the masters of their enterprises. But in some enterprises, this problem has not been genuinely solved. This merits our attention and consideration.

In the past we made revolution, overthrew the three big mountains and transformed the private ownership of industry and commerce. All these things were done for the purpose of transforming the private ownership of the means of production so that the workers and broad masses of laboring people could be masters of their country and enterprises. We have already achieved this. After the workers and broad masses of laboring people won the right to be masters, their sense of responsibility and untiring enthusiasm for labor erupted like a volcano, bringing about the rapid restoration of our national economy and putting us on a path of healthy development. Later on, due to the influence and guiding principle of "left" deviation in economic work, the workers' sense of responsibility for being their own masters was weakened. The question of workers' participation in management was raised for many years, but for various reasons it was not truly carried out in practice. During the 10 years of turmoil, factories became positions from which to "exercise dictatorship," everything was thrown into disorder, and the socialist relations of production and the development of socialist productive forces was seriously damaged.

"The socialist cause is the cause of the whole people." The basic issue of the various reforms and policies since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee was how to bring about and guarantee the position of the masses as masters of their own country and to arouse the people's initiative and creative spirit in building socialism.

The party Central Committee first of all grasped agriculture, the key to promoting the situation as a whole; corrected the erroneous guiding ideology of the "left" which had existed for a long time; and comprehensively carried out the different forms of responsibility systems in agricultural production. Contracts linking remuneration with output, and particularly the system of assigning full responsibility, broke down the phenomenon of "all eating from the same big pot;" respected the material interests of the peasants, so that the more they worked the more they were paid; and in the operation and distribution of production, the peasants' autonomy was respected. All these measures won the enthusiastic support of the peasants. This responsibility system has developed swiftly. A good beginning affects the situation as a whole, and the overall economy in the rural areas has "come alive."

Agriculture inspired and spurred on industry. Thanks to the direct concern of the CPC Central Committee and the State Council, the Shoudu Iron and Steel Company made courageous explorations and started to practice an economic responsibility system combining responsibility, rights and benefits. This kind of responsibility system includes two interrelated aspects: One is to extend the autonomy of enterprises, clearly define the economic responsibility enterprises must undertake toward the state, to be sure to fulfill the state plan and implement the economic responsibility system in the relations between the enterprise and the state. The other is to implement the economic responsibility system within enterprises down to every individual· that is, to fulfill the plans and all technical and economic quotas issued by the state, all professional work and the requirements of cooperation between and within levels. This major reform of the economic system brought about tremendous changes in the Shoudu Iron and Steel Company. The economic results have markedly improved and the profits have increased annually at an average of 20 percent for 3 years running. At present, out of 50 comparable technical and economic targets, 32 achieved by the Shoudu Iron and Steel Company were among the highest of the same industry over the whole country, and 6 reached advanced international levels.

Why is it that the economic responsibility system has such power? Summing up the economic responsibility system, some comrades say that it has brought "four forces" to enterprises: through initial reforms of management which had previously been over-rigid and excessive, enterprises won their autonomy, gaining "vital force;" the operative achievements of enterprises and the labor achievements of workers were linked up with economic benefit, to a certain extent overcoming egalitarianism with "everybody eating from the same big pot," bringing "motive force" to enterprises and workers; enterprises and workers have greater responsibility, and thus "pressure force;" and they have been inspired with a sense of responsibility as masters and so further tapped the "potential force" of enterprises. These four forces converge into a mighty driving force enabling enterprises to develop production and raise economic results.

In the final analysis, what are the "four forces?"

First, the workers' right to democratic management of enterprises is extended and the workers feel that they have genuinely become the masters of the enterprises.

The fundamental condition for the economic responsibility system in industry is to rely on the vast number of workers and masses as masters to run the enterprise well. By implementing the economic responsibility system, besides participating in overall management, the workers also have to take part in making decisions and in distribution. The Shoudu Iron and Steel Company and some other enterprises organized all the workers to take part directly in making major decisions of the enterprise, such as long-term schemes, annual plans, operational decisions, distribution and use of their own funds (including production funds, welfare and bonuses), revision of the management system and so on. These are handed to all the workers beforehand for full deliberation and then submitted to the workers congress for further discussion; a formal decision is made and then introduced into the economic responsibility system of all departments and levels, its implementation being supervised by the permanent presidium of the workers' congress and its committee. The workers' congress has genuinely become an institution with real power. The workers' congress establishes under it working committees to manage housing and proposals, checks and examinations, inspection of rules, regulations and safety, welfare, techniques, economy and so on. These committees are composed of workers, management personnel and leading cadres. They widely represent the masses and have the right to discuss and decide problems by themselves. Various professional departments also establish advisory committees formed by workers, experts and professional personnel in certain fields to do professional management work well by pooling the wisdom of the masses. Of course, democratic management should also include supervision and the right of recall over leading cadres, the right to vote and so on. The Shoudu Iron and Steel Company and other enterprises will carry out further exploration in these fields.

Instituting democratic management is a process of practice and study. It is therefore necessary to strengthen party leadership and ideological and political work. We must eradicate the influence of "left" deviation, eliminate the interference of all forces of habit and constantly carry on education among workers on their sense of responsibility as workers and how to exercise their democratic rights correctly.

Second, the unswerving implementation of the Marxist principle of material benefit has destroyed the malpractice of "everybody eating from the same big pot" which existed for a long time, and the correct handling of the relationship between the state, the enterprise and the individual, closely linking the interests of the three, has brought about a new inherent economic momentum.

The purpose of the reform of private ownership of industry and commerce carried out in the 1950's was to prevent exploitation; that is, capitalists were not allowed to exploit the workers.

The purpose of the present reform of the economic system is to forbid "everybody eating from the same big pot." Reform in this field has far-reaching significance. It has eliminated the phenomenon of "everybody eating from the same big pot" in two aspects: First, in the relationship between the state and enterprises, the state provides enterprises with certain rights of self determination, including, to a certain degree, the rights to reserve funds, the right to sell a certain proportion of their products themselves and the corresponding right to distribute products, purchase materials and so on. In this way, we have changed the situation in which enterprises simply followed orders from the top and were bound hand and foot; we have opened up prospects for "enlivening" enterprises and brought into play the wide subjective initiative of enterprises and workers. The greater the contribution enterprises make to the state, the more profits enterprises can reserve, and the funds for production development, the collective welfare of enterprises and individual income increase to a great extent. On the contrary, if the state plan cannot be accomplished and less contribution is made, the enterprises and workers will gain even less. With certain degrees of rights in the use of finance, enterprises can plan their future and work out long-term plans for technical transformation and improvement. With the right to sell a certain proportion of their products themselves, enterprises can aim their products at the market, concern themselves with the needs of the whole of society, constantly produce new products and change the situation of past decades in which the same product was produced over and over again. Second, the economic responsibility of workers is linked with reward and punishment. The Shoudu Iron and Steel Company implemented the policy that "the total amount of bonuses should not exceed (the quota fixed by the state), the units should not all be treated as equal and the maximum reward for individuals should not be fixed" and broke through the phenomenon of "everybody eating from the same big pot" in getting rewards. Of course, we still need to reform the labor and wage system to completely eliminate "everybody eating from the same big pot." This is a very complicated problem needing overall consideration, and it is not a problem that one enterprise or one trade can solve.

At present there is widespread egalitarianism in the field of distribution in our country. This is due to historical and social reasons, and related to the improper rules and regulations formulated under the guiding principle of "left" deviation. Facts have proved that in the old society, egalitarianism was but an illusion of small farmers. In the new society, egalitarianism cannot free laborers from poverty, but attacks the advanced, encourages the backward, breeds inertia, and hinders the progress of science and technology and the development of productinve forces. In our thinking and policies, we must get rid of egalitarianism and genuinely practice the socialist principle of "from each according to his ability, to each according to his work."

The principle of democratic rights and material benefits embodies the superiority of the socialist system. Of responsibility, rights and benefits, responsibility is the prerequisite, rights are the condition and benefits are the motive force. The combination of responsibility, rights and benefits and the unity of pressure and motive force can greatly enhance the consciousness and creative spirit of the workers as masters of their own affairs. Without these two conditions, it would be empty to say that workers were masters of enterprises. We made revolution for the purpose of winning democratic rights and material benefits for the people. The purpose of building the four modernizations and constantly improving economic results is also to meet the daily increasing material and cultural needs of the people.

The practice of the economic responsibility system in industry, which combines responsibility, rights and benefits, can extend the democratic right of enterprise workers to the greatest degree and promote the reform of system and reorganization of enterprises. Following this direction, we can break new ground in running Chinese-style enterprises. This economic responsibility system has vitality and is profoundly supported by the workers. In the course of practice, it will inevitably open a way for advance. The pursuit of the agricultural responsibility system has brought about historical changes in the entire rural situation. Industry is somewhat more complicated than agriculture. We cannot rush headlong into the economic responsibility system in industry; still less can we arbitrarily apply one model in all enterprises. In the light of the characteristics of industry, it is imperative to make experiments in typical models, sum up experiences, promote work in all areas by drawing up experience gained in key areas and gradually popularize them. But we can predict that the pursuit of the economic responsibility system in industry is sure to kindle the workers' sense of responsibility as masters, fully arouse their socialist initiative and creativity and bring about far-reaching effects in the entire industrial situation. All localities and departments must strengthen leadership, cooperate closely, and coordinate their action, so that this new-born thing can be constantly perfected and developed through practice.

RENMIN RIBAO ON CONTRACT MANAGEMENT IN SHOPS

[Commentator's article: "The Contract Management System Adds Vigor to Shops and Stores"]

[Text] Due to the long-term influence of "leftist" ideology in economic work, the phenomenon of "eating from the same big pot and receiving equal benefits" was a serious problem in the commercial departments and led to poor economic results. In order to solve this problem, the commercial system in Changzhou City first tried out the method of "collective and individual contract management of business" in the catering trade on the basis of implementing business responsibility system. Recently, in some small-scale state-run retail stores, they put into practice the method of "the state owning shops, collectives running them, the state taxing them, and shops assuming sole responsibility for their losses and profits and being managed in a democratic way." This has added vigor to these shops in their business and has achieved satisfactory economic results.

The revival of retail commerce and the catering trade forms an important link in the chain of enlivening circulation and makes the market flourish. So long as we start with reforming the management system and closely combine responsibility, decisionmaking power and benefits so as to arouse fully the initiative of enterprises and workers, we are bound to make full use of the special qualities of business management, achieve better business returns and run enterprises better. The experience of Changzhou City has offered clear proof of this.

Contract systems are very effective in the rural areas, and also in small-scale urban retail commerce and catering service trades. The experience of Changzhou proves that whenever contract systems are practiced, people become more responsible toward their work. Whether contracts are made by collectives or individuals, people are stimulated to show more concern for the results of their business. As a result, the quality of service is improved, business hours are longer and life made easier for consumers. In short, people's subjective initiative can thus be brought into full play and enterprises can swiftly take on a new appearance.

Contract management is much better and more superior than "eating from the same big pot and receiving equal benefits." Contract management helps do away with the style of "official commerce" and benefits the state, enterprises and workers as well as consumers.

The reform of commercial institutions involves many problems and calls for many policies. In the course of trial implementation, there will certainly emerge a large number of problems which need to be tackled. However, commercial enterprises absolutely must get rid of the practice of "eating from the same pot." This general orientation is invariable. So long as we have the courage to blaze new trails, strengthen leadership and make serious experiments, the contract system in commercial departments will certainly be promoted step by step.

CHINA DAILY ON STATUS OF DALAI LAMA, TIBET

[By political editor An Zhiguo in BEIJING REVIEW: "Nine-Point Principle Not Applicable, Dalai Lama Told"]

[Text] The Dalai Lama is not simply a religious but a political figure who conducts political activities in exile.

The Chinese Government cannot agree with any official of any country receiving him on his recent trips. Through diplomatic channels we have already made our position clear to the governments involved.

In 1979 the Dalai Lama asked that he be allowed to send representatives to Beijing. In the last three years, the government agreed to receive four such groups. Some group members have paid long-term visit to Tibet.

Party and state leaders have told these groups China's views and policies towards the Dalai Lama; although China is still critical of the 1959 rebellion launched by some members of Tibet's upper strata, we should not get entangled in rehashing this historical issue today.

The Dalai Lama and his followers are welcome to return to China. It is hoped that they will contribute to the unity of the motherland and of all the nationalities, as well as to the nation's four modernizations. Upon their return, the government will make appropriate political and personal arrangements for them.

Differences

The three-member delegations sent to Beijing by the Dalai Lama this year requested that China accord Tibet the same treatment as is provided for Taiwan in the government's nine-point principle, and that all the areas inhabited by Tibetans in Sichuan, Qinghai, Gansu and Yunnan be incorporated with Tibet into a unified Tibetan autonomous region.

China's response to this question is: Both Tibet and Taiwan are integral parts of China, but there are big differences between the two. Tibet has been liberated for more than three decades. It has completed democratic reforms and socialist transformation, has abolished the feudal serfdom system characterized by a combination of political and religious rule, and has long been an autonomous region under the leadership of the central government. The nine-point principle, therefore, is not applicable to Tibet.

History

Neither is the request for merging all the areas inhabited by Tibetans realistic. For centuries, the Tibetan people have lived in separate communities within four other provinces in addition to Tibet itself. Just like other minority nationalities in China, they exercise national regional autonomy and are organized into an autonomous region, several autonomous prefectures and autonomous counties.

It is not reasonable to change the historically determined administrative divisions simply according to the distribution of nationalities.

China's critics abroad often raise the question of the so-called "independence of Tibet." The assertion that "Tibet had always been independent in the past" is groundless. People who have a little knowledge of Chinese history know that the Tibetan and Han peoples began friendly contacts centuries ago. By the seventh century, in addition to economic and cultural exchanges, the two nationalities had established close political relations. During the Yuan Dynasty in the 13th century, Tibet was included in the domain of China and became part of China's territory.

Today, some separatists and others with ulterior motives continue to flaunt the misleading banner of an "independent Tibet." In recent years, these forces have given enormous publicity to the "frenzied welcome" received by the visiting delegations from the Dalai Lama. But this is not at all surprising. Lamaism has deep influence among the Tibetan people. Tibetan Buddhists regard not only the Dalai Lama, but all the others they call "living buddhas" as gods, incarnate, and welcome them accordingly.

Some people who don't know this background have mistaken religious feelings towards the Dalai Lama as political trust in him. Others have exploited the Tibetan people's beliefs to arouse a religious fervour that would serve their own aim of splitting the motherland and undermining our national unity. These efforts will prove to be in vain.

RURAL SCHOOL ENROLLMENT DECLINE REPORTED

[From the "Peasants' Letterbox" program]

[Excerpts] Today, [announcer] would like to answer the question raised by a few listeners, the question about the decline in the enrollment of children in schools in rural areas.

In his letter to us, Comrade (Xie Yanfu) of the (Heqing) brigade of Qingfeng County, Henan Province, wrote: Since the establishment of the production responsibility system, the number of children engaged in labor in the rural areas has increased, whereas the number going to school has dropped. A production team in our brigade originally had 25 children in middle school but now only 5 remain. The other 20 were called back by their families to help in farming. Most of these children now engaged in labor did not go to junior middle school. In fact, some of them did not even graduate from primary school. If this situation is allowed to continue, more illiterates will come into being before the old ones are wiped out. How then can we advance the four modernizations in the future?

Comrade (Liu Chuanshou) wrote from the Weinan military subdistrict, Shaanxi Province: The question of the decrease in the enrollment of schoolchildren is also very serious in our place. In a recent investigation tour I made to Yunan Prefecture, I was shocked to find out the number of children of the (Sanshili Bao) brigade in Ziyang County enrolled in school has dropped from more than 200 in 1979 to only 60. Along the way I saw many 10-year old children working in the fields with grownups instead of going to school.

Both (Xie Yanfu) and (Liu Chuanshou) appealed to the parents to let their children go back to school and to think about the long-term interests of the country in bringing up the next generation and not about the immediate interests that would turn them into illiterates. They also hoped that departments concerned would work out measures quickly to solve this question.

With regard to the question of the declining enrollment of schoolchildren, we think that the situation in rural areas has been very good in recent years and there should be no problem for children to go to school. But why, in some places, has the number of children in school dropped? To find an answer to this question, we called on a comrade at the primary school education department of the Ministry of Education. He said there are four factors contributing to this situation: 1) Some commune-member households in need of a larger work force called their children back to help in farm work. 2) Some commune members do not realize the importance of education. They attach importance only to immediate economic interests and ignore long-term interests. To them, it does not matter whether or not children in rural areas receive an education. 3) The teaching quality in schools is poor and both the parents and their children felt that since they could not learn much in school it would be better for the children to return home and help. 4) Some places run schools with a one-track mind and the things they teach are of no value in agricultural production and the people's livelihood.

I think we should first of all arouse the attention of cadres and commune members to popularizing primary school education. We hope that cadres, teachers and parents in rural areas will realize the important role of education in socialist modernization. I do not know whether you have noticed the shocking figure revealed in the recent census: more than 230 million people out of a population of 1.03 billion are either illiterate or semi-illiterate. We must pause to think for a moment; how can a country become prosperous if it does not grasp education, has no culture and knows nothing about science?

We hope that all parents will let their children go back to school for the sake of long-term, not immediate interests, so that they will grow up to be men of culture, scientific knowledge and construction skills. We must also take steps to train teachers and improve their professional skills and teaching quality. We must improve their pay so that they can devote more of their time and energy to teaching.

RENMIN RIBAO CARRIES POPULATION ANALYSIS

[Text] Beijing, November 16 (XINHUA) -- An analysis of China's recently reported census figures was published in today's PEOPLE'S DAILY. It was done by the State Council's population census group and the population department of the State Statistical Bureau.

Briefly, the groups's conclusions on several points were:

1. The population on China's mainland increased 313,593,529 in the last 18 years. This is at an annual rate of 2.1 percent. The absolute figure as well as the rate is fairly high. If the population is not to exceed 1.2 billion at the year 2000, an annual growth rate of 0.95 percent must be maintained, or a natural population growth of 10,370,000 per year. This will be a most difficult task.

In the last 18 years grain output in China has increased by an annual average of 8,600,000 tons. Assuming that one person consumed 260 kilograms of grain a year, the population increase each year accounted for 52.7 percent of the grain increase. Should the annual population growth rate have been one percent, grain consumption would only have amounted to 25.1 percent of the increased grain production. China would thus have more grain and other raw materials to promote the modernization drive and improve the people's livelihood.

2. Average density of population is 107 persons per square kilometer in China. This is an increase of 33 persons over the 1964 figure. However, the density in the 18 provinces and autonomous regions in the interior increased 50.9 percent from 47.3 persons per square kilometer in 1964 to 71.4 persons in 1982. This rate of increase was slightly higher than the 37.8 percent in the coastal areas which now have a density of 320.6 persons per square kilometer.

3. Control of city and town population has had some effect. However, greater efforts will have to be made in the future. The proportion of the urban population in China increased from 18.4 in 1964 to 20.6 percent in 1982. This growth rate is much slower than in most of the world's urban areas.

4. The rate of increase of China's minority nationalities is higher than that of the Han nationality -- the biggest ethnic group, in the past 18 years. The population of the Hans has increased 43.8 percent while that of the minority nationalities has risen 68.4 percent. The proportion of minority nationalities in the national population has risen to 6.7 percent from 5.8 in 1964.

5. China's population is more educated than in 1964, but it still falls short of the demands made by the modernization drive.

In conclusion, the analysts said the current census shows that China's regular annual population announcements are fairly accurate. The current national population figure is only 1.14 million more than the figure estimated by the State Statistical Bureau on April 30 of this year.

LIU SHAOQI ARTICLE ON LITERATURE, ART POLICY

[Article by Liu Shaoqi [0491 1421 1142]: "Several Opinions on Literary and Art Work"-- a talk by Comrade Liu Shaoqi at a report meeting held by the leading party group of the Ministry of Culture in March, 1956, originally published in WENYI YANJIU No 5, 1982]

[Text] The problem of whether or not to change the folk opera troupes into state-owned troupes needs to be studied. For the time being, before a decision has been made, they must remain unchanged. However, "cooperative troupes," which bear the character of cooperatives, can be formed and led by party and league members and activities. Attention should be paid to the improvement of their internal relations so that they can be reformed by the internal forces. First, it is necessary to encourage the laborers with material benefits so that they care more about their labor through their concern for material life. It is not correct to think that when the troupes are run by the state, both the fruits of labor and the likes and dislikes of the audience can be neglected. Laborers are concerned about the fruits of labor; this is an objective law of socialism. The state-run troupes will also be concerned about the fruits of their labor. Second, it is necessary to adopt a correct attitude towards actors. Those who are good must receive higher wages, those who are not must get lower wages. The method of contracts can be adopted. The troupes have the right to sign or refuse to sign a contract. The form of "tanghui" [1016 2585] [troupes invited to households to give a performance on family occasions in old China] was a practice of opera troupes in the old days. If it were continued nowadays, it would be an insult to the artists.

Moreover, if thousands of troupes were to be run by the state, they would certainly lose initiative. This would mean regression rather than progress in artistic work. When a unit which should be run cooperatively by the collective is run by the state, it is a mistake of "leftism." This is the same in everything. Before we see the advantage in changing something, we must not change it, or at least change it slowly. It is necessary to let the folk opera troupes continue to exist for some time to come and let them compete with the state-run troupes to see which can attract bigger audiences and which is more popular.

It is necessary to organize individual labor appropriately. Individual labor will exist for a long time in some fields, such as repairing and other trades. With regard to manufacturing musical instruments and stationery, individual labor must be allowed if the cooperative form cannot be adopted. The problem lies in how we will organize their production to suit their characteristics. As to the wandering artists, they must be allowed to register and get a licence. The performance of dagu [versified instruments] -- is also a kind of individual labor. It is necessary to let the performers tour everywhere and organize them in a manner appropriate to their activities so that things can be made convenient for their spiritual labor. The organizational form must be decided by discussing the matter with them. These organizations must not hold too many meetings. They can hold one or two meetings in a year and at a fixed date. During the meeting, various national forms can be adopted. In order to cheer all participants, they can have one day or so for amusement. When the members of the organizations have difficulties, it is necessary to ask relevant departments to help them. It is also necessary to help them in their study and organize them to listen to reports -- no matter where they are, they must have a chance to listen to reports. We must do more political and ideological work among them. Literary and art organizations must also help them. It is not suitable for them to take part in collective activities, so they must not be forced to take part in these activities, but given a certain amount of freedom.

Attention must be paid to the development of commissioned sales and sales agencies. Small bookstalls can adopt this method. For commissioned sales, sales assistants can be appointed on a commission basis and commission given according to the goods sold. This is in reality a kind of extra pay. Sales agencies have their own capital. We must not swallow it. Instead, we must allow differences between wholesale and retail prices. These differences also correspond to wages. Peddlers may go to rural areas once a month to sell their goods. They can also have fixed customers and fixed circles.

Our policy is to let a hundred flowers blossom, and weed through the old to bring forth the new. However, "the new" cannot be brought forth by force. Great efforts are needed in the reform of literature and art. It is impossible to have a child before pregnancy. The policy of letting a hundred flowers blossom means various flowers can exist side by side. For example, both indigenous and foreign things can be developed.

It is not good to let performers dress in rags when performing the "Rebel Fisherman." ["Dayu Shajia" 2092 3342 3010 1367 -- a traditional Beijing Opera] for the people like beautiful figures and dresses. It is not necessary to be so true to life. In theatrical reform we must not make great changes. We must only change those things which are harmful and leave unchanged those which are not harmful. Some traditional plays are instructive. They must not be changed arbitrarily. New literary and art workers must avoid impetuosity in theatrical reform of the troupes. They must wait until conditions are ripe. The plays must not be impatiently or excessively changed and become entirely different from the original ones.

We must not underestimate the artistic attainments of Beijing Opera and make random changes in it. No damage to artistic attainments will be permitted. It is not correct to adopt the policy of looking down upon, neglecting and suppressing the development of Beijing Opera instead of supporting and helping its development. If it is difficult to understand, we can use slide show captions for help. Expressions used in the old days must not be changed, but must be written accordingly. When a melon is not yet ripe and you want to pluck it, you commit a mistake of subjectivism. At present, the expression of subjectivism, factionalism and stereotyped party writing exists everywhere. I suggest that we all again study carefully Chairman Mao's "Talks at the Yanan Forum on Literature and Art." It is necessary to carry out rectification in literary and art circles.

We must force ourselves to reflect modern life. Foreign operas also find it difficult to reflect modern life; only a very few of them can do so. It is necessary to give play to the strong points of local dramas. We must not think that since they cannot reflect modern life, they can be neglected. Different people have different tastes. Some like whole plays and some like the highlights only; but most people like those which have interesting plots. The peasants like operas performed in series. If we can relax and be happy, that is a success. Having fun and taking a good rest helps people give play to their socialist enthusiasm. Watching "Swan Lake" can cheer you up. The drama "Notre Dame de Paris" is of a very high artistic standard. It is also instructive. We must preserve and develop what is good in our traditional art and, at the same time, absorb good foreign things. Progressive and harmless movies from all countries, including the United States, can be imported. Harmless movies can help us understand the situation, so they can be imported. But we must not import those which are harmful.

New operas are very good. For example, we all like "The White-Haired Girl." Some foreigners were also moved after watching it. Do we have a history of opera? Yes. The "Grape Fairy" and "The Sparrow and the Children" are all good operas. In those days when we began to run modern schools after the Japanese pattern, some songs in the singing movement were very popular among the masses. It was Li Jinhui who began to compose opera based on these songs. We must not look down upon Li's creation. He went on to produce this form of performance on the stage and composed the "Melody of the Countryside." The creation of "The White-Haired Girl" was a development and a progress. It is liked by people in various countries. We must create more operas like "The White-Haired Girl." Western opera must also be performed.

The problem of literary and art criticism merits our attention. First, we must encourage and develop criticism. Second, we must strive to make correct and appropriate criticism. Third, criticism must be pertinent and helpful. We cannot stop responsible comrades from discussing an opera they have seen. But their opinions may become a pressure on performers. What shall we do then? If remarks are made casually, they are not criticisms and must not necessarily be followed. If opinions are given formally, they must be given clearly and unequivocally. Of course, organizational resolutions must be followed. Since they are resolutions, they must be obeyed. Otherwise, people will not know what course to take. Our opinions may be right or wrong, so when nonprofessional people give their opinions, they must take the attitude of discussing problems and not stand above the composers. Composers and artists must respect the opinions of the masses. This does not mean that they should follow all mass opinion; otherwise, things will be changed to an entirely different shape according to the opinions of various people, and there will be no individuality.

It is a good thing that large numbers of works by amateur writers have emerged. There will certainly be more such works in the future. The amateur writers have created quite a few good works reflecting realities, because they are familiar with life.

They are full of promise. The writers association must respect them, train them and have the attitude of welcoming, helping and supporting them. A policy must be adopted of letting them work, giving them time, and sometimes allowing them to leave their posts to create works. This refers to amateur writers who have already made some achievements. As to professional writers, they must also take proper jobs in the light of their specific conditions. A provincial CPC committee secretary cannot necessarily write anything full of vitality. Professional writers must know how the provincial CPC committees do their leadership work. If conditions allow, the must systematically take part in party meetings at various levels. They must go deep into the realities of life. Some people who have taken up writing as a profession were originally secretaries in the provincial or prefectural CPC committees, or PLA cadres. We must help them write more and honor them. If it is more suitable for some people to be writers, we must let them do so. But they must also be engaged in some side occupations and take proper jobs. They must never be divorced from life. Leading departments must attach importance to ideological work and, at the same time, pay attention to developing the specific character and style of the writers.

MILITARY ENCYCLOPEDIA TO BE COMPILED BY PLA

[Text] Beijing, November 16 (XINHUA) -- The Military Commission of the C.P.C. Central Committee has authorized the Chinese People's Liberation Army to compile Chinese military encyclopedia.

Since 1981, the People's Liberation Army has been working on the China Greater Encyclopedia -- Military. Its editorial board held a meeting recently to study the possibility of compiling the Chinese military encyclopedia, which would be a more professional reference book.

The China Greater Encyclopedia -- Military will give a limited presentation of the military instances and theories from thousands years of China's history, especially in the last 55 years since the founding of the Chinese People's Army. Therefore, the board said, the compilation of the Chinese military encyclopedia "is of great importance for modernization of China's defense, the preparation against aggressive wars and the education of future generations."

The Chinese military encyclopedia should be compiled in light of the specific conditions of China and the Chinese People's Army and with foreign experiences as reference, the board said.

WANG ZHEN, FANG YI AT CEREMONY HONORING GUO MORUO

OW161944 Beijing XINHUA in English 1656 GMT 16 Nov 82

[Text] Beijing, November 16 (XINHUA) -- The 90th anniversary of the birth of Guo Moruo, prominent Chinese writer, poet, dramatist, historian, archaeologist and social activist, was marked here today at a commemorative meeting attended by party and state leaders.

Guo Moruo was born November 16, 1892 and died of illness June 12, 1978.

The meeting was sponsored by the China Federation of Literary and Art Circles, the Chinese Academy of Social Sciences, the Chinese Academy of Sciences and the Chinese Writers' Association and attended by 300 people from various circles.

Wang Zhen and Fang Yi, members of the Political Bureau of the Communist Party Central Committee, were present.

Deng Liqun, member of the Secretariat and head of the Propaganda Department of the Communist Party Central Committee, presided.

Addressing the meeting, Zhou Yang, chairman of the China Federation of Lierary and Art Circles, said that Guo Moruo and Lu Xun were "two cultural giants in modern Chinese history," whose works do not only belong to the past, but also to the present and the future.

He quoted the remarks by the late Premier Zhou Enlai 40 years ago that Guo Moruo was "both a scholar and a revolutionary."

"As a scholar, Guo Moruo had done creative work in a wide range of fields. As a revolutionary, he had kept in step with the Communist Party and shared weal and woe of the country and the people," Zhou said.

Zhou urged further study of the history the new cultural movement since the 1919 May 4th movement and the cultural inheritance of Lu Xun, Guo Moruo and other revolutionary writers. He said: "It is important to study and analyze their experiences with Marxist views for the development of socialist culture."

Guo Moruo's Beijing residence since 1963 was opened to the public. At about 10 a.m., Fang Yi unveiled the sign bearing an inscription by Deng Yingchao, vice-chairman of the Standing Committee of the National People's Congress. About 200 people including party and state leaders Deng Liqun and Zhu Xuefan attended the ceremony.

Situated on the bank of a lake in the western district of the capital, Guo Moruo's former residence contains his more than 10,000 books, 1,000 manuscripts, diaries, letters and his collections of rubbings and other valuable relics. There are 20 photos of Guo Moruo in different periods since his youth,

The residence has been listed by the State Council as a cultural site under special protection.

SCIENTIFIC BODY FORMULATES DEVELOPMENT PLAN

[Text] Beijing, 15 Nov (XINHUA) -- The party group of the State Scientific and Technological Commission recently held an enlarged meeting to study Premier Zhao Ziyang's speech at the national science and technology award conference and developed measures to implement the guidelines of his speech.

The participants in the meeting pointed out: Premier Zhao's report has systematically and incisively expounded the dialectical relationship between economic construction and science and technology, that is, economic construction must rely on progress in science and technology and scientific and technological work must be geared to the needs of economic construction. The report also pointed out those longstanding shortcomings in our country's economic and scientific and technological structure which obstruct technical progress. The report grasped the key links by effectively solving the issue that economic work must rely on science and technology. In China a new situation is expected to emerge in which science and technology and the economy will develop in a coordinated manner.

The participants in the meeting contended: In view of the fact that the state has set technological progress and raising the economic results as the main goal in its economic construction, its various departments and localities will request help from the scientific and technological front in terms of energy, resources, materials and efficiency. Thus the scientific and technological front, from the upper to the lower levels, is facing the problem of how to adapt itself to this new situation ideologically as well as professionally. It also has to prepare itself well enough to usher in a new upsurge in economic construction and in scientific and technological development.

After discussion, the party group of the State Scientific and Technological Commission decided to take immediate actions to do the following tasks well:

1. Formulate a long-term development plan for science and technology. Regarding the question of formulating the long-term development plan for the period 1986-2000 for the state's science and technology, the State Scientific and Technological Commission is planning, along with the State Planning Commission, to complete its preparatory work in the latter part of this year and should be ready to work on the plan next year. The guiding principle is to make necessary contributions by closely sticking to the strategic target of raising economic results and quadrupling the annual industrial and agricultural output value by the end of this century. After preliminary consideration, it was decided that attention should be paid to solving the following five problems in formulating this plan: 1) clearly set the basic level to be reached by our country's science and technology within 15 years. We should be able to transfer those advanced technologies that were already widely adopted by developed countries during the early 70's and 80's into our various key industries and to popularize their application by the year 2000. 2) Based on the needs of our country's economic and social development, we should identify the disciplines and industries that need to be developed within 15 years.

3) Work out a concrete long-term plan for effecting the "four transfers." 4) Incorporate the following into the plan: the scientific research work during the early period of the state's key construction items; important scientific research topics during construction; and scientific research topics in the key technical innovation items. 5) Draw up a list of fundamental and long-term scientific and technological items and solve related problems so that the necessary preparatory work can be done for our country's scientific and technological and economic development on a longer term basis. In the meantime, the commission plans to organize scientific and technological workers to participate in drawing up plans for industrial development, zoning and technical innovations in key enterprises. And these plans should be closely interrelated to the long-term development plan for science and technology so that they can reinforce one another.

2. Organize scientists and technicians to tackle key technical problems. The commission will be responsible for organizing and tackling key problems in a coordinated way. It has to grasp the key links in discussing and analyzing issues according to their categories. It also must make sure that work is being carried out according to planned schedule so that the research results can be quickly applied and popularized in production.

3. Reorganize new contingents of scientific and technical personnel and restructure the scientific and technological system on the basis of not disrupting the established orders in major scientific research work. The commission plans to establish several technical development centers on a trial basis.

4. Further improve the policy of technological transfer and technological administrative work. At present, the work of transferring the nation's scientific and technological achievements is being carried out extensively and in various practical forms. Moreover, it has produced positive economic results. Nevertheless, some problems still exist due to the lact of concerted administrative policies. The commission plans to submit its opinions regarding the measures and policies to promote technological transfer.

5. Further improve the evaluation and reward system for workers in the scientific and technological field. We must develop a system by which we can appraise and evaluate the scientific and technological workers' ability to solve practical problems and their contributions in the course of the nation's economic construction. We must also formulate well defined reward regulations so that proper rewards can be given to those scientific and technological workers who have made great contributions to technological advancement and to creating major economic results.

6. Strengthen guidance for scientific and technological work in various localities. The commission will cooperate with the scientific and technologcial commission in different localities to work out ways to improve the scientific and technological work in small- and medium-sized cities and in rural villages. Based on this experience, the commission will convene a national conference on science and technology sometime next year in order to review the nation's overall scientific and technological work.

FORMER KMT GENERAL CALLS FOR CPC-KMT PEACE TALKS

[Text] Hong Kong, 7 Nov (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- Liu Yaohuan, a former KMT general, recently published an article in the United States calling for overseas Chinese to act as a bridge in the CPC-KMT peace talks.

The article, entitled "Speak One More Word for the Peaceful Reunification of the Motherland," was published on 30 October in the first issue of VOICE OF PEACEFUL REUNIFICATION OF CHINA, the journal of "The Association for the Promotion of the Peaceful Reunification of China" in San Francisco.

The article says: "The time has come for the overseas Chinese to act as a bridge in the peace talks. How shall we strive for this in the future? We must strive for this by acting as a bridge. On the one hand, compatriots in both Taiwan and the Chinese mainland must unite with the overseas Chinese and act as the main force for the promotion of peace talks. On the other hand, we must sincerely advise both the Beijing and Taibei authorities to face reality squarely, weigh the pros and cons of the separation and reunification, follow the trends of the time and the will of the people, come to the conference table for negotiations, adopt the principle of seeking common ground while reserving differences, and find a reasonable proposal, thus burying the hatchet and banishing enmity in a cup of wine."

"The Association for the Promotion of the Peaceful Reunification of China" in San Francisco was officially established on 31 October this year. Jiang Yuntian, leader of the Chinese Democratic and Social Party; Dong Shijing, responsible person of the Chinese Peasant Party; Liu Yaohuan, former KMT gemeral; and Tong Xizhang, an incumbent professor at California University (a Taiwanese compatriot) successively delivered speeches at the establishment meeting. They stressed the need for mutual contacts and exchanges between the CPC and the KMT to realize the peaceful reunification of China. Dong Shijing also proposed in his speech that Taiwan and mainland China respectively dispatch personnel to the opposite sides of the Taiwan Strait in order to make practical inspections and give introductions.

OVERSEAS NEWSPAPER URGES CHIANG TO HOLD TALKS

[Text] Beijing, 3 Nov (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- From 11 to 13 October, the America-based PEIMEI JIHPAO published in installments an article entitled "Imploring Mr Chiang Ching-kuo Not To Reject Peace Talks." The article was signed by individuals who called themselves a group of Taiwan Chinese nationals residing in Canada. These people hold that by adhering to the argument that "peace talks are equivalent to destroying Taiwan," Chiang Ching-kuo is proceeding solely from his only selfish interests as well as those of his party. They expressed the hope that Chiang Ching-kuo and those under him would immediately examine themselves, realize the trend of the times and decide to open the door for peace talks as soon as possible.

The article directly addresses the Taiwan authorities -- Mr Chiang Ching-kuo and those under him -- and tells them that their repeated rejection of proposals for peace talks and reunification have not only roused indignation and criticism both at home and abroad but also the anger of the overseas Chinese. This is because their rejection is motivated by selfish interests, by the animosity of their party and their desire to retain the power they have now acquired.

This is shown by the fact that the difficulties which they have cited as grounds for rejecting proposals for talks are nothing but excuses, and in rejecting peace talks they have disregarded the existence and prosperity of the state and nation and have arbitrarily and stubbornly ignored the desire of the people. They should understand that the peaceful reunification of the country is the trend of the times and the desire of the people throughout the country, and therefore it is clearly a reasonable and natural demand.

But, they have been shouting empty slogans in order to hinder the realization of this demand. Furthermore, they have stepped up their collusion with foreign forces and tried to impose the so-called "Taiwan Relations Act" formulated by the United States with regard to China's territory, Taiwan. By these tricks they have attempted to maintain their separatist rule and seek a momentary ease, while trying in secret to divide our country and silently turn Taiwan into an independent state, thus stealthily creating two Chinas. In doing all this, they proceed from the reputation, interests, power and position of their own clique and have never given the least consideration to the cardinal principle of the interests of the state and nation.

The article says that these people have raised a hue and cry about using the three principles of the people to reunify China. But how are the three principles of the people being carried out in Taiwan now? What about nationalism? There is no national self-respect nor national unity. In everything they do they obey the will of foreigners and are at the beck and call of the United States.

Is there democracy? The people have no power and the government has no ability. Political power is placed in the hands of those who are incapable of running the government. Furthermore, all the power of governing the state, commanding the army and controlling secret agents is placed in the hands of a single individual. There are a large number of other malpractices, such as bribery during elections, serious corruption and bribes among officials, the wanton development of a personality cult, and abuse of official privileges. Officials have the right to propagate their arguments and issue orders at will, but the common people have no right to criticize the government, let alone the right to demonstrate or protest.

The people's livelihood? Since there is inequality in the right to possess land or control capital, it is impossible to solve the problems related to the people's livelihood in a rational and effective manner. True, the urban areas and industry in Taiwan are prosperous, but this is only a surface prosperity and there are countless instances of poverty and misery behind it. Many ordinary people have to work hard all day long for their subsistence. The economic prosperity of Taiwan can be said to be only enjoyed by a few people and most of the people are still struggling for subsistence amid poverty and hardship!

This situation of great disparity between the rich and the poor has resulted from the lopsided development of the economy, which will finally bring about a situation in which the rich will become even richer and the poor will become even poorer. Since this has never formed part of the three principles of the people, what version of the three principles of the people is being carried out in Taiwan? Since you have failed to implement the three principles of the people, how can you use these principles to reunify China!

The article says that, in its opinion, Mr Chiang Ching-kuo's recently expressed view that peace talks are equivalent to destroying Taiwan and that peace talks will shake the morale of the army is completely wrong. It is entirely due to the fact that he is proceeding from his own selfish interests and those of his party that Mr Chiang neglected the prerequisite of the national interests of our state and gave utterance to such a view.

The article says that if the Taiwan authorities can frankly state their conditions for holding talks under the prerequisite of giving priority to the interests of the state and nation and to freedom and democracy, we believe that they will certainly win the support of both the people at home and the overseas Chinese abroad. As a result, not only will the talks not destroy Taiwan or shake the morale of the army, but, on the contrary, they will increase Taiwan's prestige and heighten the morale of the army.

The article says that if the Taiwan authorities think only of the interests of the 18 million people on Taiwan, they will still realize that they should not reject the peace talks. For, if their rejection gives rise to a civil war, it will bring about miserable and cruel disasters, which would entirely be the result of their selfishness. They must know that the reunification of China must surely be realized and that this is the desire of all the people in the country and all overseas Chinese. This being the case, how can they be so stubborn as to insist on rejecting the talks? The writers of the articles are extremely unwilling to see such a purposeless civil war break out with our compatriots killing one another. They hope the Taiwan authorities will think things over.

The article concludes that its writers earnestly hope Mr Chiang Ching-kuo and those under him will immediately examine themselves, clarify the trend of the times and decide to open the door for peace talks as soon as possible. The writers wish that our country will be reunified so that the desire of the people throughout China and of all overseas Chinese will be satisfied. This will also conform to the last words of Dr Sun Yat-sen, the founder of our nation — "We should strive to save China through peaceful struggle."

PRC DIPLOMAT GRANTED POLITICAL ASYLUM IN FRANCE

[Text] Paris, Nov. 16 (CNA) -- Mr. Chang Yi, a Chinese economic counsellor of the Communist Chinese Embassy in Kinshasa, has been granted political asylum in France as a political refugee, an informed source here in Paris said Tuesday.

A French tourist guide of Chinese origin who declined to be identified told the CNA correspondent that he has met with Mr. Chang Yi in Lyon, south of Paris, in early November when he led a group of tourists for a sightseeing trip.

Mr. Chang told him that he defected in France on May 7 and was granted political asylum as a political refugee in Lyon on Oct. 18, five months after his defection, the French tourist guide said. Mr. Chang is in good shape and learning French in Lyon. He wishes to visit Taipei in February, the French tourist guide added.

However, it is difficult to identify Mr. Chang's real first name in Chinese, which could be spelled as Yi or Yee or other style. Only Mr. Chang knows it, other sources said. He served as an interpreter in the Communist Chinese Embassy in Togo before he was assigned to the Communist Chinese Embassy in Zaire as a commercial counsellor.

Mr. Chang is now under the protection of French policemen in Lyon. He refused to meet any journalist including those from French newspapers in the past six months.

Mr. Chang was the third Communist Chinese defector who has been granted political asylum by the French Government.

PAPER REPORTS DEFECTION OF MAINLAND PHYSICIST

OW170401 Taipei CNA in English 0232 GMT 17 Nov 82

[Text] Taipei, Nov. 16 (CNA) -- Another Chinese physicist from the mainland has defected to the Republic of China and is currently working at an undisclosed university in northern Taiwan as a visiting professor, the CENTRAL DAILY NEWS reported Tuesday.

The paper said the scientist, identified only as a "Mr. Lu," has been in Taiwan for three months. He decided to stay in Taiwan while making a stopover at the Chiang Kai-shek International Airport, the paper added.

A native of Chenkiang, Kiangsu, the 43-year-old physicist is the second mainland scientist to defect to Taiwan this year. Prof. Hsu Chia-luan, also a physicist, defected to Taiwan in the same manner last May.

"Mr. Lu" was graduated from the Futan University in Shanghai and worked at a research institute in the city before he left for the United States three years ago as an exchange scholar. He worked at an optical laboratory in Arizona.

In an interview with the CENTRAL DAILY NEWS, "Mr. Lu" said while in the U.S. he started reading press reports about Taiwan and learned of its progress, which prompted him to reach the decision to defect. The paper said "Mr. Lu," an expert in infrared rays, has proposed to initiate a research project on the subject.

PRESIDENT CHIANG RECEIVES U.S. CONGRESSMEN

OW170411 Taipei CNA in English 0236 GMT 17 Nov 82

[Text] Taipei, Nov. 16 (CNA) -- President Chiang Ching-kuo Tuesday received a delegation of U.S. congressmen at the presidential office, composed of Rep. George C. Wortley R-N.Y., Rep. David O'B. Martin R-N.Y. and Rep. Don Ritter R-PA. and their wives.

President Chiang expressed his warm welcome to them for their current visit to this country. He exchanged views with them on the international situation and matters of mutual concern.

Ma Chi-chuang, presidential secretary-general, and Vice Foreign Minister Fredrick F. Chien were also present at the meeting.

PAPER VIEWS DEVELOPMENT OF MEDIUM-RANGE MISSILES

OW160527 Taipei LIEN HO PAO in Chinese 11 Nov 82 p 3

[Text] According to disclosed information, the Chungshan scientific research institute is actively engaged in developing a medium-range surface-to-surface missile, which greatly surpasses the "Chingfeng" type surface-to-surface guided missiles in both size and range.

The name of this guided missile has not been announced by the department concerned. But according to reliable information, its range is 960 kilometers, which makes it capable of reaching Canton, Fuchou, Shanghai and Nanking on the Chinese mainland. It is reported that the plan for developing such missiles was started long before the cessation of Sino-U.S. relations.

A Chinese military expert holds that since we have decided not to develop nuclear weapons it is particularly important for the defense of our country that we develop medium-range and long-range missiles, or even cruise missiles.

He also states that if nuclear warheads are not to be attached to long-range surface-to-surface guided missiles, then positive efforts must be made to develop conventional warheads which have great destructive power in order to attain the expected military results.

The expert also points out concerning the missiles guidance system that it is also necessary actively to develop a more sophisticated guidance system, in addition to the conventional inertial system [kuan hsing fang shih 1977 1840 2455 1709] in order to increase the percentage of hits for long-range missiles carrying conventional warheads.

Furthermore, in the draft national defense budget submitted by the Ministry of National Defense to the Legislative Yuan, it was mentioned that our country is actively engaged in developing new weapons systems, including new types of air-to-air and air-to-surface guided missiles. By conjecture, the functions of these missiles surpass the "Sidewinder" air-to-air guided missiles currently used by our air force and the "Bullpup" air-to-surface guided missiles which the United States is permitted to sell us. Among other weapons systems and technology still under development are the guidance system for medium- and long-range guided missiles and also shell cases made of compound materials [fu ho tsai liao 5958 0678 2624 2436].

TA KUNG PAO VIEWS RELATIONS IN POST-BREZHNEV ERA

HK161010 Hong Kong TA KUNG PAO in Chinese 16 Nov 82 p 2

["Political Talk" column by Shih Chun-yu: "Outside Brezhnev's Funeral"]

[Text] New System of Soviet Leadership

Soviet leader Leonid Brezhnev was buried yesterday, thus becoming the 10th person buried in the Red Square mausoleum. The burial ceremony was presided over by Andropov, the new general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee. It is predicted that the Soviet Union will likely resume the triumvirate leadership system. Nikolay Tikhonov, in addition to his post as the present chairman of the Council of Ministers, will, along with Konstantin Chernenko, become chairman of the Presidium of the USSR Supreme Soviet.

When speaking of Yuriy Andropov, foreign observers liked to stress that he was head of the KGB. As a matter of fact, before this, he had been a diplomatic official. But what he did during World War II was never revealed.

Huang Hua's Meeting with Andropov

The picture showing Chinese representative Huang Hua at Brezhnev's funeral was shown on television in Moscow. It is said that it has been years since Soviet television stations released film of the activities of Chinese leaders.

In a statement issued before his departure for the Soviet Union, Huang Hua called Brezhnev "chairman," not "comrade." This is because the relationship between the two parties has long been severed and has not yet been restored. In spite of this, sensitive Western correspondents, judging from some sidelights in the funeral (for instance, the timing of the meeting between Huang Hua and Andropov), said that the Soviet Union wanted to push Sino-Soviet relations ahead.

The person who greeted Huang Hua at the airport and accompanied him during his activities, Leonid Ilichev, is a Soviet deputy foreign minister who was also the Soviet representative in the consultations with China held recently. Some people anticipate that Huang Hua and Andrey Gromyko will meet.

The news of Huang Hua's departure for Moscow was given in the most prominent places of the front page of yesterday's RENMIN RIBAO, with a special headline: "Peace and Friendship Between China and the Soviet Union Conforms to the Interests of the Two Peoples and of World Peace." This is also a new approach.

How Soviet-U.S. Relations Will Develop

The United States despatched Vice President George Bush and Secretary of State George Shultz to attend the funeral. Some people in Congress commented that it was an unwise move for Reagan himself not to go to the Soviet Union.

According to a news report in the NEW YORK TIMES, Bush and Shultz will state two dimensions of their position to the Soviet leaders. One is to express the hope for improved relations; the other is that should the other party persist in confrontation, the United States will be ready to strengthen its military power.

Before Brezhnev's death, U.S.-Soviet relations were at a low ebb. "Detente" had run into snags, the tension between the two countries had intensified, no progress had been made in nuclear talks and the summit meeting was not realizable within the foreseeable future.

Yesterday Andropov talked with Bush for half an hour outside the reception held after the burial ceremony. In handling U.S.-Soviet relations, whether Andropov will follow established rules or hoe another row will probably be disclosed very soon. Foreign correspondents held that Andropov had made known his position when he used the word "imperialism" in his speech at the reception.

Failure of the U.S. Pipeline Ban

In U.S.-Soviet relations, there is the problem of the U.S. ban on selling pipeline equipment to the Soviet Union by West European countries. The ban was lifted the day before yesterday after Reagan expressed condolences on the death of Brezhnev at the Soviet Embassy in the United States.

The lifting of the ban symbolizes two failures on the part of the United States. The first is that the United States has failed to apply sanctions against the Soviet Union by economic means. The second is that it has failed to curb the West European countries.

In order to extricate itself from an awkward position, the United States alleged that it had reached an agreement with the European countries to apply sanctions by other means. Britain, Italy, West Germany and Japan have expressed some willingness to coordinate their actions with the United States, but France totally ignored the matter and has refused to make any compromise.

The Funeral Diplomacy Is Just a Start

The Brezhnev era has formally ended and a new period has begun for the Soviet Union. The funeral diplomacy is just a start. We should see further developments in how things will be.

WEN WEI PO ON HU YAOBANG'S VISIT TO LIANGSHAN

HK170421 Hong Kong WEN WEI PO in Chinese 17 Nov 82 p 3

[Report: "Hu Yaobang Visits Liangshan, Stresses Development of Animal Husbandry"]

[Text] Chengdu -- Not long after the convening of the 12th CPC Congress, Hu Yaobang inspected Dukou Municipality and the Liangshan Autonomous Prefecture in Sichuan Province. During his investigation of the cadres and masses in Liangshan, Hu Yaobang said that to change the state of affairs in Liangshan they should exert their superiority and stress the development of animal husbandry. To enliven their thinking and broaden their field of vision, Hu Yaobang listed a large number of facts, calculated many itemized accounts and repeatedly explained from north to south and from internal to foreign the great significance of conspicuously developing animal husbandry.

Hu Yaobang said: I made some investigations in the north recently. The income from four dairy goats is equal to the salary of a new university graduate; 6 jin of milk is equal to 1 jin of grain. If Liangshan Prefecture can breed 6 million dairy goats, this would be equal to 1 million dairy cows. They can then produce 2 million tons of milk a year, equal to 6 million jin of grain. This is a considerable figure. Milk and meat are staple foods in many countries. The Menggu (Monggol), Weiwuer (Uygur) and other minority nationalities of our country also use milk and meat as their staple food, so they are sturdy and strong. Our Yi and Han nationalities should imitate them in this respect and gradually change the composition of our diet.

There are more than 6 million mu of cultivated land in Liangshan Yi Autonomous Prefecture. The area of wooded and hilly lands, grassland and water is ten times more than the area of cultivated land. Therefore, it is quite obvious that we must proceed from this practice, carry out a combination of agriculture, forestry and animal husbandry, and raise the development of animal husbandry to a more important position.

We must also realize that this is a revolution in the agricultural sphere. Only by carrying on this revolution step by step for a decade or two can we effect a radical change. However, if we insist on adhering to a single product economy, seeking only to develop grain while ignoring the development of a diversified economy and are keen on reclaiming wasteland on hillsides at 50 to 60 degree angles and trying to plant buckwheat and corn, it will be impossible to change the present situation and we will become poorer and poorer.

GUANGDONG PROPOSES COMMITTEE ON TRADE PROBLEMS

HK150158 Hong Kong SOUTH CHINA MORNING POST BUSINESS NEWS in English 15 Nov 82 p 1

[By Julie Auyeung]

[Excerpts] The Guangdong Foreign Trade Bureau chief, Mr Feng Xueyan, has proposed the establishment of a special committee, one of whose tasks would be to solve trading problems raising from the growing economic ties between Hong Kong and Guangdong Province. Mr Feng's initiative came after a meeting with a group of local business leaders organised by the Hong Kong Trade Development Council (TDC).

Such a move is taken by some observers as an earnest indication of Chinese intentions to promote trade, and Hong Kong business leaders back the idea because, they say, there are a number of difficulties to be resolved.

One of these, according to Mr Feng, is the question of country of origin for products partially manufactured in Guangdong.

A Hong Kong lawyer who specialises in China trade says many Hong Kong investors can find no channel through which to bring problems. Settling trade disputes is now an urgent need lest some traders become so "fed up" that they wind up their operation.

With a proposed working committee to smooth out trade between Hong Kong and Guangdong, some businessmen are hopeful that problem areas could be identified and new areas for investment be explored.

"Despite China's wooing of Hong Kong investments in many different industries, it would be better if they could tell us what opportunities are available and when various industries reach saturation point.

Some China analysts, however, questioned the need for -- and potential effectiveness of -- such a committee.

"It is better to have one fewer committee than to create one more unless it can prove itself able to do actual work," one said.

One China watcher observed that many local businessmen have already established close links with China and that many trade organisations have been building up a dialogue with their Chinese counterparts over recent years.

Instead of a committee, one suggested, why not expand the connection network outside Guangdong and begin to explore new areas? China is a vast country and has potential in many places and in many different activities, he said.

The Hong Kong General Chamber of Commerce is also working towards this objective. Twenty members are going to Xian in Shaanxi Province and Chengdu of Kunming in March.

The chamber's director, Miss Cecilia Fung, will be going to Beijing at the end of the month to arrange the group's visit with the China Council for the Promotion of Trade.

GLOBAL RECESSION AFFECTS PRC SPECIAL DEVELOPMENT

HK170129 Hong Kong SOUTH CHINA MORNING POST BUSINESS NEWS in English 17 Nov 82 p 1

[By Julia Auyeung: "Global Recession Slows Shumchun Projects"]

[Text] Global economic sluggishness has apparently caused a slowdown on "ambitious" projects in the Shumchun Special Economic Zone, BUSINESS NEWS learnt last night.

At least two Hong Kong investors -- Hopewell Holdings Ltd and Millies group of companies -- are now being cautious in determining the next steps of some enterprises.

Projects for a highway and a small town by Hopewell, though not yet scrapped, are to be slowed, while Millies' Buji industrial project is described as being "stagnant" until industrial activities revive.

The problem -- far from being faced by these two companies alone -- is a universal one, scholars at a seminar on Asian modernisation said yesterday.

A Hong Kong scholar said it was risky for any developing country to rely too much on foreign investment, especially in the present recessionary conditions, which had substantially tightened the purse strings of investors.

The senior lecturer of Hong Kong Polytechnic's Department of Business and Management Studies, Miss Priscilla Lau, noted that over 90 per cent of Shumchun's capital is from foreign investors. The flow of such funds was subject to many factors completely out of the control of the Shumchun authorities. To achieve success, the economic policy planner should consider external forces, such as general market conditions, background and prospects for investors.

"These factors weigh heavily for the success of Shumchun in future. Planners should realise the constraints of relying on external factors and should take various measures to cushion the shocks," Miss Lau cautioned. China could also make use of its "internal force" -- the rising salaries of the people -- which should be channelled back for such purposes.

"The Shumchun government has totally ignored the circular flow of income and the investment loop in the economy. With the increased income, the people will maintain a very high propensity to consume.

"One of the measures that can be considered is to issue stocks or bonds with higher interest rates," she suggested, but noted that the Chinese Government is very cautious in using such financial instruments. The most effective way to channel income back into the economic flow is "to allow private enterprises to operate in certain sectors."

Miss Lau also recommended the Chinese Government to open up its domestic market. Foreign industrialists invest in any country in the expectation of "serving the host market."

"China has imported a very large volume of commodities from other countries. If Shumchun would consider allowing investors to sell part of the output in China, it would create more attractive conditions for foreign investment."

The dean of the College of Arts and Sciences at the University of the Philippines, Dr Ofelia Angangco, suggested that in such a difficult period, developing countries should work out joint solutions rather than vie for limited funds and thus create strong competition. This could also help to avoid duplicating development projects.

Backing up Dr Angangco was a South Korean law professor who called on Asian countries to form a united front for mutual economic development.

An organisation with functions similar to the Association of Southeast Asian Nations would be beneficial, said a professor of law at Yonsei University, Prof Yang Seung-doo. Countries such as South Korea, China and Hong Kong could join together.

GUANGZHOU 1982 AUTUMN TRADE FAIR JUDGED SUCCESS

[Consolidated report by XINHUA reporter on the 1982 Guangzhou autumn export commodity trade fair]

[Text] Guangzhou, 11 Nov (XINHUA) -- "During the present world recession, China's economy has great appeal." That remark was made by a Japanese businessman at the 1982 autumn export commodity trade fair in Guangzhou. Indeed, the Guangzhou trade fair is doing brisk business. The volume of business concluded here has greatly surpassed our expectations, and the demand for some commodities has even exceeded supply.

After an assessment of the situation at this year's Guangzhou export fair, parties concerned pointed out that, since China's total exports account for only a little over 1 percent of the world total, it still has great export potentialities, and that because the bulk of China's exports is made up of foodstuffs, clothing and other daily needs, they have a good market even in a worldwide recession. Another important factor contributing to China's flourishing export trade is the continuous efforts made by China to improve its foreign trade work.

At this year's Guangzhou autumn export fair, this reporter saw great potential for China to expand its exports to Third World countries and increase commodity supplies to Hong Kong and Macao. Compared with the same period last year, Western countries' imports and exports both dropped during the first half of this year, yet the volume of imports of Third World countries showed no sign of decline during the same period. Some Western and central African countries have even lowered taxes or exempted all import taxes for semifinished products. Trade officials and private businessmen of Third World countries maintained that they love to do business with China because, whether one's business deal is big or small and whether one's country is rich or poor, China treats everyone with friendliness and without discrimination, and they feel safe and not at a disadvantage when doing business with China. At this year's Guangzhou autumn export trade fair, the Jordanian trade delegation signed over 50 contracts with several Chinese trade delegations, and a vast majority of these contracts were signed as soon as a price was quoted by the Chinese side, thus showing their complete trust in the Chinese delegations. The head of the Jordanian delegation said: "At this export fair, we also bought commodities we originally wanted to buy in other countries." On its departure, the delegation presented the Chinese side with a Jordanian national flag to show their respect for the Chinese.

Businessmen from 17 countries and regions which did not attend last year's autumn export trade fair showed up this year at the opening of the fair. Another 13 Third World countries sent 17 trade delegations or delegations of state trading companies to do business at the 1982 Guangzhou autumn export trade fair. This rarely happened at previous export trade fairs.

In recent years, businessmen from Hong Kong and Macao have shown increasingly greater interest in doing business with China's inland regions. At this year's autumn export fair, over 39 percent of export business was concluded with businessmen from Hong Kong and Macao. Experts predict sustained growth in trade between China's inland regions and Hong Kong and Macao. This is conducive to the inland region's socialist modernization and construction and to the stability and prosperity of Hong Kong.

Ni Shaojie, chairman of the Hong Kong Chinese Firms Association, said, "if the inland regions conduct more extensive study of the Hong Kong market to learn its needs, improve their freight transport and speed up the delivery of supplies, trade between Hong Kong and the inland regions is bound to increase by large margins."

At this year's autumn export trade fair, increases were witnessed in the sales of foodstuffs, clothing and other daily commodities; the volume of trade in textile goods, grain, edible oil, local products, light industrial commodities and handicraft items were large; and for some items, the demand even exceed supply. Prawns were sold out in only 2 days; queues formed to buy dried hot peppers; honey was quickly sold out, and detergents were very hot items. Following the further implementation of China's economic policies, even broader avenues of trade are awaiting us. The flexible measures adopted by various Chinese trade delegations to cope with different situations at the export fair also contributed to the expansion of China's export business.

Responsible persons of concerned departments pointed out that, in a worldwide recession, if we strive to take full advantage of our strong points and bring our subjective initiative into full play, we will surely do a lot more business, and a new situation will emerge in our foreign trade.

RENMIN RIBAO URGES END TO DIVISION OF KOREA

[Short commentary: "The Division of Korea Into North and South Must End"]

[Text] Seven years have passed since the 30th UN General Assembly adopted its resolution "on turning the cease-fire in Korea into lasting peace and creating favorable conditions for promoting peaceful reunification under Korean initiative."

During these 7 years, the people and Government of the DPRK have made unstinting efforts to carry out the UN General Assembly resolution and promote the peaceful reunification of the fatherland. The republic first put forward a positive proposal on holding a north-south dialogue, hoping to expand contacts by means of this dialogue and pave the way for the peaceful reunification of the fatherland. In 1980, at the Sixth Korean Workers Party Congress, Chairman Kim Il-song put forward the new plan of establishing the democratic confederal republic of Koryo and a 10-point program for peaceful reunification of the fatherland, clearly pointing out the correct road for peaceful reunification of the fatherland under Korean initiative. This year still more statements have been made by the republic urging the advance of the cause of peaceful reunification of the fatherland. All this has fully expressed the sincerity of the government of the republic regarding the peaceful reunification of the fatherland. However, due to the interference of U.S. imperialism and the complete lack of sincerity among the Chon Tu-hwan clique in South Korea, it has still been impossible to carry out the UN General Assembly resolution on the Korean problem. Almost 30 years have now passed since the Korean war ended, but U.S. troops are still in Korea. After the Reagan administration came to power, not only did it go back on its predecessor's promise of partial troop withdrawal, it actually increased military strength in South Korea and continued to carry out the conspiracy to create "two Koreas." With U.S. support, the Chon Tu-hwan clique has talked glibly about reunification but in fact is not sincere about this at all. On the one hand, they have said that are willing to hold talks anywhere in the world with the north on Korean reunification, but on the other, they have pursued a perverse course in Korea and savagely suppressed and persecuted the patriotic masses demanding reunification of the fatherland. The United States and the Chon Tu-hwan clique are the archcriminals in obstructing the peaceful reunification of Korea.

The division of the Korean Peninsula cannot go on, and the tragedy of the separation of the flesh-and-blood compatriots of north and south must end. The Chinese people strongly demand that the 30th UN General Assembly resolution on the Korean problem be implemented, that the U.S. miltiary units and installations be withdrawn from South Korea and that a stop be put to the actions of the Chon Tu-hwan clique in sabotaging the peaceful reunification of Korea. The Chinese people resolutely support the great cause of the peaceful reunification of Korea. We believe that no force will be able to block the advance of peaceful reunification under Korean initiative and that a united Korea is sure to appear above the horizon.

Zhao Ziyang Hosts Banquet

[Text] Beijing, November 17 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang and visiting Thai Prime Minister Prem Tinsulanon today jointly urged Vietnam to withdraw its troops from Kampuchea in compliance with the U.N. resolutions so as to contribute to the peace and security in Southeast Asia.

Speaking at the banquet he gave in honor of the Thai prime minister this evening, the Chinese premier said that the Vietnamese authorities still refuse to comply by the U.N. resolutions, refuse to renounce aggression and refuse to pull out their troops. Instead the Vietnamese lately have been preparing for a new military adventure on the Kampuchea-Thai border, he said.

Zhao said: "The Thai Government and people have made clear their determination to defend national sovereignty and territorial integrity. I would like to avail myself of this opportunity to state once again: Should the Vietnamese authorities dare to invade Thailand by force, the Chinese Government and people will stand firmly by the side of Thailand and give complete support to the Thai people in their just stand of opposing aggression."

Prime Minister Prem said that the invasion of Kampuchea by Vietnam is an international and not a regional problem. "At the end of October, the United Nations made clear once again that the invasion of Kampuchea by the Vietnamese troops remains unacceptable. The magnitude of the support for this resolution by the world community was similar to that for the resolution against the invasion of Afghanistan," he said.

Prime Minister Prem reaffirmed Thailand's support of the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea and its president, Prince Sihanouk. "We certainly will continue to render all necessary assistance in the pursuit of a political solution to the Kampuchean problem, along the lines of the resolution of the International Conference on Kampuchea and the U.N. resolutions, he said.

Reflecting on the history of the friendship between the two peoples, Zhao said that the cooperation between the two countries in the political, economic, cultural, scientific and technological fields has developed satisfactorily since the establishment of diplomatic relations between the two countries.

"The development of Sino-Thai friendship is not only in the vital interests of the two peoples, but also conducive to peace and stability in Asia as well as the world," he said. The premier said that the two countries are now facing the historical task of building their own countries. "We both need an international environment of permanent peace. Our two countries have always supported and encouraged each other in countering external threats, safeguarding regional peace and building our own countries."

Zhao praised the Thai Government and people for their achievements in safeguarding their country's independence and territorial integrity, in building their own country and developing their national economy.

He said that Thailand, together with other ASEAN countries, has contributed to peace and security in Southeast Asia by upholding the resolutions of the U.N. General Assembly on Kampuchea, safeguarding the norms for international relations and supporting the coalition of the various patriotic forces of Kampuchea.

Zhao said: "Every meeting by leaders of the two countries has strengthened our mutual understanding and trust. The present visit by the prime minister will surely be a new contribution to the strengthening of Sino-Thai friendship."

In his speech, Prem said that Vietnam's invasion of Kampuchea has been a very costly lesson. "This is so because, apart from earning the condemnation of the world community, Vietnam has had to face economic depression, which has been a direct result of the diversion of resources for the invasion of another country," he said. The U.N. resolution on Kampuchea is, therefore, not only legitimate but also reflects the determination of members of the world community to oppose any action which violates the basic principles of the U.N. Charter and international law, he said.

He praised Kampuchean nationalists for their victory in the establishment of the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea with the objective of working together to liberate Kampuchea from Vietnamese occupation. He also praised the nationalists for their efforts to restore the independence and sovereignty of their country and to implement the U.N. resolutions, and the declaration and resolution of the International Conference on Kampuchea.

He said he hopes that all endeavors of the coalition government will continue to receive the support and assistance of friendly countries as well, and "especially of China which has been one of the most important countries from the very beginning to have rendered support to the hopes and aspirations of these Kampuchean nationalists."

The Thai prime minister said, Thailand and ASEAN continue to support the political solution to the Kampuchean problem in accordance with the resolution of the International Conference on Kampuchea, which says that foreign troops be totally withdrawn from Kampuchea and that the Kampuchean people be allowed to exercise their right to self-determination.

On bilateral relations, Prime Minister Prem said that the relationships between Thailand and China, at both the governmental and the people's levels, have progressively and smoothly developed in accordance with the principle of mutually beneficial cooperation. "Today cooperation between our two countries covers numerous areas and is mutually beneficial in the fields of trade, aviation, science and technology, culture and sports," he said.

He said the Thai Government attaches great importance to its agricultural and industrial development, which is similar to China's national development objective in accordance with its policy. He said that the two countries should seek to increase the exchanges and cooperation in both agricultural and industrial fields.

Present at the banquet were Wan Li, vice-premier; Tang Ke, minister of petroleum industry; Zhu Muzhi, minister of culture; He Dongchang, minister of education; Wu Xueqian, vice-minister of foreign affairs; He Zhengwen, deputy chief of General Staff of the Chinese People's Liberation Army; and leaders of other departments.

Also attending the banquet were distinguished Thai guests accompanying Prime Minister Prem on the visit and diplomatic officials of the Thai Embassy here.

Text of Prem Banquet Speech

BK180703 Bangkok THE NATION REVIEW in English 18 Nov 82 p 4

["Text" of Prime Minister Prem Tinsulanon's speech at the banquet on 17 November in Beijing]

[Text] I am very pleased to have this opportunity to return to the People's Republic of China for another visit. On behalf of my party, I would like to express our gratitude to your excellency, the government and the people of the People's Republic of China for the warm welcome extended to us. As with you, I hope that this visit will contribute towards the promotion and the strengthening of the good relationships already existing between our two countries, as well as enhance the close contacts between our two peoples.

I also hope that the official discussions and exchanges of views on various subjects between your excellency and myself and between our representatives during this visit will yield positive results for the further development of relations, for the better understanding between our two countries and for the maintenance of peace and stability in our region. This visit to the People's Republic of China is like a visit with old friends. This sentiment reflects the historical relationship that has long existed between our two countries. For this reason, I am particularly pleased to say that, at present, bilateral relationships between Thailand and China, at the governmental as well as at the people's level, have progressively and smoothly developed in accordance with the principle of mutually beneficial cooperation.

Today, cooperation between our two countries covers numerous areas and is mutually beneficial in the fields of trade, aviation, science and technology, culture and sports. In this connection, I am pleased to note that at the end of this past October Thai and Chinese representatives have just signed a protocol on importation and exportation of commodities between the two countries for 1983. This protocol specifies that the People's Republic of China will import agricultural produce from Thailand such as corn, raw sugar, natural rubber and rice.

Thailand, in turn, will import crude oil, diesel oil and machinery from the People's Republic of China. This agreement on the annual exchange of commodities is indicative of the fact that both countries produce commodities which can be exchanged. Furthermore, there exist ways and means of increasing the volume of bilateral trade in the future. Thailand and China are both developing countries whose economy, which is based similarly on agricultural products and output, is required to support the countries' industrial development. For this reason, the Royal Thai Government has attached great importance to its fifth national economic and social development plan, which focuses on both agricultural and industrial development as a means to raise the standard of living and income of the farmers who comprise the majority of the population.

This is similar to your national development objective in accordance with the policy declared recently by your excellency. Thus, I am of the opinion that our two countries should seek to increase the exchanges and cooperation in both agricultural and industrial fields. I am confident that Thailand and China can indeed develop even further the already existing good relationship, for the prosperity of our countries and the well-being of our two peoples.

The present world situation is changing ever so rapidly, and, because of this, efforts to establish peace by nations which long for peace have been met with innumerable obstacles. Today, it is evident that international conflicts are still being settled by force of arms in violation of the United Nations Charter and resolutions. As you are aware, even the region of Southeast Asia is faced with such a situation -- a situation which is a threat to the peace, stability and security of every country in the region. Moreover, such a trend has adverse effects on economic development of the countries in the region and the well-being of their peoples.

Vietnam's invasion of Kampuchea has been a very costly lesson which even Vietnam herself may not have expected. This is so because, apart from earning the condemnation of the world community, Vietnam has had to face economic depression which has been a direct result of the diversion of resources for the invasion of another country.

I would like to dwell on this point because history has always shown that a country preoccupied with warfare has never been able to look after the welfare of its people. Hence, it is regrettable that Vietnam's resources have been devoted to the invasion of Kampuchea and not to the development and the well-being of its own people. The past three years have proven that the invasion of Kampuchea is an international and not a regional problem. During the same period it has also been shown that ASEAN's efforts in solving the Kampuchean problem through a peaceful, political means are correct and enjoy overwhelming support of the world community.

At the end of this October, the United Nations has made expressly clear once again, that the invasion of Kampuchea by the Vietnamese troops remains unacceptable. The magnitude of the support rendered to this resolution by the world community was similar to that which was rendered to the resolution against the invasion of Afghanistan. The UN resolution is, therefore, not only legitimate but also reflective of the determination of members of the world community unswervingly to oppose any action which violates the basic principles of the UN Charter and international law.

Furthermore, it was overwhelmingly apparent that the efforts of Kampuchean nationalists in the establishment of the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea have met with glorious victory, having the objective of working together to liberate Kampuchea from Vietnamese occupation, to restore the independence and sovereignty of their country, and to work for the implementation of the United Nations resolution, and the declaration and resolution of the International Conference on Kampuchea [ICK]. This was demonstrated not only in connection with the seating of Democratic Kampuchea but also with the passage of the United Nations resolution. In both instances, these efforts won an increasing margin of support from the international community in each subsequent year. The victory was a direct result of the effective work by the Coalition Government of Kampuchea itself, under the leadership of HRH Prince Sihanouk, the president.

As for Thailand and the other ASEAN countries, I can reiterate that we greatly admire the successes of Prince Sihanouk's government. We certainly will continue to render all necessary assistance in the pursuit of a political solution to the Kampuchean problem, along the lines of the resolution of the ICK and the relevant UN resolutions. We therefore earnestly hope that all endeavours of the coalition government will continue to receive the support and assistance of friendly countries as well, and especially of China which has been one of the most important countries from the very beginning to have rendered support to the hopes and aspirations of these Kampuchean nationalists.

Moreover, Thailand and ASEAN sincerely hope that the suffering of the Kampuchean people will be forceful persuasion to all friendly countries, peace-loving and humane, to join in the search for solution to this problem. We also hope that Vietnam will accept this as reality and join with her regional neighbours in the pursuit of constructive cooperation towards national development which will be a benefit to Vietnam as well. Thailand and ASEAN continue to support the political solution to the Kampuchean problem in accordance with the resolution of the International Conference on Kampuchea, namely, that foreign troops be totally withdrawn from Kampuchea and that the Kampuchean people be allowed to exercise their right to self-determination. These can be successfully implemented with the cooperation of Vietnam and the major powers concerned.

Let me take this opportunity also to express my admiration for the progress in national development according to the policy of four modernizations of the People's Republic of China. I have no hesitation in saying this because I have noted the marked growth and prosperity of your country since my previous visit here two years ago. I firmly believe that, under the leadership of your excellency and other Chinese leaders, China will succeed in her national development in fulfillment of her established objectives. Furthermore, let me take this opportunity to express the hope that the People's Republic of China will pursue her foreign policy in a constructive manner that has been clearly declared recently: that she will seek friendship with other countries based on the pancasila principles. I believe that the pursuit of such a policy will help promote and restore relations between the People's Republic of China and other countries, especially those in the Southeast Asian region,thus contributing to the future peace, stability and security of this region.

Kampuchean Question Discussed

[Text] Beijing, November 18 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang and Thai Prime Minister Prem Tinsulanon concentrated on Indo-China and particularly Kampuchea in their first round of talks in the Great Hall of the People this morning.

Sources close to the talks said the two leaders shared the hope that the three patriotic forces in Kampuchea would further close their ranks, carry on the struggle against Vietnam and land it in a greater impasse on the Kampuchean theatre so as to create favorable conditions for a political solution to the Kampuchea issue.

The two leaders agreed to continue their support for the Kampuchean people's resistance to Vietnamese aggression and for the coalition government formed by the three patriotic forces. They also called for vigilance against a possible new military adventure by Vietnam and for the international community to support Kampuchea and exert a still greater pressure to bear on Vietnam.

Zhao Ziyang said that China and Thailand had cooperated fruitfully in supporting Democratic Kampuchea's resistance to Vietnamese aggression. "Our mutual trust and suport is very important in containing Vietnam's regional hegemonism and safeguarding peace and stability in Southeast Asia," Zhao said.

He expressed the hope that Thailand and the other ASEAN countries would play a greater role in promoting the unity of the patriotic forces in Kampuchea.

Referring to Hanoi's repeated gestures for improving relations with China as a smokescreen, Zhao reiterated that improvement of Sino-Vietnamese relations was out of the question as long as Vietnam adamantly refused to pull its troops out of Kampuchea.

Prem said the formation of the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea had a great impact on the peace and stability of Southeast Asia. "We should strengthen cooperation and coordination in our support for the Government of Democratic Kampuchea so it will exert a greater influence and bring greater benefit to this area," he said.

The Thai prime minister urged all friendly countries to help the three patriotic forces of Kampuchea cement their unity against Vietnam and augment their own strength. Prem thanked China for backing Thailand and other ASEAN countries in their proposals and efforts for solving the Kampuchea question within the framework of the United Nations.

The two premiers expressed their support to Samdech Norodom Sihanouk for his participation at the 7th summit conference on non-aligned countries scheduled to be held in India next year. Both sides also discussed the situation in Southeast Asia as a whole. They shared converging views on a wide range of issues. Premier Zhao said China will strengthen its friendly relations and cooperation with the ASEAN countries.

Taking part in the talks on the Thai side were: Soem Na Nakhon, deputy prime minister; Sitthi Sawetsila, minister of foreign affairs; Suli Mahasanthana, minister of state; Phanian Kantarat, vice-minister of defence; and Orachun Thanaphong, Thai ambassador to China. Present on the Chinese side were: Wu Xueqian, vice-minister of foreign affairs; He Zhengwen, deputy chief of General Staff of the Chinese People's Liberation Army; and Shen Ping, Chinese ambassador to Thailand.

ASIAN GAMES EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE MEETS 17 NOV

[Text] New Delhi, November 16 (XINHUA) -- The Executive Committee and the General Council of the Asian Games Federation (AGF) met in sessions this morning and afternoon respectively, reviewing the preparatory work of the Asian Games and discussing questions with regard to the participation of some countries and regions in the coming games. S. Buta Singh, chairman of the Special Organizing Committee of the Ninth Asiad and sports minister of India, delivered a report on the preparatory work at the Executive Committee meeting.

Both the Executive Committee and the General Council approved the application of Oman and the Maldives for the AGF membership. At both meetings, the readmission of China's Taipei Olympic Committee into the AGF was discussed. In view of the fact that the Taipei Olympic Committee has failed to give any explanations with regard to the change of its name, flag, anthem and the revision of its charter as requested, and that it has not formally requested to rejoin the AGF, the Executive Committee unanimously agreed not to discuss the question. The General Council endorsed this decision.

Speaking at the Executive Committee meeting or the General Council meeting, representatives from Pakistan, Thailand and Singapore disapproved the fact that the Olympic Committee of Democratic Kampuchea, a member of the Asian Games Federation, was not invited by the host country to attend the Asian Games, nor was its request to send representatives to the games approved by the host country.

The Chinese representatives spoke at both meetings in support of the views expressed by these representatives. They stressed that the Olympic Committee of Democratic Kampuchea, as a member of the Asian Games Federation, had participated in the activities of the previous Asian Games and has the right to take part in the forthcoming games. It is a mistake on all accounts that Democratic Kampuchea was not invited and it runs counter to the charter of the AGF. The representatives of the host country indicated at the meetings that there is no time left for reconsidering this question. Representatives of quite a number of countries expressed dissatisfaction with this.

THATCHER WARNS AGAINST ONE-SIDED DISARMAMENT

[Text] London, November 17 (XINHUA) -- Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher today said the West should judge whether Soviet policies and performance present new opportunities for peace or new dangers to stability.

Addressing the opening of the 28th annual session of the North Atlantic assembly, she said the West must be ready to respond, whatever the future holds.

"But," she said, "we require to be convinced that any new proposals and initiatives are based, not on calculations of short-term propaganda advantage but on a genuine willingness to increase the security of the people of the world." She added, "it's performance that counts."

She also warned that any attempt to lower the defences of the West alliance would put peace in peril.

Mrs Thatcher revealed Britain is committed to an annual real increase of about 3 percent in defence spending.

She said the Soviet Union had moved to parity with the United States in strategic nuclear weapons and massive superiority in intermediate-range nuclear weapons in Europe and had also increased their superiority in conventional forces.

The prime minister told the session that the watchword of the West alliance in what she called "a period of uncertainty" must be "unity of purpose."

The assembly, which began meeting in the 900-year-old Westminster Hall Nov. 15 and will end Nov. 19, is composed of 200 parliamentarians from NATO member countries.

LEBANON'S AL-WAZZAN CITED ON MIDEAST PEACE

OW171800 Beijing XINHUA in English 1600 GMT 17 Nov 82

[Text] Beirut, November 17 (XINHUA) -- Lebanese Prime Minister Shafiq al-Wazzan yesterday described U.S. President Ronald Reagan's September 1 proposal on the Middle East issue as a "positive change".

In an interview with Lebanon's state television, the prime minister said that there had been also a "positive change" on this issue in the Arab world. He held that people should take advantage of this opportunity to promote a reasonable solution to the Middle East issue.

He reiterated his country's support for the Palestinian cause. But, he said the decision to end the Palestinians' armed activities in Lebanon was final and unchangeable and would not prepare to bargain on it. He demanded that the Palestinian and other Arab people residing in Lebanon obey its laws.

He also demanded that Israel withdraw its troops from Lebanon unconditionally and at an earlier date. This was the primary goal of his country at present, he added. He expressed his confidence that the Syrian and Palestinian armed forces would withdraw from Lebanon at adequate time.

HU YAOBANG: NO CHANGE IN SPECIAL ZONE POLICY

OW171101 Fuzhou Fujian Provincial Service in Mandarin 1120 GMT 16 Nov 82

[Text] When Hu Yaobang, general secretary of the CPC Central Committee, recently went to Fujian to investigate the economic situation and visit the armymen and people there, he emphatically pointed out: Fujian's strategic position is extremely important and its natural conditions are quite favorable. Therefore, Fujian must forge ahead in the development of the four modernizations.

From 2 to 8 November Comrade Hu Yaobang, together with Secretary Hu Gili and Alternate Secretary Hao Jianxiu of the Secretariat of the CPC Central Committee as well as the responsible comrades of the Ministry of Water Conservancy and Power, the Ministry of Commerce, the Academy of Agricultural Sciences and the CYL Central Committee, inspected the cities of Xiamen and Fuzhou; and Jinjiang, Putian and Ningde Prefectures as well as 16 basic-level units. During the short period of 6 and 1/2 days, Comrade Hu Yaobang and others toured the piers, airport and transportation centers in the Xiamen Special Economic Zone as well as small rural hydroelectric power stations, enterprises run by local communes and brigades and farms where freshwater fish were being bred. They also talked to the armymen in various army posts and people in factories and workshops as well as rural households. During this period Comrade Hu Yaobang also heard reports delivered by the leading comrades at the provincial, prefectural and county levels and those of the Fuzhou PLA units.

On the morning of 8 November, Comrade Hu Yaobang also received responsible cadres of the government and party organs at the provincial level and those of the Fuzhou PLA units, and held a cordial conversation with them.

In his speeches in various localities in Fujian, Comrade Hu Yaobang spoke highly of the achievements made in Fujian and by the Fuzhou PLA units. He said: As viewed from all the angles, tremendous changes have taken place in Fujian since the convocation of the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee. Great improvements have been noticed, particularly in the past 2 years. The central authorities are quite satisfied with the work in Fujian, including work in various localities and in the army in Fujian. The various localities and the army units in Fujian have steadily implemented the line, principles and policy laid down by the central authorities.

He said: Fujian is an extremely important area for the development of the four modernizations and a showcase in the southeastern part of our socialist motherland. It is also a base area to help Taiwan return to the embrace of the motherland. It is hoped that Fujian will be in the van of the four modernizations program. We cannot depend on the central authorities in order to achieve this goal. Nor can we depend on the fraternal provinces for assistance. We must rely on our own efforts to whip up the enthusiasm in the following fields:

1. It is necessary to whip up the enthusiasm of the masses in implementing the economic policy and adhering to the guidelines in production.

2. It is essential to arouse the enthusiasm of the party and CYL cadres and that of the activists on various fronts.

3. It is imperative to whip up the enthusiasm of the 400,000 and more cadres in the province, including party and government cadres, and those cadres among cultural workers and intellectuals.

4. It is essential to arouse the enthusiasm of the army units in Fujian in helping various localities carry out construction and rendering even greater meritorious service.

5. It is imperative to whip up the enthusiasm of the overseas Chinese and our foreign friends in helping us develop the four modernizations program and to persistently implement the policy of opening the country to the outside.

Comrade Hu Yaobang praised the people in Fujian for taming mountains and rivers and building the eight major base areas. He repeatedly pointed out: Fujian is a province with many mountains and rivers. Fujian has abundant resources for the development of water conservancy and small hydroelectric power stations. The development of small hydroelectric power stations is of great significance. In recent years, various counties and communes in Fujian have developed small hydroelectric power stations. They have supplied electricity not only to the major electric power grid for use by various industries in the cities, but also to the rural areas for use by commune members. They have supplied electric power for electric blowers used in stoves, rice cookers, water and room heaters, ovens for cooking and baking and electric kilns for pottery. According to incomplete statistics, power consumption in Fujian's towns and rural areas has increased from 1.1 billion kilowatt hours in 1978 to 1.681 billion kilowatt hours in 1981, an increase of 50.7 percent. Comrade Hu Yaobang was greatly interested in the statistics. He crossed mountains and forests to visit various villages and peasant households. He also inspected four small hydropower stations, studied how peasants used electric power in their daily life, and held forums on several occasions.

Comrade Hu Yaobang said: For many years we have been considering the question on how to make electricity serve the life of peasants so that they will have electricity for their cultural and educational use as well as for lighting, cooking, cooling and heating. This will do much to make full use of water resources, to protect the forests, to improve the health of peasants, to free rural women from heavy household chores and to bring about a fundamental change in the standards of social conduct, cultural and educational work and the mental outlook of the people in the countryside.

He said: For years people in rural areas have used firewood for cooking, and this has denuded large tracts of forests. In some places people even use grass as fuel, and the smoke from burning firewood or grass has ruined many people's eyes. He noted that the government has a rural electrification plan for improving the life of the rural population. According to this plan, villages in a large number of counties throughout the country will have electricity for cooking, cooling, heating and processing purposes and for promoting cultural and educational work by 1990.

He said: In building rural small hydroelectric power stations in hilly areas, the principle of self-reliance should be upheld. This means that the peasants should rely on themselves in building power stations for their own use and in operating them with assistance from the government. These small hydroelectric power stations should form a network in addition to that formed by the hydroelectric power stations built by the state, and should be put under a dual-management setup. Particular attention should be paid to reducing construction costs so that the peasants can afford electricity. In building a new hydroelectric power station, peasants may be organized to provide the necessary manpower.

Comrade Hu Yaobang also inspected marine products breeding in Fujian. He agreed that in the past few years Fujian has made rapid progress in this field. He noted that Fujian has over 2 million mu of beach land and the whole country has over 20 million mu suitable for marine products breeding. However, insufficient attention was paid to this in the past. In the future, we must continue to eliminate the "left" influence and strive to develop marine products breeding by adopting a flexible policy.

While inspecting the shorefront land of the (Xiaoao) Commune in Lianjiang County, Comrade Hu Yaobang was very happy to learn that the commune has promoted the development of marine products breeding and has quadrupled its output value since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee by dividing the shorefront land into private or responsibility plots and distributed them among the commune members. He encouraged them to advance at a quicker pace.

Fujian Province is one of the provinces in which the implementation of special and flexible policies is permitted by the party Central Committee. After inspecting basic construction projects at the special economic zone in Xiamen and listening to reports by the responsible persons of the provincial party committee, provincial government and the special zone, Comrade Hu Yaobang pointed out that the party Central Committee's special policy of allowing the construction of four special zones in Fujian and Guangdong will not change. Recently, Comrade Chen Yun issued an instruction saying that special economic zones must be established and run well by continually summing up experiences. His instruction has reaffirmed the policy of opening to the outside world. Therefore, there must not be any wavering in regard to this policy.

Comrade Hu Yaobang said emphatically that implementing the policy of opening to the outside world and cracking down on economic crimes are two different things. It is wrong to say that the rise in the economic crime rate is the outcome of the policy of opening to the outside world, since there are no cause and effect relations between these two things. We must not attribute economic crimes to this policy. Instead, we should strive our best to carry out this policy successfully.

Comrade Hu Yaobang also called on Fujian to pay attention to doing its overseas Chinese affairs work well. He said that overseas Chinese are a powerful source of strength and that they should be allowed to contribute to the motherland's socialist modernization.

During his stay in Fujian, Comrade Hu Yaobang wrote an inscription: "Order has been restored out of chaos; advance in unity; the four modernizations will be successful provided there is initiative." With this inscription he encouraged the soldiers and people in Fujian to unite and carry out its work in a still more outstanding manner.

STATE COUNCIL ISSUES ENTERPRISES AID REGULATION

[Text] Beijing, 13 Nov (XINHUA) -- In order to solve the problem of the heavy burden on various enterprises, the State Council has formulated a "Regulation on Solving the Problem of the Heavy Burden on Various Enterprises and Society." In this connection, the State Council has issued a circular, asking various localities and departments to conscientiously implement the regulation.

The State Council's document stipulates the following three points:

1. Regarding fees, which are prescribed in writing by the state or departments of the central authorities, such as property insurance, pollution charge, highway maintenance fee, civil air defense fee, service charge of the people's bank and educational fee, it is necessary to make improvements, in line with the guiding principle of lightening the burden of various enterprises and society. Some unified plans should be formulated.

2. Regarding expenditures on city maintenance and construction, the state has already allocated funds for this purpose. The financial and city construction departments in various localities should use and manage available funds for city maintenance and construction effectively, in accordance with the guidelines issued by the party Central Committee and the State Council.

It is necessary to give full play to the role of available funds for those purposes and the funds must not be used for other purposes. All unreasonable apportionments should be rectified or eliminated.

3. All other unreasonable apportionments to various enterprises should be eliminated.

The "regulation" also stipulates that various departments and localities should seriously rectify various fees levied on enterprises within this year, in conjuction with the consolidation of various enterprises. They should collect fees strictly in accordance with the regulations of the state or various provinces, municipalities and autonomous regions, and must not wantonly increase various fees. Regarding those fees, which cannot be eliminated for the time being, it is necessary to study and make proper improvements. They should be gradually eliminated within 1 to 2 years. All unreasonable fees should be eliminated. From now on, when central departments or various localities want to collect fees from various enterprises or increase their burden, they must have the concurrence of the State Economic Commission, the ministry of Finance or economic commissions and financial departments of various provinces, municipalities and autonomous regions after their review and approval by the State Council or provincial, municipal and autonomous regional governments. Various enterprises have the right to reject payments for apportionments which have not been approved by the State Council or provincial, municipal and autonomous regional governments.

DENG XIAOPING SENDS WREATH ON DEATH OF WEI ZUZHEN

[Text] Nanning, 17 Nov (XINHUA) -- Wei Zuzhen, formerly political commissar of the Guangzhou PLA units, second political commissar of the Guangxi Military District and secretary of the Guangxi Zhuang Autonomous Regional CPC Committee, died of cancer on 11 October 1982 after failing to respond to medical treatment. He was 70 years old. A memorial meeting for Comrade Wei Zuzhen was held in Nanning on 27 October.

A wreath was sent from Deng Xiaoping, chairman of the Military Commission of the CPC Central Committee.

Comrade Wei Zuzhen was a native of Donglan County, Guangxi. He joined the Chinese Workers' and Peasants' Red Army in 1929 and was admitted to the party in 1932. CERTIFIED PUBLIC ACCOUNTANTS REAPPEARING

[Text] Certified public accountants are rare in China -- at the moment there are only 10 -- but they are scheduled to play a major role in the nation's economic future, dealing with the management of home enterprises as well as the business of foreign firms in China.

Approval to open an office in Beijing came only last November following the promulgation of the income tax law. Service to clients began in March. A rush of business is expected at the beginning of next year when foreign traders will be paying income tax for the first time.

But the new office has been busy with both Cinese and foreign companies, checking accounts, helping to set up accounting systems, advising on contracts, financial documents and economic disputes, and applying on behalf of consigners for registration, alteration, transfer, clearance and certain legal rights -- all tasks within its business scope.

Wu Tingjin, holder of the first certified public accountant identification certificate, told CHINA DAILY that the most pressing need of the office is to recruit more qualified hands. Ten more certified public accountants are to be authorized soon, he said.

Certified public accountants were not rare before liberation. But China's reform of the system put auditing in the hands of the Ministry of Finance, the People's Bank and the leading administration of specific enterprises. Certified public accountants were wiped out. In universities, the auditing department was one of the first to be cancelled and the accounting department later was incorporated into such departments as finance, economics and commercial and industrial management.

Wu, jubilant at having regained ample scope for his own work, said the forthcoming revised constitution is going to set up an office of auditor-in-chief. Corresponding governmental organizations for auditors at various levels will be set up, too, he said.

The office is an independent unit, Wu said. It is not on the side of the government nor the side of the client; it represents the law, he stressed. It has the duty of helping foreigners to understand the country's economic laws and financial systems, particularly now when laws and systems are not yet detailed enough to cover all eventualities.

For instance, in Chinese accounting, double entry is not commonly used and allowance for bad debts is not allowed as it is in the West.

"Let's make it clear," Wu said, that in China only the work of Chinese certified public accountants is valid, whether the case is Chinese or foreign.

Ignorance of accounting caused the country to suffer considerable losses in doing business with foreigners over many years, Wu said. The increasing boom of imports and exports under the new open policy and multi-ownership of home enterprises will mean that accounting and auditing must play a new and more important role.

RENMIN RIBAO ON BUILDING NEW FUEL FORESTS

[Commentator's article: "Take Early Steps To Build Fuel Forests"]

[Text] There is a severe shortage of fuel in our country's rural areas. There are 170 million peasant households throughout the country. On average, they lack firewood for 2 months every year and more than 47.7 percent of peasant households lack firewood for 3 months or so. This is a difficult problem in the peasants' daily lives. As a result, a large quantity of forest cover and bushes as well as plants, are often destroyed and most straw and dung is burned. This has aggravated the undermining of the natural and ecologoial balance. This is also a great obstacle to the expansion of the productive force in agriculture and the realization of agricultural modernization. We should solve this problem immediately.

Our country's rural areas cover a vast territory. To solve the fuel shortage problem it is impossible to rely only on the increase of commodities supplied by the state. We should instead mainly rely on the exploitation and utilization of energy resources in rural areas. In accordance with the principle of "suiting measures to local conditions, making use of various kinds of energy to supplement each other, promoting comprehensive utilization and attaching importance to practical results," we should build and utilize fuel forests, methane generating pits, small hydropower stations, small coalpits, solar energy, wind power, geothermal energy, tidal energy and so forth. Building fuel forests is one very effective method.

Firewood has always been an important fuel in rural areas, second only to straw as an energy source in the daily life of the rural areas. Our country has good natural conditions suitable for developing fuel forests. Apart from that, we have abundant forest resources. In the northern and southern parts of our country, we have many kinds of trees suitable for building fuel forests, which can grow rapidly and have a powerful ability for photosynthesis and sprouting. As long as we plant these trees carefully and cultivate and protect them conscientiously, we will, generally speaking, reap the benefits after 3 to 5 years. Every mu of fuel forest can produce more than one thousand to several thousand jin of dry firewood or, at least, 500 to 600 jin of firewood. If every person has 1 or 2 mu of fuel forests, generally speaking, the demand for firewood can be satisfied all year through. Fuel forests have a natural sprouting power. As long as we carry out good management work, once we plant them, we can benefit for several years and make use of them continuously. Through building fuel forests and planting other forests, many counties, communes and production brigades have gradually solved the problem of the shortage of fuel. For example, starting from 1965, Yanling County in Henan Province, which is located in a plain, has planted trees extensively. Every year, through prunning, it can get dry firewood totalling 150 million kilos. Most communes and production brigades have enough firewood.

There are some other examples which show the success in opening up energy resources. For instance, some people have planted cherry trees, locust trees and sorrel trees in the saline-alkali soil area in order to get firewood or planted willows in the desert to replace dung that can be used as fuel. All this shows that in plains, hills or some other places where the natural conditions are comparatively poor, it is absolutely possible to build fuel forests. These areas may solve their problem of lack of firewood by relying on their own efforts.

We can also achieve other economic returns in the process of building fuel forests. Many kinds of leaves are nutritious fodder and good quality green manure. When we have sufficient firewood, we can make use of more straw to produce marsh gas and spread them directly on the fields. This will be beneficial to restoring the fertility of cultivated land and promoting the development of agriculture and animal husbandry.

Various rural areas, those areas where there is a severe shortage of firewood in particular, should regard the building of fuel forests as their most important task in forestation. In the light of the new conditions which have developed since the extensive implementation of the responsibility system in production in the rural areas, they should formulate practical plans and follow the principle of "whoever plants the trees is entitled to get the firewood" to arouse the enthusiasm of communes, production brigades and individuals. The building of fuel forests may be managed and administered by the collectives and the distribution of firewood is based on the needs of peasant households. The fuel forests might also be built by the collectives, but managed and used by peasant households. Various kinds of contract systems might be implemented in this respect.

In the meantime, we may also allot barren hills (including wasteland and uncultivated sands) to commune members as private hills, to encourage and support them in planting more trees and grass to solve, for themselves, the problem of lack of firewood and wood. Forestry departments should grow fine saplings for building fuel forests, train key members to pass on knowledge of forestry and give more guidance for the application of the technology of forestation and growing saplings to promote the development of fuel forests. Various localities should take active measures to spread the experience of those typical units in forestation so as to encourage the broad masses of commune members to build more fuel forests.

Our research and study of our own forest resources is still lagging behind and more efforts should be exerted in order to catch up with advanced levels. At present, the emphasis of our research work should be placed on the selection, introduction and popularization of saplings which are suitable for building fuel forests and can grow rapidly, luxuriously and densely. We should also emphasize the management, felling, utilization and technical renewal of fuel forests to meet the demands of the masses for building fuel forests. Apart from that, old-style kitchen ranges in rural areas which burn firewood directly (their heat effect is 10 to 15 percent in general) waste a large quantity of energy. If we can take active measures to manufacture and popularize kitchen ranges which economize on firewood (their heat effect may reach 20 to 30 percent), this will also ease the strain on firewood.

The 12th CPC Congress has put forward the magnificent goal of "quadrupling the gross annual value of industrial and agricultural production" and regarded the settlement of the energy problem as one of the strategic focal points. The broad masses of rural cadres, commune members and forestry workers should rouse their spirits, take early measures to build fuel forests and open up energy resources for rural areas to make contributions to creating a new situation in the agricultural sphere.

NATIONAL SEMINAR DEALS WITH RURAL ENERGY

HK180340 Chengdu Sichuan Provincial Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 16 Nov 82

[Text] The 1982 national seminar on rural energy sponsored by the China Energy Research Association and the China Association of Agricultural Engineering opened yesterday in Chengdu. Some 150 leading cadres from the State Economic Commission, the State Planning Commission and the Chinese Academy of Sciences and other well-known experts and scholars on rural energy research took part in the seminar. In his opening speech on rural energy in the country, Professor Yang Jike, deputy director of the China Energy Research Association and vice governor of Anhui Province, said: There has been a rapid growth of energy needs in rural areas, along with an increase in population, an improvement in living standards and progress in production technology; therefore, energy has become a prominent problem in the rural areas. Viewing the energy consumed for domestic purposes alone, over 50 percent of the rural households lack firewood 3 to 5 months a year. Consequently, a large quantity of surface biological fuel is exhausted and the ecological balance is damaged. This causes soil erosion and greatly affects atmospheric temperature. For example, in Sichuan Province, the frequency of serious floods has risen from once in 100 years to once every 10 years. This is mainly due to the fact that the forests located in several river basins in the province are incapable of holding water resources.

Professor Yang Jike stressed that solving the rural energy problem is closely linked with the interests of 800 million peasants and is a key problem, playing an important part in agricultural modernization. This must attract a high degree of attention. Yang Jike pointed out: Effective measures for economizing and developing rural energy resources include popularizing stoves with small consumption of firewood and methane pools; vigorously developing small hydroelectric stations; building forests for firewood purposes; and using solar energy and wind power.

Sichuan Provincial CPC Committee Secretary Yang Chao was present at yesterday's opening ceremony and made a speech. On behalf of Comrade Tan Qilong and the provincial CPC committee, Yang Chao wished the meeting success and gave a briefing on the situation of popularizing methane pools in rural areas in Sichuan.

Bian Jiang, adviser to the Ministry of Agriculture, Animal Husbandry and Fishery, and Lin Hanxiong, president of the energy research association and member of the State Economic Commission, also spoke at the opening ceremony. Lu Dingyi, member of the standing committee of the Advisory Commission of the CPC Central Committee, and vice chairman of the CPPCC, sent a special message of congratulations to the meeting. During the meeting, experts and scholars will exchange experiences on exploitation and use of rural energy. A special commission of rural energy under the China Energy Research Association is to be established.

100 COAL-MINING PROJECTS TO BE INITIATED

[Text] Beijing, November 15 (XINHUA) -- Over 100 coal mining projects with a combined annual production capacity of 104.13 million tons are being opened across China, a senior official of the Ministry of Coal Industry told XINHUA today.

Chen Dun, director of the capital construction department under the ministry, said that six new mines, with a combined annual production capacity of 4.35 million tons, are expected to go into operation before the end of this year. Three other mines are being expanded to increase production capacity by 1.8 million tons a year.

Of the 102 projects currently under construction, Chen Dun said, 34 are mines each with an annual production capacity of 900,000 tons or more. "Never in the past did China undertake to open so many large mines at one time," he stressed.

China will start construction next year of new coal mines designed to produce at least 30 million tons a year, he said. Coal accounts for 70 percent of China's energy consumption, Chen Dun said. "As the country's number one energy source, " he added, "coal mining has a priority in the nation's plan to quadruple its industrial and agricultural output value before the end of the century."

China's coal mining efforts are currently concentrated on the building of coal bases in Shanxi, China's leading coal producer, Inner Mongolia, the western part of Henan Province and northeast and north China, and on expanding the capacity of mines in east China. The purpose is to increase the coal supply for northeast China, the nation's leading heavy industrial center, and east China where Shanghai, China's biggest industrial city, is located.

PRODUCTION OF 1.2 BILLION TONS OF COAL BY 2000

[Text] Beijing, November 15 (XINHUA) -- Gao Yangwen, Chinese minister of coal industry, said today China will be able to produce 1.2 billion tons of coal in the year 2,000, double the 1981 output.

He said that the estimate is based on China's past experience and lessons, surveys, studies and analyses.

The Chinese minister made the estimation at a 15-day national conference on coal industry, which opened here today, and is attended by more than 800 leaders of China's coal industry at various levels.

China is striving to quadruple its industrial and agricultural gross output value by the year 2,000 and this modernization program calls for the annual output of coal, which accounts for 70 percent of China's energy resources, to be doubled during the same period.

Gao said that Chinese known coal reserve has topped 640 billion tons and this is the most favorable advantage.

"Coal industry, one of the weak links of China's national economy, has gained greater concern and support from circles and departments," the Chinese minister noted, adding that "beginning from next year, the government will make greater investment in this sector of the country's industry."

He said: "Within 20 years when coal output goes to 1.2 billion tons from the present 600 million tons, the average annual increase will be 3.4 percent, or 30 million tons every year."

From 1950 to 1980, the Chinese minister recalled, the average annual increase was 10 percent. During the Fifth Five-Year Plan period (1976-1980) when the rise in output was comparatively low, the average annual growth was 5.2 percent, or 27 million tons. Now, the minister said, China has added more new coal mines and is able to produce a little more than that.

Gao said that the existing mines are the bases for increasing coal output in coming years and China will upgrade technically all the major coal mines in a planned way. "Practice over the years has shown that the existing mines cost less in their technical improvement and yet give faster returns," he said.

He said: "In developing future coal mines, China will build large open-cut mines wherever conditions permit and will do its best to use new technology, new techniques and large and highly efficient equipment. The time needed to build a big open-cut mine is two to three years shorter than what is needed to build a big shaft mine. The former also requires less man power and money."

The Chinese minister added that efforts must be made to promote education and scientific work in coal production and to improve coal production management.

NATIONAL RURAL HIGHWAY CONSTRUCTION MEETING HELD

[Text] A national on-the-spot meeting on county and commune highway construction was held in Changzhi Municipality of our province on 25 October.

In August 1981 when responsible comrades of the central authorities were inspecting work in Jindongnan Prefecture, they urged the people there to establish more contacts with other places and to build more highways. Over the past year and more, the party, government, army and people of the prefecture have united as one to attend closely to the work and have taken quick action. Under the guidance of the principle of self-reliance and arduous struggle, they mapped out a plan to build 118 mountain highways with a total length of 1,248 kilometers. So far 85 highways, totaling 1,004 kilometers, have been built. It was for the purpose of summing up and popularizing Jindongnan Prefecture's experience of building mountain highways self-reliantly by relying on the masses, further studying and publicizing the guidelines of the 12th CPC Congress and opening up a new situation in highway construction that the State Council approved the convocation of the on-the-spot meeting by the Ministry of Communications in Jindongnan Prefecture.

Attending the meeting were Zheng Guangdi, vice minister of communications; comrades from the State Economic Commission, the State Nationalities Affairs Commission, the Ministry of Agriculture, Animal Husbandry and Fishery and the PLA General Logistics Department; responsible persons of highway communications departments of various provinces, municipalities and autonomous regions; and collectives and individuals advanced in county and commune highway construction in Jindongnan Prefecture. Yan Guangzhen, deputy director of the highway bureau of the Ministry of Communications, delivered an opening address to the meeting. Comrade Lian Ping, director of the Shanxi provincial communications office, spoke on behalf of the provincial government.

HK180344 Chengdu Sichuan Provincial Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 16 Nov 82

[Text] A national seminar on economic returns was held in Chengdu 10-16 November. In accordance with the spirit of the 12th CPC National Congress and under the prerequisite of constantly raising economic returns in order to achieve the goal of quadrupling total output of industrial and agricultural production, the seminar extensively and thoroughly discussed the question of how to raise economic returns in industrial enterprises.

The seminar was sponsored by the China Enterprise Management Association and the provincial enterprise management association.

The seminar held: The key issue in present national economic construction is to raise economic returns. Although, since the 3rd Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, industrial enterprises have made initial achievements in raising economic returns, the situation of poor economic returns still remains fundamentally unchanged; and should strive to fully tap the great latent potentials.

In accordance with the principle of integrating theory with practice, the seminar earnestly exchanged and summed up experiences in raising economic returns, analyzed and studied the present situation of economic returns in industrial enterprises and the factors that affect economic returns, and has put forward numerous positive proposals. It received 120 theses.

MORE COLLEGE GRADUATES SERVING IN PLA AIR FORCE

[Text] Beijing, 17 Nov (XINHUA) -- Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, nearly 1,000 graduates of universities and colleges have been promoted to leading posts at and above the regimental level in the PLA Air Force units.

According to statistics of air force departments concerned, at present nearly 100 college students are holding leading positions at the divisional level and nearly 700 college students are in leading bodies at the regimental level. Leading posts in the training departments of air force technical academies and schools at various levels are mostly filled by college graduates. A number of intellectuals have also become leaders of schools. All the directors of the research institutes are experts or professional or technical cadres.

Since Li Nengjing [6786 5174 2417], nationally known radar expert, became director of a certain research institute, He has led the scientific research personnel in achieving 36 results from research projects, of which 11 have been popularized in the air force. Led by Li Nengjing, the institute has actively developed academic activities turning out 26 academic papers in the past 3 years and pushing forward the air force's combat readiness training.

The assigning of a large number of promising intellectuals to leading posts has speeded up the training of competent personnel for the modernization of the air force. The various flying schools are now training almost three times as many new pilots as they did a decade ago.

IMPORTANCE OF MIDDLE-AGED INTELLECTUALS NOTED

[Station Commentator's article: "Step Up Recruiting Party Members From Among Middle-Aged Intellectuals"]

[Text] Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, party organizations in all localities have attached importance to recruiting party members among intellectuals. Among the new party members recruited in recent years in China, the proportion of specialized and technical personnel has become larger year by year. This is a good phenomenon. To step up the recruiting of new party members from among the intellectuals is of great significance to the building of material civilization and socialist spiritual civilization and to the creation of a new situation of socialist modernization.

At present, prospective party members among the intellectuals should primarily be outstanding persons among middle-aged intellectuals. Middle-aged intellectuals are the main part of China's intellectuals. The overwhelming majority of our middle-aged intellectuals were trained and brought up by our party after the founding of the People's Republic. They have worked conscientiously for the party and the people for many years and gained rich practical experience. Today, they are our backbone technical force serving as a link between the past and the future. They have been educated by the party for a fairly long period and have been repeatedly tempered. For many years, some of them have actively applied for CPC membership. Some applications have been on file 20 years or even longer. Although they have been long tested and become basically qualified for party membership, these comrades have not joined our party organization due to the influence of leftist thinking and shortcomings in recruiting work.

In China today the ratio of party members among the middle-level specialized and technical cadres is smaller than the ratio of party members among the high-level specialized and technical cadres. In some localities, the ration of party members among middle-aged intellectuals is even smaller than the ratio of party members among young intellectuals. Therefore, it is very necessary to give higher priority to the middle-aged intellectuals in the recruiting of new party members.

Party organizations in all localities should further eliminate the influence of leftist mistakes and correctly understand the important role played by middle-aged intellectuals in the four modernizations. Party organizations should be warmly concerned about and enthusiastically held middle-aged intellectuals with regard to their political progress, and should not assume an indifferent attitude towards them. Their family background, problems concerning their social relations and their political history should be treated as history and generally speaking, should not disqualify them from party membership so long as the facts are known and so long as they are determined to dedicate their lives to the realization of communism, support the party's programs and line and indeed show good performance. We should make concrete analyses of their shortcomings and weaknesses and make more efforts to help them by educating them. We should not nitpick. At the same time, we should adhere to the standards of party membership, ensure the good quality of new party members and firmly prevent the mistakes of considering one's job performance only, overlooking his political performance and thus lowering the standards of the party membership.

TIYU BAO CITES HU ON SPORTS, PARTY PARALLEL

[Text] Beijing, November 17 (XINHUA) -- Today's TIYU BAO, China's sports newspaper, carries an editorial entitled "Develop the Spirit of Hard Training and Strict Demands". This accompanies remarks by Hu Yaobang, general secretary of the Central Committee of the Chinese Communist Party, when he and other leaders received the Chinese women's volleyball team and others on October 3.

Hu Yaobang said the victory of the women's volleyball team which won the ninth world women's volleyball championships is an encouragement to the whole party and the people in their effort to achieve the four modernizations.

All should think it over, he said. What had been described as "the sick man of east Asia" has been able to push sports forward. Why then shouldn't a big country with a population of 1,000 million be able to push socialism forward in all fields of its work.

Summing up the experience of the women's volleyball team, Hu Yaobang mentioned the strong mass base of tens of millions of people and the regular selection of the best. Our party also adopted this method to bring up young people to leading posts, he said.

Politicians, theorists, army commanders, writers, artists and other specialists are all trained under strict demands. The experience of the women's volleyball team will help promote such style of work in other fields. This is truly working hard for the prosperity of the country, Hu Yaobang said.

RENMIN RIBAO ON THIRD WORLD ECONOMIC FREEDOM

[Article by Xing Anhuang [6717 1344 7816]: "Economic Independence Is the Basic Guarantee for Consolidating Political Independence"]

[Text] "The common task confronting the Third World countries is, first and foremost, to defend their national independence and state sovereignty and actively develop their national economies so that they can back up the political independence they have already won with economic independence." This passage quoted from Comrade Hu Yaobang's speech delivered to the 12th CPC Congress fully demonstrates the significance of the economic independence of the Third World countries to the maintenance and consolidation of their political independence.

After the end of World War II, a series of Asian, African and Latin American countries freed themselves from the shackles of colonialism and won their independence one after another. This was a matter of epoch-making significance. However, this was, to a certain extent, only the first step because political independence should be backed up by economic independence. Without political independence, economic independence is, of course, out of the question. Without economic independence, it is difficult to consolidate political independence. This is because imperialism and colonialism were compelled to give up their colonial rule and make political concessions due to the struggles of the oppressed peoples. However, they are still trying to pursue neocolonialism, maintain by hook or crook the irrational international economic order and keep the colonialist-type economic structures of the Third World countries so that many Third World countries continue economically to depend upon the former colonial empires and retain the vestiges of the colonial and semi-colonial economies.

Such economies mainly manifest themselves in the following ways: the abnormal single-product economy remains unchanged; the situation of exporting primary products and importing industrial manufactured goods and the exploitation as a result of international price scissors remains unchanged; management and administration of enterprises are controlled by foreign capital and they cannot act on their own; these enterprises should depend on developed countries for technology; with regard to capital, they are controlled by international financial monopoly groups; because developed countries control their finance and provide credits on harsh terms, the income of a number of Third World countries falls short of their expenditures and they run heavily into debt. In particular, under the new situation that superpowers and contending for world hegemonism, many Third World countries have become the targets of fierce rivalry between the superpowers. Economic infiltration, domination and plunder are also important means deployed by superpowers to control, interfere in and exploit developing countries.

The above situation has shown that after winning their political independence, the Third World countries should gradually realize their economic independence on the basis of developing national economy. Only thus can they become true independent countries. It is because political independence is a guarantee for the development of national economy, whereas economic independence is a solid basis for political independence. After freeing themselves from colonial rule, it is possible for the Third World countries to formulate policies and decrees suitable for their national conditions, gradually restrict or even eradicate the control and influence of colonialism over them and develop their national economy in the interest of their own people. After winning their independence, a number of independent countries have supervised, exercised control over and administered or even nationalized important economic sections such as land, mines, banks and so forth. There is no doubt that this has played a tremendous role in developing the national economy. However, because of their low level of economic development and failure to adopt effective policies and measures, many Third World countries have not yet freed themselves from their dependence on developed nations. They have not yet been successful in changing their economic situation of poverty and backwardness. Foreign countries seize this opportunity to control, interfere with and plunder them. This has weakened the capabilities of these countries to maintain and consolidate their political independence. As a result, they are unable to play an active role international affairs.

Apart from that, because Third World countries have increasingly become involved in the economic system of the Western world and the old international economic order still remains unchanged, those Third World countries which have not yet established national economy cannot avoid being severely harmed by the change of the world economic situation and have become the victims onto which devloped countries shift their economic crises. Even the efforts of those countries which had initially established their independent economy to expand their economy cannot but be adversely affected to a certain degree. Economic difficulties are liable to lead to social instability and a turbulent political situation. In order to maintain the old international economic order, which is beneficial to themselves, and contend for world hegemonism, colonialism and imperialism, superpowers always take advantage of other countries' precarious position and make use of their economic advantage to try to control the economy of Third World countries in order to affect or change their internal and external policies. They even wait for an opportunity to subvert legitimate governments through economic infiltration and are looking for or training their own agents.

Therefore, economic development and economic independence of the broad masses of the Third World countries have a direct bearing on the consolidation of their own political independence. At present, developed countries are facing the most severe economic depression of the post-war period. Therefore, developing countries should do their utmost to develop and maintain their own national economy, free themselves from the economic control and fetters of developed countries and gradually realize their economic independence to defend and consolidate their political independence. This is a matter of universal and imperative significance.

At present, the broad masses of developing countries have become increasingly aware of the importance of developing their national economy and achieving economic independence. After winning political independence, many of the Third World countries have proceeded to strip the imperialists of special privileges, take back their national rights and interests and strive to control the lifeline of their national economy. In the international arena, the developing countries have become progressively more united and are demanding a change in the old international economic order. The Latin American countries have taken the lead in opposing the maritime hegemony of the superpowers. The oil-exporting countries as well as other raw materials-producing countries are waging a struggle to win perpetual rights to enjoy and use their own national resources. Especially in recent year, the developing countries are making even greater efforts to establish a new international economic order. These struggles will to a certain extent transform the situation of the superpowers and developed countries arbitrarily manipulating and plundering the developing countries economically. The economic growth rate of many Third World countries has already surpassed that of the developed countries of the West. However, as a result of longstanding stagflation and recession in the Western economy, the economic development of the Third World countries is also seriously affected. This illustrates that the building of an independent national economy is still a grave task commonly faced by the Third World countries.

What is the correct path of the Third World countries for achieving economic independence? Looking back on the history of the economic development of the Third World countries, we can see that if they want to achieve economic independence, they must first rely on their own efforts. Relying on their own efforts does not mean rejecting cooperation with other countries on the basis of equality and mutual benefit. It means resolutely safeguarding national rights and interests, firmly controlling the economic lifeline of the country, taking full advantage of their own national resources and mainly relying on the strength of their own people. Based on the interests of the nation and the people, they must formulate policies and measures suited to their own national conditions, independently solve the various problems of developing the national economy and steadily and progressively change the old economic structure of society. Proceeding from the economic characteristics of their own country, they must develop what is good and discard what is not. At the same time, they must not neglect the development of diversified economy and must try to reduce reliance on foreign countries as much as possible. As for the introduction of foreign capital, advanced technology and management and administration methods, they must be rationally employed in light of the specific conditions in the country itself, and control must be strengthened over foreign capital. Facts have proved that relying on one's own effort is the basic guarantee for achieving economic independence, and it is the only effective way of breaking away from the yoke of the old international economic order.

It is necessary for developing countries to strengthen their economic cooperation and exchange on the basis of self-reliance and take a common position in the struggle for a change in the irrational old international economic order. Third World countries have a shared history of being oppressed and enslaved and now they are faced with the same or similar problems and tasks. For this reason, they have a common language and desire toward many questions and they can carry out economic cooperation and exchange in a big way. In addition, Third World countries, though backward economically, have many respective characteristics which they can make use of to help supply each other. Because their economic strength is still rather weak and it is difficult to shake off the control by economic powers solely by the strength of a single country, it is very necessary for Third World countries to unite themselves in a certain form. Since the Bandung Conference in 1955, at which the demand for changing the old international economic order and the principles of strengthening economic cooperation on the basis of equality and mutual benefit and stablizing prices for raw materials and products were first raised, some raw material-producing and exporting countries among developing countries formed a variety of specialized economic cooperation organizations and regional economic groups one after another. This has played an important role in freeing them from the shackles of the old international economic order and in backing up their bargaining power in the negotiations between developing and developed countries. History has proved that the South-South cooperation or collective self-reliance is an important way by which Third World nations can develop and realize their economic independence.

As for the "North-South dialogue," no substantive progress has so far been achieved as the developed countries, particularly the superpowers, still cling to the old international economic order. However, developed countries have, after all, accepted the concept of the new international economic order. So long as Third World nations can strive to develop their national economies along a correct path and strengthen their united struggle to smash the monopoly of developed countries in the international economy, it is possible to make a further breakthrough in changing the old international economic order. Of course, because colonialism, imperialism and hegemonism are not willing to resign themselves to the loss of their vested interests, it will never be easy for Third World nations to realize the aim they are struggling for. However, so long as they persist in their struggle and strengthen their unity, Third World nations will ultimately create for themselves an excellent situation of a flourishing economy, stable politics and a peaceful society for themselves.

RENMIN RIBAO VIEWS REAGAN-KOHL DISCUSSIONS

["Newsletter From America" by Yuan Xianlu [5913 0341 4389] "A Warm Atmosphere and Private Worries"]

[Text] After U.S. President Reagan and West German Chancellor Kohl had held two 2 hours of talks on 15 November, a State Department official told newsmen that "there are no differences between the two leaders on any question." Actually, at a time when cold currents have arisen in U.S.-European relations, the welcome for West Germany's new leader on this visit to the United States was warmer than usual. At the White House welcoming ceremony, Reagan stressed that West Germany was "in the Free World's front-line," and that the United States stood firmly with West Germany. Kohl gave his assurance that West Germany was the United States' partner now and in the future, and that the United States could pin its hopes on West Germany. Reagan mentioned that next year would be the 300th anniversary of the arrival of the first group of Germans in North America, saying that the United States was preparing to set up a committee to arrange the celebrations. Kohl cited the revival of U.S. relief for Europe after World War I and the Marshall Plan after World War II and cited figures from Einstein to Hemingway to illustrate the traditional friendship between the United States and West Germany. The American press reported that the speeches of the two leaders were overflowing with enthusiasm. More importantly, in the joint statement issued after the talks, both sides expressed identity of views on a whole range of major international issues.

These talks were being held while a new leader was taking over in the Soviet Union and a delicate situation was emerging in East-West relations. The joint statement expressed willingness to improve relations with the Soviet Union, but also stressed that the West must adopt a "clear, firm and united approach" to the Soviet Union, that efforts must be made to strengthen NATO's conventional and nuclear forces and that expanded cooperation with the new Soviet leaders must depend on Soviet action. Both sides also demanded that the Soviet Union withdraw from Afghanistan. Some American papers said that such a tone in the joint statement could not have occurred when Schmidt was chancellor. They also noted that the United States described Vice President Bush's talks in Moscow with the new Soviet leaders as "frank, sincere and important," while expressing in Washington a tougher attitude than expected over East-West relations.

These talks were held just after Reagan had announced that the Western allies had reached agreement over the principles for East-West economic relations and that he was lifting his embargo on supplies of equipment for the Soviet natural gas pipeline.

The two sides declared that close consultation and cooperation among the Western countries over East-West economic issues was just as important as their traditional cooperation over political and security questions. Kohl made a particular point of appreciating Reagan's cancellation of the embargo. It is known that certain Western European countries have expressed dissatisfaction over Reagan's words. Western Europe's undertaking the agreement on matters regarding East-West economic relations is an exchange for his cancellation of the embargo. Hence, the West German leader's expression of views on this question was most welcome support for the United States.

The U.S. Government was fully satisfied with the results of this visit. However, U.S. public opinion pointed out that this certainly does not mean that the future development of U.S. European relations will be all clear sailing.

The 16 November WALL STREET JOURNAL reported that the political situation in West Germany was far from stable. On this occasion Kohl expressed support for the deployment of U.S. arms in West Germany and elsewhere in Western Europe next year, but there is plenty of opposition to this move in West Germany. At present, both the United States and West Germany are in great economic difficulties. On the question of NATO defense, the United States has complained to West Germany on its unwillingness to pay more for U.S. forces stationed in that country. Although the joint statement stressed the importance of keeping U.S. forces in West Germany, the question of payment for them was not in fact raised at the meeting, the dispute was just avoided.

THE NEW YORK TIMES and WASHINGTON POST of 16 November both published editorials on the natural gas pipeline issue. They held that it would be a bad thing for the United States to impose its will on West Germany. The warm atmosphere at these U.S.-West German talks existed because both sides held identical views on strengthening U.S.-European relations on taking a tough line toward the Soviet Union and certainly did not indicate that the United States had changed its method of imposing its will on others. The comments of these two papers reflect the worries of some Americans that dark clouds might reappear in U.S.-European relations.

["News Analysis: 'Why Did Weinberger Visit the Five Asian-Pacific Nations?' By Yang Wenke" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Beijing, 16 Nov (XINHUA) -- Beginning on 1 November, U.S. Defense Secretary Weinberger visited Singapore, Thailand, Indonesia, Australia and New Zealand and returned to Washington on the evening of 8 November. It was his second visit to the Asian-Pacific area this year. He visited Japan, South Korea and the Phillippines last April. People cannot help but ask: Why did the U.S. defense secretary visit the Asian-Pacific area twice in 6 months and what was the purpose of his visits?

Hold Consultations on Defense and Forge Closer Ties

During these visits, Weinberger held consultations and coordinated with the leaders of the Asian-Pacific nations on each other's stand concerning Soviet expansion in the Western Pacific and security in the area. People still remember that during the Nixon administration and following the defeat of the United States in the Indochina war, U.S. military forces were gradually transferred to the Middle East and Europe. A "vacuum" was created in the Asian region, and the United States and the Asian-Pacific nations began to drift apart in their relations. In recent years, particularly after Vietnam's invasion of Kampuchea and the use of the Cam Ranh base by the Soviet Union, Soviet naval and air forces have become an increasingly greater threat to the "sea lifeline" of the United States and the security of the entire Asian-Pacific area. Since taking office, Reagan has attached great importance to the United States' strategic relations with its Asian-Pacific allies and has said that the United States would give support to its Asian allies equal to that given its European allies.

During his recent visits, Weinberger explained to the Asian-Pacific nations that although the United States is preoccupied with its problems in Europe and the Middle East, it is still interested in the Pacific area. He emphatically pointed out that "the security of the United States and the security of its allies in the Pacific area are becoming more and more mutually dependent." Obviously, the purpose of Weinberger's visits to the Asian-Pacific nations was to "emphasize" the fact that the United States attaches "great importance" to its allies in this area and to forge closer ties with them in defense and other matters.

Pursue Reagan's New Strategy

According to THE NEW YORK TIMES, the Reagan administration has formulated a new global strategy. One of the important aspects of this strategy is to strengthen U.S. military deployment in the Asian-Pacific area. In the event an emergency takes place in the area from Southeast Asia to the Persian Gulf, U.S. forces stationed in northeast Asia can speedily head southward to deal with it.

During his last visit to the Asian-Pacific region, Weinberger explained Reagan's new strategy and U.S. Asian defense policy to the leaders of the countries and regions concerned -- faced with the Soviet Union's southward movement strategy, the United States will strengthen its military cooperation with Japan and the ASEAN countries to jointly safeguard the sealanes of the Pacific and Indian Oceans while beefing up its own military strength in the Asian-Pacific region. An important mission of Weinberger's second visit to the Asian-Pacific region was to promote the implementation of Reagan's new strategy. Wherever he went during the visit, Weinberger emphasized that the Soviet military buildup in the Asian-Pacific region could not be overlooked. He reiterated that the United States would fulfill its obligations called for by the Manila Treaty signed more than 20 years ago and the ANZUS Treaty signed more than 30 years ago. At the same time, he persuaded the allies to support the U.S. policy of joint defense of sealanes.

Strengthen the Defense of the Asian-Pacific Region

Another task for Weinberger during his recent visit was to strengthen the defense capability of the Asian-Pacific countries. Ever since Vietnam invaded Kampuchea and the Soviet Union stepped up its military expansion in Southeast Asis, some ASEAN countries have eagerly urged the United States to "return" to Asia, increase its miltary aid to them and help them increase their military strength. As soon as Reagan assumed the presidency, he made a proposal to increase assistance to the ASEAN countries, with total aid amounting to $630 million. During his recent visit, Weinberger revealed that in 1982 the United States extended $40 million in loans to Indonesia with additional loans amounting to $50 million in 1983. The United States has agreed to supply Thailand with additional arms worth $12.3 million and to provide Thailand with all necessary military assistance. At the same time, Weinberger spared no effort to urge the ASEAN countries, Australia and New Zealand to increase their defense spending and to make still greater efforts to jointly defend the region.

JOINT U.S.-JAPANESE GROUND EXERCISE ENDS

[Text] Tokyo, Nov. 18 (XINHUA) -- A nine-day U.S. and Japanese ground forces joint field training exercise ended in Shizuoka, 100 kilometers southwest of Tokyo, this morning.

The first six days, Nov. 10-16, were devoted to preparatory drills, and the remaining three days to live ammunition firing at the foot of Mt. Fuji, to repel a hypothetical enemy attack, the local papers reported.

A company of about 200 fully armed troops of the Ninth U.S. Infantry Division were flown from Washington to Japan by civil airliners on Nov. 7.

Lt. General Alexander Weyand told a press conference on Nov. 16 that it is of significance for the U.S. Army to airlift its troops across the Pacific under conditions of urgency.

He said this drill is on a small scale. He wished there would be some large ones later on and the Japanese self-defense force could send more troops to America for training.

It was the first time U.S. Army troops came to Japan in 25 years. The U.S. Army has not stationed ground troops in Japan since 1957, some Japanese papers said.

JAPAN'S LDP NEARING SELECTION OF PRESIDENT

OW182122 Beijing XINHUA in English 1655 GMT 18 Nov 82

[Text] Tokyo, Nov. 18 (XINHUA) -- The preliminary election of the Japanese ruling Liberal Democratic Paper (LDP) chief has come into its finishing phase.

With only four or five days left before the voting (by post) expires, the four candidates -- Yasuhiro Nakasone, Toshio Komoto, Shintaro Abe, Ichiro Nakagawa -- are trying last efforts to win more from the remaining small number of floating votes.

Those who hold real power within the party are now turning to the forthcoming formal election by the dietmen of the party.

Japanese papers reported that voting by party members and supporters, clinched to each of the four candidates, has ended. Newspaper and news agency predictive investigation indicates that among the four candidates, Nakasone, supported by the three main current factions of the party, has an edge over the other three candidates with a possible total of 450,000 votes. Komoto is hardly surpassing Nakasone in votes through is supporters are still trying desperately to win more votes. Abe and Nakagawa are racing for third place.

Public opinion here believes that the preliminary election centers entirely around the struggle between party factions. None of the four candidates has put forward any specific proposals for solving the political and economic problems. The policies of the four candidates are said to be abstract and scant in content. Hence, LDP party members and supporters or even ordinary nationals are greatly dissatisfied with the present state of the preliminary election. Most Japanese people take an indifferent attitude toward the election.

In the process of election campaigns, the LDP is divided into two camps -- anti-Kakuei Tanaka and pro-Kakuei Tanaka. The three anti-main current faction candidates put up an unequivocal slogan: To end domination of the party by outsiders (referring to Kakuei Tanaka). But, main current faction candidate Yasuhiro Nakasone said that to mention the problem of domination of the party by outsiders at this time harbours ill intentions. "Without the backing of those powerful and outstanding elements within the Tanaka faction, it is difficult to solve any of the main problems the party is facing," he added.

Japanese press reports point out that the escalating confrontation of the party factions will bring difficulty to the formal election and the birth of the new party chief. Komoto has repeatedly said if the aggregated votes of the three anti-main current faction candidates surpassed half of the votes, it would not be neglected in the formal election. The announcement of preliminary election results in a week's time will start another round of struggle among the LDP party factions.

OW171343 Beijing XINHUA in Enlgish 1149 GMT 17 Nov 82

[Text] Beijing, November 17 (XINHUA) -- The Kampuchean National Army and guerrillas have liberated 22 villages in Saut Nikom and Chikreng Districts of Siem Reap Province since November 10. This was one of their recent victories in combating Vietnamese aggressors, according to radio Democratic Kampuchea monitored here.

Between October 27 and November 6, the patriotic forces cut off railway transport at 28 points in the Provinces of Battambang and Kampot. As a result, the important links between Battambang City and Pursat and between Kampot and the Port of Kompong Som were disrupted for some times.

In late October, the radio added, the Kampuchean forces damaged more than 20 sections of highroad no. five between Sisophon and Samlot in Battambang Province. An assault launched east of the Port of Kompong Som on November 3 resulted in the destruction of a Vietnamese jeep and the death of two Vietnamese officers on board.

Zhao on Foreign Relations

[Text] Beijing, November 19 (XINHUA) -- Premier Zhao Ziyang declared today that whether Sino-Soviet relations can improve depends on whether the Soviet Union will take action to remove its threat against China.

Speaking in his second round of talks with Prime Minister Prem Tinsulanon of Thailand this morning, Zhao said the Soviet Union's deployment of massive troops along the Sino-Soviet and Sino-Mongolian borders, its armed occupation of Afghanistan and its support of Vietnam in invading Kampuchea all constitute a threat against China. These actions are also manifestations of the Soviet Union's policy of hegemonism and expansionism as well as of Vietnam's policy of regional hegemonism, Zhao said.

Zhao said China always stands for developing normal state-to-state relations with all countries on the basis of the five principles of peaceful coexistence. He added that there is no change in China's basic position of opposing hegemonism and expansionism. He said that China never attaches itself to any big power and that China always formulates its foreign policy independently in line with the interests of its own people and those of the people of the world.

Referring to Sino-U.S. relations, Premier Zhao Ziyang said that the two countries, while sharing interests in maintaining world peace and security, have major differences on the issue of Taiwan and other matters. He said that China attaches importance to promoting Sino-U.S. relations but is opposed to the U.S. hegemonistic acts in different parts of the world.

The Chinese premier urged the U.S. Government to abide by the recent Sino-U.S. joint communique on the termination of U.S. arms sales to Taiwan, and make new efforts to develop Sino-U.S. relations.

Prime Minister Prem said that Premier Zhao's explanation deepens his understanding of China's foreign policy. He expressed full agreement to China's position on Sino-Soviet relations. The two prime ministers also had an in-depth discussion of bilateral relations. The two sides expressed satisfaction with the existing friendly relations of cooperation between the countries marked by mutual trust and support, and hoped to see furtherance of cooperation in the economic, trade and other fields.

On behalf of the Chinese Government, Premier Zhao Ziyang expressed appreciation for the great contributions made by Prime Minister Prem in enhancing Sino-Thai relations and safeguarding peace and stability in Southeast Asia. At the end of the talks, Zhao Ziyang, on behalf of Chairman Ye Jianying of the Standing Committee of the National People's Congress and the Chinese Government, once again invited King Phumiphon Adunyadet and the queen and other members of the royal family to visit China at a time convenient to them.

Present at the talks were Soem Na Nakhon, deputy prime minister of Thailand; Sitthi Sawetsila, minister of foreign affairs; Huang Hua, Chinese state councillor and minister of foreign affairs; and Wu Xueqian, vice-minister of foreign affairs.

XINHUA VIEWS SINO-THAI ECONOMIC COOPERATION

["Roundup: New Progress Made in Sino-Thai Economic and Scientific-Technical "Cooperation" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Bangkok, 16 Nov (XINHUA) -- In his first visit to China 2 years ago, Thai Prime Minister Prem Tinsulanon said at the welcoming banquet hosted by Premier Zhao Ziyang that Sino-Thai relations were built on the basis of mutual and legitimate interests and that gratifying progress had been made in enlarging cooperation between the two countries in commerce, trade and science and technology.

New progress has again been made in the past 2 years in economic relations between the two countries on the original basis.

The establishment of diplomatic relations between China and Thailand in 1975 opened up a broad avenue for economic exchange between the two countries. The trade volume between the two countries has continued to increase. While bilateral trade totaled only more than $21 million in 1975, it increased sharply to over $440 million in 1980. It is estimated that the amount will reach approximately $500 million this year.

The scope of trade between the two countries has also grown with each passing year. In 1975 China imported from Thailand agricultural and sideline products such as rice, maize and rubber and exported petroleum products to Thailand. At present, the trade items have increased to include petroleum products, textile goods, chemical products, Chinese herbal and patent medicines, hardware, machinery and equipment in scores of categories and several hundred kinds of commodities. In the past 2 years, Thailand again imported from China nearly 2,000 looms and spinning machines and complete sets of weaving equipment of 130,000 spindles, the largest quantities of textile machinery exported in recent years.

Sino-Thai trade is built on the basis of helping supply each other's needs and of equality and mutual benefit. In 1980, in spite of China's limited petroleum supply, over $190 million worth of crude oil and light diesel oil were exported to Thailand to meet the urgent needs of that country, which produces no oil.

As a result of importing crude oil from China, Thailand incurred large deficits in trade with China in the past 2 years. To rectify this imbalance, China purchased more agricultural products this year than originally targeted so as to achieve a trade balance.

Scientific and technical cooperation between the two countries has also progressed with the sharp increase in economic exchanges. In 1978 the governments of the two countries signed an agreement for scientific and technical cooperation and set up a composite committee for scientific and technical cooperation. At present, the number of items under Sino-Thai scientific and technical cooperation has increased to several scores, including rural construction, cultivation of fine rice strains and tropical fruits and the building of small hydroelectric power plants. The number of projects in 1982 under mutual inspection alone totals 27.

It is gratifying that some progress has been made in certain areas of scientific and technical cooperation between the two countries. For example, when Thai Princess Silindhorn visited China last year, China presented Thailand with its world-renowned Beijing duck eggs. Thailand later hatched 11 Beijing ducklings and raised them according to Chinese methods. These ducklings weighed over 800 grams in only one month, or more than 300 grams heavier than local ducklings hatched during the same period. China has also introduced advanced tehniques from Thailand in artificial fish and shrimp breeding in the past 2 years.

The economic intercourse between the two countries has a history that can be traced back 2,000 years. Early in the Western Han period, the two countries opened a shipping route to engage in civilian trade. During the Ming and Qing Dynasties, there were also frequent exchanges in scientific and technical cooperation with the development of trade between the two countries. At that time, China presented to Thailand a comprehensive calendar and standard weights and measures and Thailand gave fine paddy rice strains and fruit seeds to China.

Today, Cargo ships go back and forth very busily along the shipping lane between China and Thailand and air corridors have also been opened, thus creating more convenient conditions for promoting economic exchange between the two countries.

INDIA, U.S. RESUME HIGH-LEVEL CONSULTATIONS

[Text] New Delhi, November 17 (XINHUA) -- India and the United States resumed here yesterday consultations at high-ranking official level on bilateral and international issues after a lapse of many years. The exchanges were "free, across-the-board and wide-ranging," a spokesman of the Indian External Affairs Ministry said.

The two sides discussed the west Asian crisis, India-China and China-America relations, regional matters, including Afghanistan, and India's relations with her neighbours, including Pakistan.

The Indian side was headed by M.K. Rasgotra, the foreign secretary, and the U.S. side led by Lawrence S. Eagleburger, the under-secretary of state. The two governments during Mrs. Gandhi's visit to Washington in summer agreed to have consultations on major bilateral and international issues as often as possible. Yesterday's meeting was the first round for exchanging views.

Eagleburger, who came here from Pakistan, reportedly apprised the Indian side of the talks he had in Islamabad. The Indian side was understood to have mentioned the talks between Mrs. Gandhi and General Ziaul Haq and also told that the Pakistan foreign minister was due to visit here next month to resume these discussions.

The U.S. side was interested in knowing subjects that are likely to figure at the next non-aligned summit, which is being prepared intensively by Indian Government. Relations between India and the United States in political and economic areas received close scrutiny from both sides.

XINHUA ON CURRENT MIDDLE EAST PEACE TALKS

[Report by XINHUA reporter Yu Kaiyuan: "Current Situation in the Middle East Peace Talks"]

[Text] Beirut, 12 Nov (XINHUA) -- After the withdrawal of the Palestinian armed forces from Beirut, peace talks for the settlement of Middle East issues have once again been revived. During this political and diplomatic struggle, the Arab nations, the United States and Israel have reiterated their different stands. Their differences focus on how to deal with the Palestinian people's right to self-determination. In September, the Arab nations held a summit meeting at the city of Fes in Morocco and put forward an 8-point proposal to justly solve the Middle East issues, calling on the UN Security Council to insure peaceful coexistence among all nations in the Middle East region. Last October the Arab League delegation led by King Hassan II of Morocco visited Washington. Yasir 'Arafat, chairman of the PLO Executive Committee, went to Jordan to discuss matters with King Husayn. 'Arafat expressed his willingness to form a confederation with Jordan after the establishment of an independent state of Palestine. The Jordanian king will soon visit Moscow and the United States. The Arab nations' bustling activities in consulting with other nations have fully indicated their sincerity in peacefully solving the Middle East issues.

In early September U.S. President Reagan put forward a new proposal to solve the Middle East problems, demanding that Israel freeze its new Jewish settlements in the occupied West Bank of the Jordan River and in other localities and allow Palestinian autonomy in connection with Jordan first in these localities. This proposal is better than those made by the United States in the past. However, in essence, the United States is still opposed to the establishment of an independent Palestinian state and refuses to carry on direct dialogue with the PLO.

The Begin authorities have stubbornly clung to their stand on the "great Israeli plan." On 26 October, Begin announced that Israel would sooner or later assume sovereignty over the West Bank of the Jordan River and the Gaza Strip. The Israeli authorities have repeatedly regarded the establishment of new Jewish settlements as a "reply" to the proposals made by the Arab nations and the United States. They also openly opposed Jordan's participation in the autonomous talks. At the same time, the Begin administration has delayed withdrawing troops from Lebanon and persistently demanded that diplomatic representatives with ministerial rank participate in the talks between Lebanon and Israel in order to discuss the "normalization of relations" between the two countries instead of discussing issues with regard to the withdrawal of troops only. Obviously, the object of the Begin administration is to make use of force to coerce the Arab nations into signing a peace treaty with Israel so as to fundamentally eradicate the Palestinian cause.

On the morning of 11 November, Begin left for Washington for talks with the U.S. leader on Palestinian autonomy and on the withdrawal of foreign troops from Lebanon. Public opinion in Beirut holds that in view of the stubborn stand adopted by the Israeli authorities one cannot pin much hope on Begin's trip to the United States.

DAILY ON LATIN AMERICAN ECONOMIC RELATIONS

[Article by Wang Jexing [3760 0735 5281]: "Economic Cooperation Among Latin American Countries and Their Achievements"]

[Text] In his report to the 12th CPC National Congress, Comrade Hu Yaobang highly evaluated economic cooperation among Third World countries. He said: "Such cooperation is of great strategic significance as it helps us to break out of existing, unequal international economic relations and establish a new international economic order." Among the Third World countries, economic cooperation between Latin American countries had an earlier start and has achieved marked results, thus constituting an active contribution to the promotion of the development of national economies of Third World countries and to the establishment of a new international economic order.

Latin America has a vast territory and rich natural resources, which constitute favorable conditions for developing the economy. Economic growth rates of Latin American countries in the 1960's and 1970's were already 5.7 percent and 5.8 percent, respectively, which were much higher than the average growth rate of Third World countries as a whole during the same periods.

By the mid-1970's, the industrial output value in Latin America was more than two times that of its agricultural output value. The industries of Brazil, Mexico and Argentina had already reached a considerable level. However, due to shackles caused by the unfair and irrational old international economic order, the structure of a single-product economy left over from the colonial era had not radically changed and thus their economic development was still seriously handicapped by Western developed countries. Especially when economic crises occurred in the capitalist world, the harm to the economies of Latin American countries became more evident. Therefore, Latin American countries have for a long time eagerly demanded changes in the old international economic structure. They have maintained that Third World countries should support each other and advocate economic cooperation, use collective strength to develop national economics, shake off their dependence on developed countries, and carry on a dialogue with developed countries in one voice so as to strive for the building of a new international economic order.

The economic cooperation between Latin American countries takes diverse forms -- some are bilateral and others are multilateral. Multilateral economic cooperation finds expression in some regional economic organizations mainly focusing on trade and overall economic cooperation (such as the Association of Integration of Latin America, the Andes Group, the Central American Common Market and the Caribbean Community), some cooperation organizations formed by a number of countries for jointly developing resources (such as the Rio de la Plata Basin Treaty and the Amazon Cooperation Treaty), some raw-material producing and exporting country organizations oriented to stabilizing export prices and improving trading conditions (such as the Union of Banana-Exporting Countries, the Group of Latin American and Caribbean Sugar-Exporting Countries and the Coffee Multinational Organization of Latin America), and some economic cooperation organizations of some special trades (such as the Latin American Railway Association and the Latin American Energy Organization).

The practice over the last 20 years and more, since the beginning of the 1960's has shown that economic cooperation among Latin American countries has played an active role in accelerating regional trade, promoting economic development and striving for the establishment of a new international economic order.

Introducing preferential treatment in mutual trade is an important aspect in cooperation among Latin American countries. Because they lower tariffs and lift trade limitations, the trade volume between Latin American countries has grown rapidly. The Latin American Free Trade Association (the predecessor of the Latin American Integration Association) once reduced and remitted tariffs on more than 20,000 kinds of goods in its internal trade. The volume of trade between its member countries increased to more than $6 billion in 1980 from $3 billion in 1960. In the internal trade of the Andes Group, two-thirds of goods enjoyed a reduction of tariffs by an average of 90 percent and trade volume increased by 1,300 percent in 10 years. Great changes also occurred in the variety of goods in trade: When the organization was founded in 1969, 50 percent of goods in its internal trade were traditional goods; now, 88 percent of goods in trade are nontraditional. At present, more than half of the imported machinery equipment of Latin American countries is obtained from regional internal trade.

Setting up joint ventures is another field of economic cooperation. According to their geographical location and economic development levels, Latin American countries have formed a variety of regional economic groups which use trade to promote industrial development.

The Andes Group has adopted three development programs for the industries of metal processing and machine building, petrochemical products and automobiles. In accordance with its regional industrial development program, the Caribbean Community has jointly developed its aluminum and cement industries. Multinational companies run by at least two Latin American countries have continuously sprung up and developed. In the 1970's there were more than 170 multinational companies of this type. This represents a significant development in regional economic cooperation in the field of production.

Jointly developing natural resources also plays an important role in advancing the economies of Latin American countries. The eight countries in the Amazon Basin signed the Amazon Cooperation Treaty in 1978 in order to develop the Amazon River, improve navigation conditions and expand trade. In the south, the Rio de la Plata River Basin reserves contain rich waterpower resources. In order to utilize waterpower resources rationally and to reduce their dependence on imported oil, the countries in this area are making joint efforts to build hydroelectric power stations, among which the Itaipu station jointly built by Brazil and Paraguay will be one of the largest hydropower stations in the world, with a generating capacity of 12.6 million kilowatts after it is completed. Latin America has superior natural conditions and so long as relevant countries can make concerted efforts in accordance with needs and possibilities, cooperation in this aspect will certainly achieve good results.

Mutual assistance is an important aspect in economic cooperation. The economic assistance offered by Mexico and Venezuela, both major oil-producing countries in Latin America, to non-oil-producing countries in this region has set a good example in this respect. In 1980 these two countries reached an agreement on jointly supplying oil to nine Central American and Caribbean countries under preferential conditions.

They used 30 percent of the oil supplied for these countries as low interest loans (worth an annual amount of $700 million with a 2-4 percent interest rate) to help these non-oil-producing countries solve their economic difficulties. This assistance is conducive to promoting unity between oil-producing countries and non-oil-producing countries and is thus supported by the Latin American countries concerned.

For a long time in the past, foreign monopoly capital has randomly plundered farming and mineral resources in Latin America and set up "states within a state" through multinational corporations. In order to safeguard state sovereignty and economic interests, Latin American countries have adopted respective policies and joint actions to limit the activities of multinational corporations. As early as 1970 the Andes Group adopted "common regulations on approaching foreign capital," which laid down various stipulations on investment projects, profits remitted and profits reinvested for foreign enterprises. In its "legal draft on guiding the activities of multinational corporations," the Latin American economic system clearly demanded that multinational corporations respect the sovereignty of the countries in which they are located and not interfere in the internal affairs of these countries.

As in other developing areas, Latin American countries are also the victims of the old international economic order. From their experiences, they have realized that the old international economies. Reforming this irrational old order has become their common desire and demand. In the 1960's and 1970's they put forward a series of suggestions on establishing a new order. The declaration on establishing a new international economic order and action program of this declaration together with the charter on the economic rights and obligations of all countries adopted by the United Nations were all formulated under the sponsorship and active participation of Latin American countries. These three documents have become the fighting program for the Third World in striving for the establishment of a new international economic order. The unity of Latin American countries has demonstrated an increasingly important role and strength in accelerating the North-South dialogue.

Of course, the road of economic cooperation taken by Latin American countries is by no means flat and smooth. Rather, the cooperation has passed through twists and turns. This is because the economic development levels of these countries are not the same and their specific needs also vary. Thus it is unavoidable that there exist some noncoordinated areas. In addition, territorial and border disputes left over by history also cause conflicts and clashes from time to time. Owing to discord fomented by superpowers and obstructions caused by multinational corporations, differences and antagonism also occurred between some countries around some important questions. In spite of all these complex factors, however, their common fates still bind them together. In the face of the current severe international economic situation, strengthening economic cooperation is particularly imperative for Latin American countries is an important component of the South-South cooperation. It has broad prospects.

YANG DEZHI ATTENDS PLA LOGISTIC CONFERENCE

[Text] Beijing, 18 Nov (XINHUA) -- The PLA logistic conference opened in Beijing today. At today's meeting Hong Xuezhi, director of the PLA General Logistics Department, conveyed the instructions of Ye Jianying, Xu Xiangqian and Nie Rongzhen, vice chairmen of the Military Commission of the CPC Central Committee, with regard to the armed forces' logistic work. They urged the logistic cadres at all levels in the armed forces to study hard so as to know their job well and meet the needs in military construction and modern warfare.

Ye Jianying, Xu Xiangqian and Nie Rongzhen gave their instructions on different occasions while hearing a report by the leaders of the General Logistics Department. They pointed out that the PLA's logistic work played a significant role during the war years and in the period of socialist construction. This is a glory for logistic work. Logistic work during the past several years has been satisfactory as it has solved many problems of the armed forces. Logistic work is a science. Modern warfare has presented increasingly higher demands for logistic work. The role of logistic work will become bigger and bigger and increasingly more important. Under certain circumstances in a war it can even determine victory or defeat.

Ye Jianying, Xu Xiangqian and Nie Rongzhen pointed out: Our armed forces' logistic work must be improved, and the key lies in improving the organizational system of logistical work so that it will be more streamlined, rational and efficient. They urged the commanders at all levels be concerned with and attach great importance to logistic work, and that the cadres working on the logistic front would, with the encouragement of the guidelines of the 12th CPC National Congress, further heighten their spirit, do their job efficiently and in a down-to-earth manner and make still greater contributions to the modernization of the national defense.

Yang Shangkun, permanent vice chairman of the Military Commission of the CPC Central Committee, addressed the meeting. He said: To create a new situation for the building of the armed forces there must be a specific plan, because when there is a plan the whole army will have a common goal for their endeavor. It is hoped that this meeting will discuss and formulate a plan for creating a new situation for logistic work.

Chief of the General Staff Yang Dezhi and Director of the General Political Department Yu Qiuli attended the meeting. Yang Dezhi also addressed the meeting.

Today's meeting was presided over by Wang Ping, political commissar of the General Logistics Department.

CHEN PIXIAN URGES IMPROVED SOCIAL ORDER

OW181740 Beijing XINHUA in English 1621 GMT 18 Nov 82

[Text] Beijing, November 18 (XINHUA) -- Further efforts should be made to improve social order and to combat economic offenses this winter.

This was stated by Chen Pixian, member of the Secretariat of the Chinese Communist Party Committee, here tonight in a national telephone meeting.

The motion was seconded by Wang Wentong, vice-minister of public security; Zhu Jianming, vice-minister of justice; Cui Naifu, minister of civil affairs; Zeng Hanzhou, vice-president of the Supreme People's Court; and Li Shiying, deputy chief procurator of the Supreme People's Procuratorate.

Addressing the meeting, Chen described the motion as "a starting point in the effort to effect a fundamental turn for the better in social order and social conduct in the next five years."

Chen said that criminal cases in the first nine months of this year throughout the country dropped by 15.7 percent compared with the same period of last year.

However, there are still quite a number of criminal cases and even serious ones.

This, he added, shows that it is an imperative and arduous work to improve social order.

He called on party committees and local governments to strengthen leadership over the work and to mobilize social forces to improve social order.

AFP REPORTS CULTURAL REVOLUTION TRIALS SLATED

OW181720 Hong Kong AFP in English 1600 GMT 18 Nov 82

[Text] Beijing, Nov. 18 (AFP) -- The people arrested here for participating in the Cultural Revolution, 1966-76, will be tried "according to law", a Chinese official spokesman announced today.

The spokesman gave no names and no indication how many people would be tried and when saying merely: "Other defendants of the Jiang Qing counter-revolutionary clique in Beijing are to be tried according to law."

Jiang Qing, widow of former Chairman Mao Zedong and one of the major figures of the Cultural Revolution, was given a suspended death sentence in January 1981. Party Secretart General Hu Yaobang has recently said that she would not be executed.

The announcement more prosecutions would be carried out in Beijing follows a series of trials throughout China of former provincial officials linked to Jiang Qing's "gang of four."

The format of the trials and the charges laid against the accused -- prosecution of cadres, conspiracy to grab power -- are generally similar in that they are closely modelled on the trial of Jiang and her nine accomplices.

The most recent major trial of former leftist leaders was that of four officials of Hunan Province -- in which Mao was born -- who were given sentences of eight to 15 years for their activities during the Cultural Revolution.

The spokesman refused to specify whether the five major leaders of Beijing's "Red Guards" were among those to be tried in Beijing. Chinese sources indicated the five, who struck fear into the hearts of Chinese leaders at the beginning of the Cultural Revolution, had already been tried in a Beijing court. They were all arrested in April 1978, one year after the fall of the "gang of four", and have been behind bars ever since. They are Kuai Dafu, the most famous Red Guard of the Cultural Revolution who led the "rebels" of Beijing's Qinghua University, Nie Yuanzi, writer of the first "dazibao" (wall posters) which put the spark to the powder keg, Wang Dabin, Han Aijing and Tan Houlan.

END OF EATING FROM 'SAME BIG POT' URGED

[Editorial: "We Can No Longer Eat From the 'Same Big Pot'"]

[Text] In industrial and communications enterprises, people are becoming increasingly aware of the corrupt practice of "paying no attention to the quality of work" and eating from the "same big pot." In recent years the state has handed over necessary self-management power over management and administration to the enterprises and tried all forms of economic responsibility in some enterprises. All these reforms are directed against this kind of corrupt practice. Although these reforms are still partial and exploratory in nature, they have already demonstrated their tremendous power in arousing the enthusiasm of the enterprises and workers, invigorating the economy and promoting the development of production. We should sum up these experiences and adhere to them so that they can be gradually perfected.

At present the problem we must pay attention to is that a handful of comrades carrying out reforms have not focused attention on striving to improve management and administration, raising economic benefits and making more contributions to the state and thereby enable the enterprises and individual workers to receive due economic benefits. Instead they think of raising the proportion of the retention of the enterprises and reducing contributions to the state to increase the economic benefits of the enterprises and individual workers. This tendency of paying attention only to the interests of the part without taking into consideration the interests of the whole and only seeking more authority and benefits, but being unwilling to assume more responsibility, is in fact still an attempt to depend on the state and to eat from the "same big pot." Moreover, as financial, taxation and price reforms still are not coordinated with the reforms carried out in enterprises, the result has been that some of the enterprises and individual workers who make greater contributions to the state still are not receiving more benefits, whereas enterprises and individual workers who make little or no contribution to the state are receiving more than they should. According to the strategic dispositions affirmed by the 12th party congress, during the "Sixth 5-Year" Plan, all economic work must be shifted to the orbit of raising economic benefits, all forms of eating from the "same big pot" must be stopped and such phenomena as "ensuring stable yields despite drought or flood" and egalitarianism must be gradually solved.

Clear and definite ideological guidance is needed in order to reform the enterprise management system. This means, on the one hand, we must give the enterprises the necessary decisionmaking power in management and administration as well as economic interests so that they can give play to their driving force in tapping potentials. On the other hand, we must also set strict demands on the enterprises, reward those which are industrious and punish those which are indolent so that they will feel the pressure. Properly run enterprises make greater contributions to the state and the enterprises and individual workers should receive more benefits; enterprises that are run without improvements make little contribution to the state and should receive less benefits; and poorly run enterprises make no contribution to the state and should of course receive no benefits. The leading cadres of enterprises as well as other workers who neglect their duties should be properly punished. Only in this way can we direct the attention of the leading cadres as well as the masses of workers of the enterprises to the correct path of raising economic benefits.

In carrying out reforms, we must correctly handle the relations between the state, the enterprises and the workers, and always give priority to the interests of the state. Only under the premise of ensuring more income for the state can the enterprise retain a little more of the increase in income and the workers receive a little more. The extent of increase in the percentage of profit for retention by the enterprises cannot exceed the extent of increase in production or profit. We must strictly observe the policies and decrees of the state and use proper ways and means to obtain appropriate benefits. In the distribution of bonuses, we must implement the policy of from each according to his ability and to each according to his work, and we must not exceed the amount set by the upper level. Units within an enterprise must not bring everybody's share to the same level. There should be differences in individual income. People who fail to exceed their quotas should not receive a bonus. Enterprises practicing the piece-rate wage system must make their quotas higher and their unit prices rational. Dishonest methods which damage the interests of the state and the people and the phenomenon of indiscrimnate handing out of bonuses without taking into consideration the actual condition of production and profit must be resolutely checked.

To effectively solve the problem of eating from the "same big pot" among the enterprises and among the workers in an enterprise, we must gradually carry out and perfect an economic responsibility system in a planned manner. A basic measure for running a socialist enterprise properly is to make the workers feel more strongly that they are the masters. In carrying out the economic responsibility system, we must define the economic responsibility borne by the enterprises to the state and by the workers to the enterprises. At the same time, we must grant the enterprises definite economic authority and give the enterprises and workers the economic benefits they deserve, so that responsibility, authority and interests will be linked together. The economic responsibility system must be steadily carried out through practice, and we must strive to create various forms of responsibility system suited to the special features of different trades and enterprises. Based on the demands of the state plan and the needs of the market, the enterprises must rely on the workers, fully bring democracy into play and formulate a general goal for raising economic benefit. At the same time, they must also ensure that the various economic and technical indexes are carried out one by one by every technical office, workshop, shift and worker, so that a crisscrossing and interlocking economic responsibility system with a definite aim and clearly demarcated responsibility will be formed to put the ideas of the leading cadres and workers of the enterprises to use in raising economic benefit and making greater contributions to the state. Correspondingly, the enterprises and individual workers should receive more economic interests.

EXPLOITS OF SHOUDU STEEL COMPANY CITED

[Report: "Thanks to Implementation of Economic Responsibility System, Shoudu Iron and Steel Company Has Raised Product Quality, Output Value, Profits"]

[Text] As a result of correctly implementing the economic responsibility system of linking responsibility with power and interests for more than 1 year, the Shoudu Iron and Steel Company has created a new situation. Of the 55 major comparable economic targets of the same trade throughout the country, the company ranks first in 32. Six of these targets attained by the company have reached the world's advanced level.

Last year, the Shoudu Iron and Steel Company reduced its production of steel and iron respectively by 4.7 and 9.8 percent as required by the state, but its profits handed over to the state were 8.72 percent more than the previous year. By adjusting its product mix and extending the right of selling one's own products, not even one ton of iron or steel was overstocked. The total production value from January to September this year increased by 6.17 percent as compared with the same period last year, thus fulfilling the plan of increasing its profits by 22.97 percent and profits handed over to the state by 18.8 percent. In the fourth quarter of 1981, the amount of coke needed for smelting one ton of iron was reduced to 398 kilograms, reaching the world's advanced level. Further reduction was made in the first three quarters of this year and the best result was 396 kilograms. The comparable energy consumption for smelting one ton of steel was reduced from 1,121 kilograms in 1980 to 993 kilograms in 1981, reaching the nation's best level. A new record of 974 kilograms was again achieved from January to September this year.

Funds retained for the enterprise's use have also increased. Consequently, marked improvement has been made in welfare facilities for staff members and workers. In addition to renewing and transforming 26 major items of equipment, the factory has also effectively improved its environment. From January to September this year, the rate of dust spreading was reduced by 70 percent as compared with that of 3 years before, the rate of utilizing circulated water was 87 percent and vegetated area was 24.1 percent (in 1978, it was 7 percent). Thus, the factory grounds are being transformed into a garden. In the past 3 years the factory also has built houses with a total of 250,000 square meters for its staff members and workers with funds retained for the factory's use. It also has spent 13.5 million yuan on medical services, welfare and relief work. In awarding bonuses, the factory has adhered to the principle of "not exceeding the stipulated total amount, not evening up bonuses among different units and no upper limits for bonuses awarded to individuals." In this way, those who work more get more, those who work diligently are awarded and those who are lazy are punished.

Further on Shoudu Steel

[Feature article by reporters Liu Shiping [0491 2514 1627] and Zhao Xinglin [6392 5281 2651]: "The Golden Key That Opens the Treasury of Economic Effieicncy — How Does the Shoudu Iron and SDeel Company Put Into Practice the Economic Responsibility System?"]

[Text] Last year the Shoudu Iron and Sheel Company was faced with a severe test. Owing to readjustment of the national economy, the total output of iron and steel of the company was required to be reduced by 360,000 tons, whereas its profits to be handed down to the state were not to be decreased.

This was by no means an easy task for the Shoudu Iron and Steel Company, which is over 60 years old and whose equipment is relatively old. However, after struggling for 1 year, it has increased its income despite reducing production. It also has overfulfilled its task of handing over profits to the state. What is more gratifying is that in the process of overcoming its difficulties, it has found the golden key that opens the treasury of economic efficiency -- the economic responsibility system of linking responsibility with power and interests.

Putting "Responsibility" Before Everything Else

How did the Shoudu Iron and Steel Company begin to implement its economic responsibility system? The reporters interviewed the company's manager and engineers, party secretaries and factory directors of factories and mines under the company, and technicians and workers of workshops and groups, who all started with the reduction of output last year. The company was required to cut its production and at the same time increase its income. This is like expecting a horse to run fast without letting it graze. At that time, the company's estimated profits to be handed over to the state totaled over 240 million yuan in 1980 and 270 million yuan in 1981. If profits to be handed over to the state in 1980 were taken as a base for calculation, they would not have enough to hand over in 1981 even if they retained nothing. If products stipulated in relevant plans were not salable, not even 240 million yuan of profits could be obtained. It was precisely this contradiction which seemed unresolvable that made the broad masses of cadres and workers of the Shoudu Iron and Steel Company feel the responsibility of a big socialist enterprise to the state. Reducing output was part of the state's strategic plan for readjusting the economy, whereas increasing income was needed in order to overcome the state's financial difficulties. This was the most concrete action in sharing the state's burdens. Pressure was turned into a driving force arousing the enthusiasm of the people. They used the method of dissecting a sparrow and analyzed each item of expenditure and cost of production. They could not specifically say what potential the enterprise had, but they knew its potential was great. They also knew that the fundamental way to tap the enterprise's potential was to give play scientifically to the enthusiasm of everyone. In June last year, the company decided to carry out reforms in management and operations and replaced the system of personal responsibility with the economic responsibility system.

In implementing the economic responsibility system, where were they to begin? Should they start with increasing economic returns or with distribution? In regard to this question, they could draw lessons from other's mistakes. Some enterprises started with distribution in trying to implement the economic responsibility system. Consequently, funds retained after overfulfilling production targets were not used just on renewing equipment of transforming old enterprises, but instead indiscriminately handed out as bonuses, causing undue confusion. The Shoudu Iron and Steel Company profited from the experiences and lessons of these factories and mines. It started by increasing economic returns. It correctly handled the relationships between responsibility, power and interests. They held that after an enterprise was given the decisionmaking power, it should put "responsibility" before all other things, that is, put the interests of the state before all other things. Only in this way could the relationships between the state, enterprises and individuals be tied together. They summed up attitudes toward quotas fixed by the state for enterprises in two sentences: We should "jump for them;" we should not "leisurely pick them up." It was precisely because they had this sense of responsibility in fulfilling their duties to the state that they were able not only to fulfill their task of handing 270 million yuan of profits over to the state, but also to overfulfill their task by handing over an additional 42,000 yuan, bringing the total to 312 million yuan. This year, on this basis, in order to increase the state's revenue, they have again planned to increase their profits to be handed over to the state by 6 percent.

Pan Huayuan, the assistant manager and engineer, told the reporters: Viewed from the production situation from January to September this year, the fulfillment of the task of a 6 percent increase if guaranteed.

Fixing Quotas in All Respects, Ensuring Their Overall Fulfillment and Integrating These Two

Speaking about the enterprise economic responsibility system, Zhou Guanwu, the party secretary of the Shoudu Iron and Steel Company, in light of his experiences said: "It is an extension and development of the former system of personal responsibility. The former system mainly stipulated requirements for production, technology and professional work but did not stipulate clear requirements for checking economic responsibility or economic returns. It was not closely linked with the principle of distribution according to work. The economic responsibility system has remedied the defects of the former system of personal responsibility."

Therefore, in implementing the economic responsibility system, we must work out advanced and reasonable fixed quotas for units at all levels. We cannot just fix quotas for profits and costs of production. We must also fix quotas for output, quality, varieties, consumption and funds in light of economic returns as well as requirements for work and operations. Quotas and requirements must be fixed in full details and must be fulfilled by each individual. In addition to fixing various quotas for production and requirements for operations, we must also fix the number of people for units at all levels in order to put an end to the situation of overstaffing and duplicate organizations.

Fixing quotas alone is not enough. Coordination among various units, departments and posts also must be taken into account in assessing the implementation of the economic responsibility system and must be linked with the work in giving awards and penalties. "Fixing" quotas in implementing the economic responsibility system must be integrated with the work of "ensuring" the fulfillment of these quotas by means of coordination. Coordination in all aspects must be linked in order to ensure appropriate production relationships of the enterprise. Some comrades put it this way: "Without fixed quotas, nobody cares about the work. Those who have accepted fixed quotas care most about their work. If everybody cares about his work, gold will easily be found and picked up in each factory."

In fact, we visited many factories, including the smelting factory and the sintering factory and we interviewed many factory directors, section chiefs and workers. They all told us the same story: In the past, we simply did our work without paying attention to various figures and took what we needed in our work without caring about its price. Since the implementation of the economic responsibility system, individual interests have been closely linked with collective interests and the situation has changed greatly. Comrade Wang Guang, party secretary of the smelting factory CPC committee, is an old worker who started working in the factory before liberation. In describing the workers' mental attitude he said: At present, all workers are "financial ministers" who make calculations on everything. Bits of iron rods are joined for use and drilling bits are also rewelded for use. Small lumps of fire clay are picked up and coke consumption is dropping jin after jin. Some workers even make calculations on prolonging the service life of each broom and tool. In the past, accounts were settled at the end of each month; at present, forecasts are made at the beginning of the month. In the latter half of 1981, 570,000 yuan was saved by the whole factory in reducing material consumption alone.

All this has explained a truth: If certain interests are not given to a production unit, the laborers' sense of responsibility of being masters of the house will become something abstract. Once an appropriate form which links the fruits of operation with economic interests is found, a driving force will emerge.

Practice has proved that fixing quotas helps define clearly the responsibility of each unit within the company and arouses the enthusiasm of each unit. On the other hand, "ensuring" the fulfillment of these quotas helps people keep the overall situation in mind, thus strengthening cooperation. Integrating "fixed quotas" with the work of "ensuring" their fulfillment will enliven the work of the whole company without causing disorder.

There Also Should Be a Responsibility System for Cadres

The mental attitude of leading groups, the number one and number two men in particular, is the decisive factor determining the results in implementing the economic responsibility system. After visiting the Shoudu Iron and Steel Company, our deepest impression is: Leading groups at all levels, from the company level down to the level of section chiefs, pay great attention to selecting and appointing capable persons to leading posts either from among old workers with practical experience and professional capability or from among young and middle-aged technical cadres with knowledge in special fields. Since the cadres' responsibility is clearly defined, it is relatively simple to assess them. Competent ones will continue their work while incompetent ones will be replaced by more competent persons and they will be transferred to other posts.

Lu Xing, director of the political department, was formerly a worker. He is familiar with professional work and has mastered technical skills. Particularly, he has a thorough understanding of the situation of leading groups at all levels of the whole factory. Sun Yonglong, director of the personnel department, is an intellectual who graduated from an iron and steel engineering institute in 1966. He is only 40 years old. He talked with us for 2 and 1/2 days running. He gave us an orderly account on each leading member, from members of the company CPC committee and the manager of the company to section chiefs and group leaders. Since the third plenary session, continuous readjustment has been made in leading groups unable to cope properly with their work.

In the second half of last year, the enterprise implemented the economic responsibility system. It was changed from the production type to the production-management type. Therefore, the requirement for readjusting leading groups first of all should be an assessment of the economic responsibility borne by each individual. He should not only be able to organize production but also be able to do management work. His devotion to his work and enthusiasm also should be taken into account. Besides, we must also assess his work in technical transformation and check his strategic views in technical development. Finally, we must assess his work in increasing economic returns. He who neglects his duties or refuses to adopt new effective economic measures because of his conservative ideas must be transferred to another post. Since 1978, 140 persons have been promoted to posts at the department level. Their average age is 44.8. Among them, 120, or 85.7 percent, graduated from senior middle schools, and 114, or 81.4 percent have professional titles such as an engineer. Two hundred and five cadres at the department level have been transferred to more appropriate posts at lower levels. Old cadres have retired, left their posts on convalescence leave or become advisers. In speaking about readjusting the leading groups, Comrade Sun Yonglong told us the story of how a cadre was reluctantly replaced. After the Shoudu Iron and Steel Company implemented the economic responsibility system, it adopted a technical measure which economized on materials and increased profits in order to ensure the fulfillment of the task of handing over profits to the state. In addition to smelting steel from iron, "waste steel" was also used in the smelting factory. By so doing, it was roughly estimated that the annual profits could be increased by 28,000 yuan. Last year, the average amount of "waste steel" used in smelting one ton of steel was 114 kilograms. Based on this, the company wanted to increase the amount of "waste steel" used to 125 kilograms.

However, the factory director held that using "waste steel" in smelting steel was "not scientific." The party secretary neglected his duties and likewise did not concern himself with the matters. In doing this, the factory director rejected the company's instruction concerning using "waste steel." Leaders of the company tried patiently to persuade him and explain things to him. This factory director, who was an engineer and director of the municipal economic sociey, obstinately refused to carry out the instructions concerned. Although the company thought that he was a capable person, it was compelled to transfer him to another post because of his conservative thinking. The manager's assistant was sent to act as party secretary of the factory and the party secretary of the blooming rolling factory was sent to replace the factory director. After they assumed office, they organized all the workers of the factory to restudy the necessity and importance of readjusting and transforming enterprises in accordance with the resolution adopted at the third plenary session. They also pooled the wisdom of the masses and improved the methods of smelting steel in accordance with the company's proposal to rationalize production organization and management in light of the factory's actual conditons. Consequently, they ensured the fulfillment of various fixed quotas. In March this year, the average "waste steel" used in smelting each ton of steel was 129 kilograms and the factory's profits reached 300,000 yuan. The profits of the first quarter amounted to 33 percent of the profits of the annual plan.

At the standing committee meeting held by the municipal CPC committee on 17 October, Comrade Duan Junyi strongly recommended to various enterprises of the municipality this spirit in replacing cadres in order to put an end to the present weak and slack situation in leading groups.

RENMIN RIBAO ON EDUCATING NEW PARTY MEMBERS

[Article by Tie Ying [6993 3841]: "Use the Greatest Enthusiasm To Strengthen Education Among New Party Members"]

[Text] It is imperative to make a general analysis of the conditions of new party members in order to make a good job of educating them. Judging by the situation in Zhejiang, the ranks of new party members have at least the following several characteristics:

1. New party members account for a great proportion of the total number of party members. In Zhejiang, there are 1.14 million party members, of whom 560,000 to 570,000, or almost 50 percent, joined the party during the "Great Cultural Revolution."

2. They are the party's fresh blood and represent our future. They are superior to the veteran party members in many aspects: 1) they are young, their ages ranging from 25 to 40, and are in the prime of life; 2) they are better educated, most of them being junior middle school graduates and some being graduates from senior middle schools or universities; 3) they are more active ideologically and more readily receptive to new things. The overwhelming majority of them are backbone elements in various construction projects and many others have become leading cadres of primary organizations on various fronts. Undoubtedly, they play a major role in making our ranks of cadres more professionally competent. As time goes by, they will play an increasingly more important role in the economic, political and cultural lives of our country.

3. Of the more than 500,000 new party members, 200,000 entered the party after the downfall of the "gang of four" and are of relatively good political quality. More than 300,000 entered the party during the "Great Cultural Revolution," excluding those who were obviously unqualified for party membership but "entered the party by crash admittance" and whose cases have already been handled. The overwhelming majority of them are also of good political quality and a considerably large number of them were basically qualified for party membership at that time and have made marked progress in the past few years. Together with veteran party members, they have, over the past years, led the masses in carring out the party's line, principles and policies and fighting amid hardships, thereby making many exemplary achievements. Everywhere and on every front, there are party members, new and old, taking exemplary actions to score gratifying victories for communism. This is the main aspect of our party's condition and of the ranks of new party members.

4. Being admitted into the party during the "Great Cultural Revolution," most of the new party members are invariably under the shadow of the 10 years of internal disorder. In almost every application for party membership, we can see such remarks as: "Taking a firm and clear-cut stand in the struggle between the proletarian and the bourgeois headquarters and between the two lines...." At that time, an applicant failing to make such remarks could hardly be admitted into the party. We should not overemphasize these remarks at the expense of the actual performance of these comrades. However, neither should we obliterate their history during this period and neglect our duty to educate them. Our party's tradition prescribes that new members should be given systematic education in the basic knowledge of the party before and after their admittance. This fine tradition was abandoned during the "Great Cultural Revolution." Even the party members who were admitted after the "Great Cultural Revolution" did not have time to receive this systematic education and undergo rigorous training in inner-party life. For this reason, they, too are inevitably involved with the question of impurity in party spirit.

What does the above analysis show? It shows the necessity and importance of strengthening education among new party members, the feasibility of this education and also the protracted and arduous nature of this education.

The 12th CPC National Congress called on the whole party to observe the party constitution and vigorously build the party into a hard core which leads the socialist modernization. This is a great objective of developing our party organizationally and ideoligically. Education for party members must center round this great objective. The documents of the 12th CPC National Congress and the new party constitution are the principal materials for teaching the party members for a long period of time to come. In view of the ideological conditions of the new party members at present, I think that emphasis should be put on education in the following three aspects in the course of organizing new party members to study these documents and the new party constitution.

1. Education in the party's objective of struggle. Why does one apply for party membership? In their applications for party membership, all write down the pledge of "dedicating their whole lives to the realization of communism." In reality, however, many new members have a blurred, abstract understanding of communism, so that once they meet setbacks, their faith in communism wavers. Moreover, many new members had impure motives when they applied for party membership. During the war-ridden years and under the white terror, those who joined our party risked their lives and those who did not have the consciousness of sacrificing their lives for communism did not decide to join our party. It could very easily be seen whether they really had faith in communism or were lying and affecting a high moral tone. Today, conditions have changed. Our party grasps the national state power.

Joining the party will not involve any risk and, to some people, may be a chance to "get promotion and become rich" and at least to "gain profits." This was also the reason why some people on the one hand heaped abuse on the Communist Party and on the other hand did their best to sneak into the Communist Party during the "Great Cultural Revolution." Therefore, it is necessary for the new party members to make up the lesson of communist thinking and communist practice which they missed. It is also necessary for every comrade to link his work closely with the lofty ideal of communism. The 12th CPC National Congress set forth the ideal of building China into a socialist modern country with highly developed civilization and democracy which is an important step to realizing the ideal of communism. Each of our party members must do his best to add bricks to the edifice of communism.

2. Education in the party's purpose. Wholeheartedly serving the people is our party's only purpose. This purpose was more readily accepted by party members during the war years. The reason was that at that time you would be unable to hold your ground and would fall into the hands of the enemy if you were separated from the masses. Today, with our party grasping state power, some comrades easily cherish the illusion that they are superior to other people once they have entered the party. As pointed out by Comrade Deng Xiaoping, they "regard themselves not as servants but as masters of the people and seek personal privileges." Of course, this situation occurs not only among the new party members but may also occur among old members. Being unfamiliar with our party's fine traditions, the new members should all the more make up their missed lesson on serving the people. Through education they will understand that by dedicating themselves to communism, they are also fighting for the interests of the people and for the torough emancipation of mankind as a whole. Our party members should be given to understand that they join the party neither for "personal gains" nor for enjoying special treatment. Whatever his position, a party member is a servant of the people, has the sole duty of diligently and conscientiously serving the people and does not have the right to seek personal gains and privileges politically and in daily life.

3. Education in party discipline. A large number of our comrades entered the party during the years of "battling" and confusion. They are inevitably influenced by anarchism. Many of them pay no regard to party rules and regulations and have a weak sense of party discipline. Some even mistake party dicipline as "trammels." They do not take part in the party's regular activities, do not accept the jobs assigned by the party, do not actively carry out the tasks given by the party, do not observe party discipline and state laws, but willfully divulge party and state secrets, act on those party's resolutions and instructions which they like, and refuse to carry out those which they dislike. Some have brought sectarianism into the party. For this reason, it is highly necessary to educate the new party members in party discipline, so that they will understand that our party which is the vanguard force of the proletariat and the core leading China's socialist cause cannot do without rigid discipline. Without this discipline, a big party like ours will be in a state of disunity, cannot continuously win the people's trust and therefore cannot lead the people in accomplishing the historical task of socialist modernization.

Judging by the results of practice during an earlier period in our province, education for new party members must be carried out by the method of enlightenment and chiefly by positive measures and examples. For example, new party members should be called together periodically to study for a few days and solve one or two outstanding problems. For another example, activities of "comparisons and investigation" should be carried out in the party to commend the advanced, so that there are examples for new party members to follow and targets for them to strive to attain.

As a further example, in the struggle against serious crimes in the economic and other fields, negative examples should be used to teach the new party members to resist corrosion. For yet another example, comradely criticism and self-criticism should be carried out on the basis of studying the documents of the CPC Central Committee. These methods have been proved effective in practice and should be continuously upheld.

COMMITTEE APPROVES DRAFT OF CPPCC CONSTITUTION

OW182036 Beijing XINHUA in English 1510 GMT 18 Nov 82

[Text] Beijing, Nov. 18 (XINHUA) -- The Committee To Revise the Constitution of the Chinese People's Political Consultative Conference approved the draft of the revision today at its fourth plenary session.

The draft will be submitted to the Fifth Session of the Fifth National Committee of the C.P.P.C.C. after approval by its standing committee, which oversees day-to-day affairs.

The first C.P.P.C.C. constitution was written in 1954 and revised in 1978.

In 1980 the Third Session of the Fifth National Committee decided to update it, and a committee was established with Deng Xiaoping as its chairman. The draft has been written after soliciting opinions across the country and committee debate.

The 50-article draft has a preamble and four chapters: general rules for work, general rules for organization, national committee and local committees.

The preamble defines the purposes and function of the C.P.P.C.C. as an "important patriotic united front organization of the Chinese people. The C.P.P.C.C. will play a great role in China's future modernization program, reunification of the motherland, including Taiwan's return, and in the struggle against hegemonism and for world peace."

The constitution stipulates that a National Committee consists of representatives of the Communist Party, various democratic parties, nonparty people, Taiwan, Hong Kong and Macao compatriots, returned overseas Chinese, and specially invited representatives.

The C.P.P.C.C. national and local committees will carry on consultations on subjects raised by the Communist Party, democratic parties and people's organizations. Members and standing committee members of the National Committee and local committees will attend as observers corresponding people's congress meetings and participate in discussions on national and local affairs. [Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese at 1230 GMT on 18 November carries a 160-word report on the CPPCC Constitution Revision Committee meeting held on 18 November adding the following: "Sun Qimeng, deputy secretary general of the CPPCC Constitutional Revision Committee, made an explanation on the changes that have been made on the constitution draft in accordance with the opinions presented by those attending the 3d plenary session of the constitutional revision committee. Liu Lantao, vice chairman of the CPPCC Constitutional Revision Committee, presided over the meeting. Shi Liang and Hu Juewen, vice chairmen of the committee, were present at the meeting."]

HONGQI DISCUSSES CHINESE FOREIGN POLICY

HK180711 Beijing HONGQI in Chinese No 21 1 Nov 82 pp 24-28

[Article by Qi Wen [7871 2429]: "Correctly Understand Our Country's Independent Foreign Policy"]

[Text] In his report to the 12th CPC National Congress, Comrade Hu Yaobang systematically elaborated our country's independent foreign policy. The CPC constitution adopted by the congress also expounded the fundamental stand of the CPC in international affairs. Consistently adhering to the five principles of peaceful coexistence, China will continue to develop her relations with foreign countries, unswervingly strengthen her unity with Third World countries, ally herself with all the forces that can be allied with and struggle to oppose imperialism, hegemony and colonialism, safeguard world peace and promote the progress and striving of mankind.

I

For every country in the world today, the question of what foreign policy to carry out is of prime importance. Nearly 150 years ago, Marx and Engels pointed out, in "The Manifesto of the Communist Party": "Production and consumption in all countries have assumed cosmopolitan characteristics...in place of the old local and national seclusion and self-sufficiency, we have comings and goings between all peoples and places and mutual inter-dependence on all sides. As in material, so also is the case in intellectual production." This quotation tells us how the world became a complete entity as soon as capitalism took shape and every country became, willingly or unwillingly, an inseparable part of this world. It was in this course of capitalism's expansion throughout the world that backward and feudal China was forced to open her door and be involved in the process of the whole world's development. This is a process which cannot be resisted and which can also be extraordinarily painful. From the mid-19th century onwards, China deteriorated from being a great country with an ancient civilization into a semicolony.

For fully 109 years, from the opium war to the founding of the PRC, China, through being forced to engage in intercourse with foreign countries and playing the role of being bullied, oppressed and trampled upon, had no independent foreign policy of its own. This long and miserable experience did not end until the Chinese people, under the leadership of the CPC, defeated all agents of imperialism and founded the PRC in 1949. One of the most valuable achievements of the Chinese revolution was the recovery of China's national independence. The Chinese people, from being bullied and oppressed, now turned into a nation able to control its own destiny, take the initiative in pushing ahead with the world's development and make its own contributions to mankind. This really was an earthshaking change.

It is not easy for an oppressed nation to recover its independence. It is not easy either to implement a completely independent foreign policy after recovering independence. Since imperialism and hegemony are still at large in the world and constantly exert pressure on these countries which have newly recovered independence, the implementation of an independent foreign policy is in itself a course of struggle.

II

In his opening address given to the 12th CPC National Congress, Comrade Deng Xiaoping pointed out: "While we Chinese people value our friendship and cooperation with other countries and peoples, we value even more our hard-won independence and sovereign rights. No foreign country can expect China to be its vassal, nor can it expect China to swallow any bitter fruit harmful to China's interests." This is a concise summary of our country's foreign policy, which embodies the spirit of independence and sovereign rights.

Independence and sovereign rights are completely consistent with internationalism. As a socialist country led by the CPC, the PRC believes that all nations in the world will, sooner or later, take the socialist and communist path; that only through the ultimate liberation of mankind can the proletariat of every country attain its own liberation; and that only through the general development of the whole world can every nation attain its own goal. In the final analysis, the interests of all nations entirely coincide. We cherish our nation's interests, and respect other nation's interests as well. For this reason Comrade Hu Yaobang pointed out in his report: "Integration of patriotism with internationalism has always been our basic point of departure in handling our external relations."

As everyone knows, different classes have different points of view on "national interest." The difference between proletarian internationalism and bourgedois nationalism lies in the latter seeking only a nation's selfish interests while the former always considers a nation's own interests and mankind's interests as a whole. As their points of departure are different, their practices are naturally different.

In implementing bourgeois nationalist foreign policy there are two situations and two guiding principles. 1) In the situation of weak national power, if the nation does not depend on a certain powerful country of bloc, it thinks itself clever and plays the "card game" of international politics. The treacherous diplomacy of the rulers of old China was a shame, and the trick of "setting the barbarians against the barbarians" which they played was nothing more than a standing joke. 2) In the situation where a state is strong, the bourgeois nationalists of the state can become chauvinist and expansionist, or even imperialist and hegemonist. As a result, they infringe upon other nations' interests, and in turn make their own nation the object of resentment and resistence in the eyes of other nations. Finally, they will be isolated in the world and thus bring disaster to their own nation. Many countries took this road in the past and some countries are still following this old road today.

Old China was for a long time a weak, enormous country. Accordingly, when our people won the victory of revolution, we summed up our own and other people's experience in these two situations, upheld our own stand which embodies the integration of patriotism and internationalism and presistently oppose bourgeois nationalism.

On the eve of the birth of the PRC, Comrade Mao Zedong declared, with dauntless proletarian revolutionary spirit: "China must be independent and China must be liberated. The Chinese people want to handle China's affairs on their own and can tolerate no intervention by any imperialist country. ...No matter how the latter may continue to oppose the Chinese People, we Chinese people will always be able to find a way to win the final victory." Soon after the founding of the republic, Comrade Mao Zedong again taught us to "resolutely, thoroughly, wholly and completely wipe out great nation chauvinism." Later, in view of the harm brought to the people of the world by the superpowers' hegemonism, Comrade Mao Zedong declared again that we would never be a superpower and seek hegemony.

It is in the above two aspects that China's foreign policy, which is formulated under the guidance of Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought, has drawn a demarcation line between itself and bourgeois nationalism. At the First Session of the First National People's Congress, Comrade Mao Zedong also definitely pointed out: "Our general task is to unite the whole people and win the support of all our friends abroad in the struggle to build a great socialist country, defend world peace and advance the cause of human progress."

Here, he meant that we must try to obtain aid from others as well as provide aid for others and defend our national interests as well as fulfill our international obligations. In fact, in the last 30 years or more, we have successfully withstood all the pressure imposed on us by imperialism and hegomonism. In the Korean war and the Vietnam war, we also courageously made national sacraficies in the struggle to save world peace. As to other Third World countries which are engaged in the struggle for political and economic independence, we never hesitate to provide aid. Many examples are available to support our claim that we are by no means parochial nationalists but are, rather, unwavering internationalists.

Marxism-Leninism not only encompasses the proletariat's world outlook but also their struggle strategies and policies. Because we have always kept in mind the overall world situation when handling foreign relations, we have been able to, in the light of the basic situation of each historical stage, stipulate our struggling tasks for the specific stage, clearly analyze the relationship between our enemies, our friends and ourselves, distinguish friends from enemies, major enemies from minor enemies, and direct allies from indirect allies, and thus correctly estimate our force in opposition to that of our enemies, and work our correct strategies to provide a concrete base for implementing foreign policy. Therefore, our foreign policy has shown a valuable steadfastness and continuity.

International affairs are extremely complicated. Some unexpected thing may emerge at any moment to bring about unexpected turmoil. Because of our scientific world outlook and a long-term strategy, we have been able to integrate our firm principles with feasible measures. We have been able to be free from the influence and control of chance occurrences, and we have never been dictated to or deceived by our monentary emotional reaction. As Lenin remarked, accommodating oneself to temporary situations means practicing opportunism. We have never practiced opportunism but have consistently advanced toward our goal.

In the light of the above-mentioned characteristics, we can say that we are implementing a completely and genuinely independent foreign policy. Our foreign policy enjoys a high prestige and has won for China an honorable image in the international arena.

III

The five principles of "mutual respect for sovereignty and territorial integrity, mutual nonaggression, noninterference in each other's internal affairs, equality and mutual benefit, and peaceful coexistence" have consistently guided China in her efforts to develop relations with all other countries in the world.

In April 1954, the newly independent China and India initiated these five principles in the "agreement concerning trade and transport between China's Xizang and India." In June of the same year, when premier Zhou Enlai was visiting India, he and Indian Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru incorporated these principles in the Sino-Indian joint communique. These five principles show that we treasure our hard-won independence, respect other countries' independence and resolutely oppose aggression against the independence and sovereignty of all countries. The five principles also demonstrate correctly the positon of a great majority of countries, particularly of the newly independent countries in the world of today. Precisely because of this, the ideas of the five principles have met with a wide response over the past 30 years. In many bilateral treaties and agreements, and in many international documents and manifestoes, similar wording to the five principles has been used to express the ideas of mutual respect for sovereignty and territorial integrity, mutual nonaggression, and noninterference in each other's internal affairs. A good example can be seen in the ten principles set forth in the final manifesto of the Afro-Asian conference held in Bandung, Indonesia in 1955.

It can be said that today the five principles have found deep resonance in the hearts of the people of the world and have become an universal norm in guiding relations between states. The norm of violence is often repudiated by public opinion. The five principles have already replaced the imperialist logic of "might is right" which ran rampant in international life before World War II. In the international life of today, if we say that due to the existence of hegemonism the five principles are still not able to be implemented thoroughly, we can say nevertheless that these principles have at least become a powerful force of morality and justice and have become undeniable legal principles in international law. This is an important progression in the international relations of the present age.

With regard to international relations in general, our five principles are suitable for all countries. Some people say Lenin advanced the principle of peaceful coexistence to guide relations between socialist countries and nonsocialist countries. For this reason, this principle is not applicable to the relations between socialist countries. In fact, at the time when Lenin proposed peaceful coexistence, there was only one socialist country in the world. However, historical experience gained since the emergence of other socialist countries in the world, shows that relations between socialist countries should also be built on the basis of the five principles. Of course, socialist countries enjoy similar social systems. In theory, they all take Marxism-Leninism as their common faith and, in practice, they take proletarian internationalism as their universal standard, so there should be more extensive cooperation and closer relationship between them. However, the prerequisite to such a relationship must be strict adherence to the five principles. Meanwhile, socialist countries must play an exemplary role in implementing the five principles. Just as Lenin said: "If the proletariat allows its nation to practice even the slightest violence against other nations, then it is not a socialist proletariat."

With respect to bilateral relations, our five principles do not repel any country. China is willing to establish and develop normal diplomatic relations with any country if it can follow the five principles not only in word but also in deed. Naturally, it is hard to avoid contradictions between countries. Precisely due to such contradictions, it is necessary to find reasonable solutions to them through application of the five principles so that relations between countries can continue to develop normally. As for those hegemonist countries which disregard China's sovereignty and attempt to force China to be subject to their interests, we cannot but wage a resolute struggle against them until they recognize that China's sovereignty brooks no violence and its security brooks no threat. Then, we will develop our normal relations with them on the basis of the five principles. But this must not, to the slightest degree, hamper our free initiative of opposing their policy of seeking hegemony over other countries. The course of carrying out the five principles is also the course of measuring strength against the hegemonists. Upholding peaceful coexistence and fighting against hegemony are two aspects of the same thing.

IV

What force in the world today is threatening the independence of various countries and world peace? First and foremost, it is the hegemonism pursued by the superpowers.

As is well known, through two world wars, particularly after the victory of the Chinese revolution, the old colonial system of imperialism feel apart with the independent of many colonial and semi-colonial countries. But, its remnants are still to be found. In addition, the superpowers seeking hegemony have taken the place of the old imperialists, constituting a new menace to the peoples of all countries in the world. Each of them is now operating its war machine with enormous military expenditure on a scale unprecedented in peacetime in human history.

They are irreconcilably rivaling with each other in almost all regions of the world. They are interfering in other countries' internal affairs by every means possible, even resorting to military force. They are occupying the territory of other countries through their agents, or even directly dispatching their troops. Through their eyes, they see only their strategic interest and do not see the interests of other nations at all. After World War II, regional wars have not ceased on the earth. Until now there are still many "hot spots," such as the Soviet aggressive war in Afghanistan, Vietnam's aggressive war in Kampuchea, the war of the Israeli invaders against the Palestinian and Arab peoples and the war against African people in South Africa. All these wars were hatched up, supported and instigated by the superpowers, or they are taking part in them themselves. The rivalry between them has become a main source of turbulence and disturbance in the world today.

The Chinese people share a common wish with the people of all other countries in the world, a wish to build their own countries in peaceful world surroundings. In order to seek peace and progress and to build their countries, the people of the world have to fight against hegemonism in the face of the war menace of the superpowers seeking hegemony. To this end, our strategic priniciple in international affairs is to cement unity with the proletariat, the oppressed nations and people of the world and to unite all peace-loving and justice-upholding forces in the world in a joint effort to oppose imperialism, hegemonism and colonialism, safeguard world peace and promote human progress.

In the struggle to oppose imperialism, hegemonism and colonialism, the Third World is playing a very important role. This is because the countries of the Third World, including China, suffered the most cruel exploitation and oppression at the hands of imperialists and colonialists in history and today they are also the main victims of hegemonism. Therefore, they are the most staunch fighters in the struggle against imperialism, hegemonism and colonialism. The rise of the Third World is a major sign of the great changes in the world situation today. The number of people in the countries of the Third World constitutes three-quarters of the world's population. Divorced from the vast Third World, international justice and human progress would be meaningless. More than 100 countries in the Third World spread to every corner of the world, covering over two-thirds of the earth's surface. They are the main force in the struggle against hegemonism because they can curb and tie up the major forces of the hegemonist superpowers and can foil their war schemes.

In accordance with Lenin's theory that imperialism divides nations in the world into the oppressers and the oppressed, and that the international proletariat must fight together with the oppressed nations, and in accordance with his call for unity between the international proletariat and the oppressed nations, we must attach importance to the unity of people of the various countries in the Third World.

Some people look down on the countries in the Third World because most of them today are comparatively backward in economy and weak in military strength. Such people also hold that the Third World can hardly play a big role in international affairs. But, if we look at this problem with an eye on the course of its development, we say such views are groundless. As a matter of fact, the Third World has become a gigantic progressive force in the world after the former colonies and semi-colonies achieved independence one after another. It has changed and is still profoundly changing the look of the world. The situation in which only a few powers control the destiny of the world is gone forever. For years the United Nations was a place where the big powers were tampering with the voting machine. Now, it has been turned into a place where all kinds of hegemonism are repudiated or are put on trial. In this world organization and on other international rostrums, many just resolutions are passed with the support or sponsorship of the Third World.

For example, the struggle launched by Latin American countries to oppose the superpowers' domination over oceans, and the struggle waged by oil export countries and other raw materials-producing countries for a sovereign right over their own natural resources have all achieved great success. Are all these not facts which many people could not imagine in the past and also cannot negate now? In opposing power politics and bloc politics, the Nonaligned Movement, which comprises many Third World countries, has dealt a heavy blow at the hegemonism of the superpowers. The movement for establishing a new international economic order is now, with the participation of many countries of the Third World, pounding at the present international economic order which is unequal and and unfair. This is a movement of great strategic significance. Although there is no demand for forming a united front among countries of the Third World, nevertheless, they have identical views and take concerted action in the struggle. This has converged into a mighty torrent, giving an impetus to the development of international relations toward equality and democracy. The development of human history is complex and zigzags, but newly emerging things always conquer huge monsters which consider themselves unbettered in the world. Now we can see that the relatively poor Third World is precisely just such a promising new force.

Apart from wishing constantly strengthening unity with Third World and other countries, China also needs to unite with all forces which can be united with regardless of whether they are governmental or popular, as long as their struggle is helpful to the cause of opposing hegemony and safeguarding world peace.

As everyone knows, the PRC established diplomatic relations with many developed capitalist countries in Western and northern Europe just after its founding. We have maintained and developed good economic and cultural relations with these countries for many years. In the last 10 years, we established friendly relations with Japan and more Western countries. Generally speaking, these relations are beneficial to both sides and have already yielded positive results. We really value these relations and will continue to try our best to strengthen them on the basis of the five principles. To be sure, there exist contradictions between these developed capitalist countries and the Third World countries. However, the former are also facing war menace and suffering from the intervention, control and oppression exercised by the superpowers. Therefore, it is not only necessary but also possible for us to unite with them under certain conditions.

People all over the world are now carrying out peace campaigns of various types in the face of an increasingly serious menace of nuclear war. Although the composition of the members engaged in these campaigns, as well as their motives, are not completely identical, we always support them as long as they are really advantageous to the struggle to oppose hegemony and defend world peace.

We oppose the hegemonist moves and war policy of the superpowers. Nevertheless, we always cherish deep feelings toward the broad masses of the people of these countries, and try our best to intensify our friendly ties with them.

For a long time, we have emphasized the existence of a serious war threat. This is by no means alarmist talk but an inevitable trend which results from the scramble for hegemony between the superpowers. Many facts in the last 30-odd years since the end of World War II have shown that the superpowers have never stopped trying to launch a world war, only to be checked by the people's force time and time again. As long as the Third World countries and all peace-loving forces in the world can really unite together and are ready at all times to struggle resolutely against the plans of hegemonists, it is possible to continue to maintain a peaceful situation in the world.

As a socialist Third World country, China is dutybound to engage in this struggle. We will strive to preserve a peaceful international environment for the magnificent cause of socialist modernization of China, and make our contributions to the independence and security of the peoples of all countries and the progress of mankind.

HONGQI ON NEED FOR DEFENSE MODERNIZATION

HK171401 Beijing HONGQI in Chinese No 21, 1 Nov 82 pp 19-23

[Article by Shao Huaze [6730 5478 3419]: "A Reliable Guarantee for Socialist Construction"]

[Text] Vigorously strengthening the modernization of national defense and further consolidating it is a reliable guarantee for the people of the whole country devotedly to carry out socialist construction.

In his report to the 12th CPC National Congress, Comrade Hu Yaobang put forward to the whole party and the people of the whole country the task of strengthening national defense. We must see the importance of this task and vigorously carry it out by linking it with our country's situation in the international arena and with the overall situation in our country's socialist construction.

Modernization of National Defense Is an Important Part of Socialist Modernization and a Strong Guarantee for Socialist Construction

The 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee formulated the strategic policy of shifting the focus of party and state work to modern socialist economic construction. This policy was set forth on the basis of the principal contradictions which needed to be resolved at home and also on the basis of our experiences and lessons of the past. It reflected the eager wish and basic interests of the people of the whole country.

In order to concentrate our energies on carrying out socialist modernization, we need a sustained, consolidated political situation of satbility and unity at home as well as a peaceful international environment. In his report entitled "The Current Situation and Tasks" delivered on 16 January 1980, Comrade Deng Xiaoping said: "As far as China is concerned, our foreign policy is to seek a peaceful environment in which to accomplish the four modernizations." "This is a major issue compatible not only with the interests of the Chinese people but with those of the people of the whole world."

However, unlike domestic affairs, international affairs are not decided exclusively by us. In the world at present, the superpowers are engaged in fierce competition for their own benefits and for global domination. They are the main cause of unrest and turmoil in the world. The flames of war are raging in many places. The 1980's will be a decade marked by great turbulance and riddled with crises. Of course, the consciousnesss of the people of the world is widening and the forces against hegemonism are developing. Experience shows that the people of the world can upset the superpowers' strategic plans through persistent, unremitting struggle. World peace can be maintained provided the people of the whole world are truly united and struggle resolutely against hegemonism and expansionism of all kinds. However, possibility is not reality. Take China's actual environment for example. The Soviet Union has amassed heavy troops in its areas bordering on China and in areas in Mongolia bordering on China. It supports Vietnam in its invasion and occupation of Kampuchea, expansionism in Indochina and Southeast Asia and continuous provocation in areas bordering on China. It invaded and occupied Afghanistan, China's neighbor, by armed force.

We are carrying out socialist construction under international conditions in which the world is far from tranquil and the danger of war still exists, and in a situation in which China's security is seriously threatened. For this reason, we must never slacken our vigilance and must strengthen the modernization of our national defense.

Strengthening our national defense is closely related to seeking a peaceful international environment. In seeking a peaceful environment for socialist construction, we need a correct foreign policy on the one hand and a consolidated national defense on the other. Both are indispensable. Hegemonists and other reactionary forces are bent on increasing actual strength to attain their goal of aggression and expansion. In order to cope with their aggression, we should definitely develop our own actual strength. When our actual strength (including our economic resources, political power and defense capability) is augmented, they will be forced to refrain from making reckless moves against us. Should they be blinded by lust for gain and stubbornly invade us, we will have full confidence in defeating them in battle. For this reason, based on the interests of our state and nation and those of defending world peace, we regard the modernization of our national defense as an organic component of the four modernizations. Building a powerful national defense is an important part of socialist modernization and an important guarantee for socialist construction. Socialist China is a peace-loving country which has a strong defense capability. Should anyone dare to launch a war of aggression against China, a crushing defeat is the only answer for them.

Our Policy Is To Strengthen National Defense on the Basis of Vigorously Developing Economic Construction

Building up national defense is a matter of great importance. However, strengthening national defense involves questions of both policy and guiding ideology.

The building up of national defense has different parts, involves work in many aspects and requires the existence of various conditions. The most important prerequisite is the development of the national economy. Building up national defense by taking it as an isolated matter is one policy; strengthening national defense on the basis of economic development is another. Practice shows that only the latter policy is correct and effective. This correct policy was first put forth by Comrade Mao Zedong in his famous report entitled "On the Ten Major Relationships" delivered in 1956. He said: "We must strengthen our national defense, and to that end we must first of all strengthen our work in economic construction." Only with faster growth in economic construction can there be greater progress in the building up of national defense."

According to the Marxist viewpoint, economic resources are the material basis of violence. Modern defense and modern warfare have become more dependent on the economy. As a result of the rapid progress in science and technology and the increasing modernization of industry and communications, defense equipment and installations need to be improved constantly and the weapons and other equipment of the armed forces also need to be renewed from time to time. This inevitably entails a tremendous increase in defense spending, both financially and materially. The needs and consumption of materials in modern warfare are beyond comparison with that in old-type warfare. Take the recent Malvinas war between Britain and Argentina for example. The war lasted for more than 70 days, inflicting heavy material damage and losses on both sides. Reportedly, Britain spent about $2 billion on this expedition. Of course, whatever the conditions in which a modern war is fought and no matter how modern the weapons may be, political and human factors play a final, decisive role in determining whether a war will end in triumph or defeat.

The "theory that weapons are decisive" in war was wrong in the past and still is wrong today. Yet, the grim reality if that weapons are playing an ever increasing role in war. Failing to realize or neglecting this point will surely lead to mistakes.

Undeniably, under the party's leadership and with the vigorous efforts of the people of the whole country over the past 33 years, we have won enormous achievements in building our national defense, and our army has expanded from a land force into a comprehensive army also including air and naval forces and other technical units. Relying on our own efforts, we have devised and produced the atom and hydrogen bombs, long-range guided missiles and other sophisticated strategic weapons for self-defense. We see this as something to be proud of. This is an important factor deterring the imperialists from launching a large-scale invasion against us. However, generally speaking, our weapons and equipment are relatively backward; they are restricted chiefly by the levels of economic development of our country. Modernization of national defense can only be a gradual process.

For this reason, we must correctly handle the relationship between building up the economy and building up national defense. The general principle guiding this relationship is, as pointed out in the "Resolution on Certain Questions in the History of Our Party Since the Founding of the PRC" adopted by the 6th Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, that "the building up of national defense must be in keeping with the building up of the economy" and, as pointed out by Comrade Hu Yaobang in his report to the 12th CPC National Congress, that "our national defense must be strengthened on the basis of vigorous economic development."

The 12th CPC National Congress put forward the objective of our country's economic construction for the last two decades of this century. Once this objective is realized, our country will have much greater economic strength and defense capability. In this sense, while striving to realize this great strategic objective of economic construction, we are vigorously strengthening national defense. If our tasks, including the building up of national defense, are separated from the central link of economic construction and impede economic development, the building up of national defense will inevitably be impeded; this does not accord with the people's interests.

On the other hand, with the daily development of the economy and the gradual improvement in people's livelihood, national defense should be modernized continuously. National defense should be supplied with increasingly better material and technical conditions and with ever better weapons and equipment which it needs. In drawing up plans for the development of industry, transportation, science and education, attention should be paid to the needs of building up national defense and launching a war against aggression in the future. From the viewpoint of national defense, first we should do what we are capable of doing, and second, we should strive to do it well. The first means that the scale and speed of building up national defense should be appropriate, should not go beyond the limits of our national financial and material capacities and should not affect the speed of economic construction. The second means that the limited financial and material resources should be used properly by bringing subjective initiative into full play and by adopting the various effective measures of having better troops and simpler administration and strictly practicing economy, so as to attain the greatest possible results. As far as the army is concerned, it must continuously improve its weapons and equipment and make full use of the existing ones so as to win victory with the available weapons and equipment. The building up of our national defense will develop steadily provided we adopt this correct policy.

Strive To Build the PLA Into a Regular, Modern and Powerful Revolutionary Army

The key to modernizing national defense is to build a regular, modern and powerful revolutionary army.

Our PLA has developed in the fire of a protracted revolutionary war. It is a completely new type of people's army led by the party, and numerous facts have proved that it is an army with powerful combat effectiveness. After the smashing of the "gang of four" and especially since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, just as Comrade Hu Yaobang pointed out in his report to the 12th party congress: "The PLA has achieved marked successes in improving its military training and its ideological and political work, in bettering its relations with the civil authorities and the people, in defending our frontiers and safeguarding national security and in helping socialist construction. It has further enhanced its military capability and political consciousness in line with the new historical conditions." We firmly believe that by working hard on this basis, the tempo of army building can certainly be accelerated.

New conditions, which did not exist before, have appeared in contemporary warfare. The most salient feature is three-dimensional warfare. It means that warfare will be simultaneously carried out in the air, on land and at sea, and it will be difficult to differentiate between the frontline and the rear areas. To adapt to the demands of this kind of warfare, we must further build the PLA into a powerful composite army able to operate in concert with various branches of the services under modern conditions. The organizational system, weaponry, strategy and tactics as well as cadre training of the army must be oriented in this direction.

The state of weaponry has an important bearing on the formation, establishment, strategy and tactics of the army. The appearance of modern weapons and the extensive application of the latest achievements of science and technology in war have presented numerous new problems to the pattern, strategy and tactics of warfare as well as to military organization. The PLA is now engaged in the world of readjusting, reorganizing and restructuring. It has emplemented the policy of improving the quality of the troops, simplified the leadership structure, strengthened the composition of all service arms and intensified composite training. This is a policy decision of great significance. The implementation of the policy of readjustment will further improve the combat effectiveness of our army.

In the building of modern armed forces, the organization and command of warfare under modern conditions require large numbers of qualified personnel in the military, political and logistic fields. In the war years of the past, our party and Comrade Mao Zedong explicitly called for "learning warfare through warfare." This correct policy destroyed the aura of mystery surrounding military work for the whole party, successfully trained large numbers of military personnel who were brave and skillful in battle as well loyal to the people, and resulted in the victory of the revolutionary war. Today's conditions are different. Qualified personnel who can organize and direct contemporary warfare must be fostered by relying on strict regular training in times of peace. In 1975 Comrade Deng Xiaoping proposed that the army raise the strategic position of education and training. In recent years, close attention has been paid to army training and the contents and methods of training have been reformed to meet the demands of future operations. All categories of military colleges at all levels have become better and better run, and outstanding results have been achieved. The modern military attainments of the cadres have rapidly improved, and the basic level cadres who have mastered the tactical skill and specialized ability of fighting under modern conditions are maturing. In the past, the battle fought continuously for more than 20 years meant that units possessed a large number of veteran cadres who had been tempered and tested for a long time in warfare as the backbone force in our army building.

This constituted the distinguishing feature and the superiority of our army. In recent years, a large number of young and middle-aged cadres with both ability and political integrity who are full of vigor and in good physical condition have also been constantly promoted to leading posts at all levels. This has injected new blood into the cadre contingent and made it more vigorous. Given the tasks and demands of the army, making the cadres more revolutionary, younger in age, better educated and professionally more competent is of paramount importance. The proper solving of the problems of training cadres and making them younger in age will be of important significance to developing a new situation in army building.

Regardless of how weaponry will change or how different the pattern and scale of warfare will be, the morale, combat will and spirit of sacrifice of the army members play a very important role in the outcome of a battle. We have absolute superiority in this respect. The commanders and fighters of our army are loyal to the motherland and the people, and their revolutionary spirit of fearing neither hardship nor death and their strict and conscious discipline are world famous. In the protracted revolutionary war, the PLA established a complete set of ideological and political work policies, principles and methods which guaranteed its consolidation, raised morale and strengthened organizational discipline. During the 10 years of internal disorder, the fine tradition of army ideological and political work was severely damaged. After the smashing of the "gang of four" and especially since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, this tradition has been restored and carried forward.

In the building of socialist spiritual civilization, based on its own characteristics, the army has developed "four haves, three stresses and two fear nots" (have ideals, ethics, knowledge and physical strength, stress military appearance, manners and discipline, fearing neither hardship nor death) activities, and outstanding results have been obtained within a short time. A large number of advanced collectives and advanced individuals have appeared, and a profound change has taken place in the spiritual aspect of the army. Along with the more extensive and penetrating development of these activities and the further strengthening and improvement in ideological and political work, the revolutionization of the army will be raised to a new level. Our army has come from the people. It serves the people and has flesh-and-blood ties with the masses. The people also always use this profile of the image of the army to judge our party and state. The quality of the spiritual face of the army has a very important effect on the prestige of the party and the dignity of the motherland and also plays a very important role in improving party style and popular custom and building the whole of socialist spiritual civilization. The report to the 12th party congress proposed that "our army will serve not only as a Great Wall of steel guarding our socialist motherland but also as an important force in building our socialist material and spiritual civilization." This shows the high degree of confidence played by the CPC Central Committee on the army, and is a glorious task the army should and also must certainly undertake.

According to the teachings of Marxist-Leninist countries, the army is an important component of the state mechanism. The "Draft of the Revised Constitution of the People's Republic of China" which will soon be submitted to the National People's Congress for consideration, has given a new definition on the position of the army in the state system and stipulated the setting up of a Central Military Commission of the state. This has been made as a result of summing up historical experiences and proceeding from our country's actual conditions and needs. This stipulation does not in any way abolish or weaken the leadership of the party over the army. The PLA is a people's army created and led by the CPC. History has proved that the leadership of the party over the army is essential for the interests of the state and the people and definitely cannot be shaken.

The preamble of the "draft of the revised constitution" has already clearly affirmed the leadership role of the party over the state and naturally also includes leadership over the part of the army belonging to the state. The various effective systems of the party leading the army, which have been practiced for a long time, must continue to be upheld. This is the basic guarantee for always preserving the quality of a people's army as well as the basic guarantee for speeding up the building of a modern regular army, and completely accords with the greatest interests of the people throughout the country.

Construction of Strong National Defense Must Rely on the Joint Efforts of People Throughout the Country Under Party Leadership

National defense modernization is one of the objectives of struggle for people throughout the country put forward by the party. National defense construction covers many fields. It is not the business of one or two departments nor is it just the business of the army. Strengthening national defense includes raising the combat effectiveness of the people's army, and this can only be achieved by relying on the joint efforts of the army and people under the unified leadership of the CPC Central Committee.

Under peaceful conditions, improving the people's understanding of national defense is an important matter. We must not waver in the least and must always adhere to this point of taking economic construction as the basis. However, we must guard against the misunderstanding among some of the comrades who seem to think that national defense construction is no longer so important. Our construction must as far as possible strive for a peaceful international environment. However, we cannot, because of a peaceful life, adopt the attitude of lowering our guard and slackening our vigilance. In particular, members of the PLA absolutely cannot slacken their combat will in the slightest, and they must be mentally prepared at all times to cope with all possible emergencies. Not having a concept of national defense will greatly affect national defense construction in normal times and anti-aggression wars in the future. Lenin, at the Ninth All-Russia Congress of Soviets, said: "Having started on our work of peaceful development we shall exret every effort to continue it without interrruption. At the same time, comrades, be vigilant, safeguard the defense potential of our country and strengthen our Red Army to the utmost." Under the premise of engaging in peaceful development, Lenin's decision to educate the people not to slacken their attitude of taking precautions was farsighted and showed a high degree of responsibility toward the interests of the state and the people. This is still of guiding significance to us today.

The strengthening of unity between the PLA, the civil authorities, the army and the people and the correct handling of relations between the army and its localities have an extremely important bearing on the construction and consolidation of national defense. The PLA is an army composed of the sons of the people and the relations between the army and people are inseparable as fish and water. If the army becomes separated from the people, it will not be able to move a single step. In the past, our people needed a powerful army for their own emancipation. After victory, they also needed a powerful army in order to keep their minds at rest for labor. For a long time, under the leadership of the party and Comrade Mao Zedong, the PLA not only developed close unity with the people but also created a series of correct principles and methods for handling the relations between the army and the locality. In recent years, for the sake of eliminating the mistakes of the "Great Cultural Revolution" and especially the aftermath caused by the sabotage of the Lin Biao-Jiang Qing counterrevolutionary cliques, the army and the locality have carried out a great deal of work under the leadership of the party, and unity between the army and people has greatly strengthened.

In the battlefield on the self-defense counterattack operation against Vietnam, in the struggle to combat calamities and deal with emergencies, in urban as well as rural areas and in coastal as well as frontier defenses, stirring deeds of the army cherishing the people and the people supporting the army can be seen everywhere. Such patriotic advanced models in supporting the army as Zhao Chenni and Ma Yaozhi, who bravely accepted difficulties for the sake of army building and defending the motherland, have greatly inspired the cadres and fighters of the units. Such combat heroes as Yang Chaofen and Yan Long, who gave their young lives in defense of the frontier of the motherland, have filled the masses with a sense of incomparable pride. The army supporting the government and cherishing the people, the locality supporting the army dependents and the strong unity between the army and people have been a source of strength in the past and will still be a source of strength in the future. We must carefully treasure this kind of unity, use various practical actions to strengthen it and build a strong wall of steel which will strike fear into the hearts of the enemies and give the people peace of mind.

The war against aggression of the future will be a people's war under modern conditions. Comrade Mao Zedong's great thinking on people's war will still be an important magic weapon of ours for vanquishing the enemy. In the war of the future, the militia will still have a vital indispensable position as well as role. In carrying out better troops and simpler administration, the army should appropriately further strengthen militia work and properly carry out the reserve service system and the mobilization system. If militia building is properly grasped, the army will have a strong backbone force and will be able to down the invading enemy in the ocean of a people's war.

As early as in 1950, Comrade Mao Zedong said to the representatives of combat heroes and labor models of the whole country: "China must build a powerful national defense army and a powerful economic force. These are the two major things. The success of these two things depends on the comrades, together with all the commanders and fighters of the PLA as well as the workers, peasants and other people throughout the country uniting as one and working in cooperation. Today, if the army and people of the whole country mobilize themselves and bring their initiative and creativity into play under the leadership of the party, the grand task of developing the national economy, the task of strengthening national defense and various other tasks can all be successfully fulfilled.

SURVEY OF COASTAL ZONES, TIDAL FLATS UNDERWAY

[Text] Beijing, November 16 (XINHUA) -- China is conducting a nationwide survey on resources in coastal zones and tidal flats, according to Yan Hongmo, deputy director of the State Oceanography Bureau.

Yan, also deputy head of the national group in charge of the survey, presented a work report at the third meeting of the group, which opened here today.

He said the seven provinces, two municipalities and an autonomous region along China's continental coast started the comprehensive survey in 1980 under a nationally unified arrangement.

Among them, Jiangsu, Zhejiang, Shandong, Guangdong and Liaoning Provinces and Shanghai Municipality have done the best jobs. The whole work is to be completed in 1986.

China has more than 18,000 kilometers of continental coastline, Deputy Director Yan said. The coastal provinces, municipalities and region all have dense populations and are highly important to the national economy.

"The exploitation and utilization of the rich resources in the coastal zones and tidal flats plays an important part in the construction of economy and national defense and the development of China," he said.

However, Yan said, the coastal zone is very complicated. "Because of the lack of a thorough understanding of the coastal zones, we have made some unreasonable exploitation and utilization of resources in the zones in past years, some of which have upset the natural ecological balance.

"So, it is necessary to comprehensively survey the resources and environment in the coastal zones to gain an all-round understanding of the natural, social and economic situation there. This will provide a scientific basis for programs on comprehensive utilization and effective protection of the coastal resources," he said.

The deputy director said the exploitation and utilization of resources in coastal zones involves the departments of aquatic products, agriculture, shipping, light industry, hydropower, petroleum, geology, minerals, conservation, post and telecommunications and national defense. The comprehensive survey should aim at promoting the development of the local economy and production.

Based on the results of the survey, a program on comprehensive exploitation and utilization of the resources will be worked out, the deputy director said.

NEW RAILWAY TO EXTEND FROM HUBEI TO GUANGXI

[Text] A new railway, which runs 885 kilometres across three provinces from Zhicheng in Hubei to Liuzhou in Guangxi Zhuang Autonomous Region will be officially commissioned by the state on the New Year's Day of 1983.

Running parallel to the Beijing-Quangdong railway, this new line, which forms a vital link between the north and south of inland China, will serve to divert much of the shipping load from the overtaxed existing north-south trunkline.

It is also expected to play a key role in the exploration and development of the rich coal and phosphate mines in southwest China.

This important railway, construction of which began in the 70s, has a total of 396 tunnels and 476 bridges with a combined length of 172.3 and 52.25 kilometers respectively. It runs through 88 stations across the rugged terrain of the three provinces or region. Construction was finished in 1978, and the railway has been in tentative operation since 1979.

Also scheduled to open to traffic at the beginning of 1983 is the 256-kilometer Yuregou-Hejing section of the southern Xinjiang railway, which runs from Turpan in east Xinjiang to Korla south of the Tianshan Mountains.

The section from Turpan to Yuregou was completed early in April 1978.

Meanwhile, construction of another key railway is under way in the vast plateau of northwest China.

Qinghai

The nghai-Tibet railway, which will be the first rail-link between China's interior with its Himalayan border region, has been under construction since the early 70s and has now reached Golmud, the end of the first stage of this project, some 830 kilometres west of Xining.

Although still in its first stage of development, this railway has already brought a new boom to the remote pasture west of Qinghai Lake, where the livestock trade is thriving and factories are mushrooming.

A fertilizer factory that uses the rich potash of Charman Salt Lake just north of Golmud is now expanding production from 20,000 tons each year before the coming of the railway to an eventual target of one million tons a year.

In south China's Guangxi Zhuang Autonomous Region, a 180-kilometre railway is scheduled to be built between Nanning and Fangcheng Harbour. This project will be financed jointly by the Ministry of Railways and the regional government.

OW090513 Hefei Anhui Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 8 Nov 82

[Excerpts] A provincial meeting to commend "five-good families" opened in Hefei on the morning of 8 November.

The meeting was jointly sponsored by the Anhui Provincial CPC Committee and the provincial government for the implementation of guidelines of the 12th CPC National Congress and the promotion of socialist ethics. Attending were responsible comrades of the provincial CPC committee, the Standing Committee of the provincial people's congress, the provincial people's government, the provincial CPPCC committee and the provincial military district including Zhou Zijian, Wang Guangyu, Yang Weiping, (Su Hua), Yuan Zhen, Lan Ganting, Liu Lianmin, Cheng Guanghua, Hu Kaiming, Shi Jingjie, Zhang Kaifan, Li Guangtao, Meng Jiaqin, Li Qingquan, Fang Qikun and (Zhang Mingyuan).

Lan Ganting, deputy secretary of the provincial CPC committee, delivered an opening speech. He extended his warmest congratulations to the meeting and expressed his highest respect for the 1,000 "five-good family" representatives and all "five-good families" of the province.

He said that, in recent years, various localities have regarded promoting "five-good family" activities a prerequisite for establishing socialist ethics and a good way to do ideological and political work among the masses. This has helped to raise social morality and improve social practices.

He said: To continuously deepen "five-good family" activities in our province, party committees at all levels must strengthen their leadership and urge party members to play an exemplary and leading role in "five-good family" activities. Propaganda departments of party committees at all levels must grasp these activities as an important part of socialist spiritual civilization and organize various agencies and propaganda means to effectively promote the movement and publicize good deeds of advanced families and individuals in the campaign so that the movement sinks roots into the hearts of the people.

At the conclusion of his speech, Comrade Lan Ganting called on all party and CYL members and cadres at all levels throughout the province to play exemplary roles in building up socialist material and spiritual civilizations, to lead the womenfolk and the masses diligently to study Marxist-Leninist-Mao Zedong thought, seriously implement the guidelines of the 12th CPC Congress, continuously enhance their communist consciousness, uphold the four basic principles, maintain ideological and political harmony with the party central committee and contribute to attainment of the strategic goals set by the 12th CPC Congress.

Zhou Zijian Speaks

[Excerpts] The five-day provincial meeting for commending "five-good families" successfully closed on 12 November in Hefei. Attending the meeting on 12 November were responsible comrades of the provincial party committee, the Standing Committee of the provincial people's congress, the provincial government, the provincial CPPCC committee and the provincial military district, including Zhou Zijian, (Su Hua), Yuan Zhen, Liu Lianmin, Hu Kaiming, Zhang Kaifan, Ying Yiquan, Li Guangtao, Meng Jiaqin, Fang Qikun and (Zhang Mingyuan).

The meeting commended 1,000 representatives of "five-good families," apartments, compounds, groups and teams and recommended 400 "five-good families" to the all-China Women's Federation for commendation.

Yuan Zhen, secretary of the provincial party committee, addressed the closing ceremony. He said: At present we should follow the 12th CPC National Congress guidelines, consider the situation in various localities as well as existing problems, and promote the "five-good family" campaign -- in coordination with our regular work -- to material and spiritual development. Currently, some rural areas in our province are suffering from serious disasters. We should, through the "five-good family" campaign, promote the idea of managing households through diligence and thrift; of providing for, and helping, oneself by engaging in production, and of opening up more avenues of production in order to surmount difficulties. In coordination with the "five-good family" campaign, we should also publicize the marriage law vigorously, advocate self-decision in marital affairs, promote simple wedding ceremonies, oppose marriages arranged for monetary gain, and strike resolutely at criminals who molest women and children. Through this campaign we should involve more people in the voluntary family planning program, vigorously promote eugenics and urge married couples to have only one child to slow down the province's population growth rate and boost production.

Through study and discussion of the opening address of Lan Ganting, deputy secretary of the provincial CPC committee, and the work report by (Zhou Xiemin), vice chairman of the provincial women's federation, delegates to the meeting summarized and exchanged their experiences in promoting the "five-good family" campaign in all parts of the province, deepened their understanding, gained more confidence and acquired a definite idea of the tasks ahead. They vowed to bring home the good experiences of all localities and inspire their neighbors to become "five-good families", apartment, compound, groups and teams, so that the "five-good" flowers of civility might blossom all over the province.

RENMIN RIBAO EXAMINES TAIWAN'S ECONOMY

[Article by Wei Daye [7614 1129 2814]: "The Trend of Taiwan's Economic Recession and Its Impact"]

[Text] From the 1950's to the early 1970's, the capitalist economy in the Western countries experienced a sustained rapid development due to many factors. Taiwan's economy, supported and propped up by foreign capital, also achieved comparatively rapid development in this period, with a yearly average economic growth rate of 9.3 percent. Following the oil crises of 1973 and 1979, Taiwan's economy has had ups and downs, with its speed of development generally becoming slower and slower or even becoming stagnated. It seems that the "golden times" in Taiwan have now become a thing of the past. There is no sign of an end to the economic recession which began with the second oil crisis in 1979. The people are without hope in the face of the present economic "downturn, depression and recession."

"The Serious Recession" Over the Last 30 Years

As a matter of fact, the downward trend in Taiwan's economy goes back to early 1979 when it came under the pressure of the oil crisis. Over the past several years the yearly economic growth rate declined sharply. In 1979, it went down to 8.1 percent from 1978's peak of 13.9 percent. In 1980, it again declined to 6.6 percent and 1981 saw a further reduction in the growth rate, to 5 percent (original estimates put it at 5.5 percent). This year the growth rate was 4.3 percent in the first quarter, 3.5 percent in the second quarter and an estimated 3.1 percent in the third quarter.

The facts are more serious than these officially disclosed figures. The annual rate of growth in the consumer price index in cities has increased continuously. In 1979, it went up to 9.8 percent from 1978's 5.8 percent. It reached a high of 19 percent in 1980 and was still high in 1981, standing at 16.3 percent. Since the beginning of this year, the Taiwan authorities, in order to stabilize society and the public mood, have spared no efforts to tighten the money supply -- regardless of the consequence of a more serious economic recession -- in an attempt to maintain the yearly growth rate of goods prices at the "low inflation" level of 1978. As disclosed by a Japanese weekly, Taiwan is "facing the most serious economic recession since the war."

Taiwan's economy originally depended on agriculture as the commodity economy was not very developed. After vigorously developing the processing industry with the support of foreign capital in the 1960's, Taiwan's economy was quickly involved in the periodically circulated economic crisis and storm of the Western capitalist system. Worse, the scope of the crisis is becoming wider and wider and the situation is becoming more and more serious. The economic recession touched off by the first oil crisis was, as a matter of fact, an unprecedented one which produced an impact people can hardly forget even now. However, the present economic recession is more serious than the previous one.

Apart from the common ground of economic recession mingled with inflation shared by the present economic recession and the previous economic recession which resulted from the first oil crisis, there are some points of difference between them.

1. With regard to duration, the previous one lasted more than 2 years from recession to recovery but the present one, even if calculating from the second quarter of 1979, has already lasted for more than 3 years.

2. With regard to the process, the previous one broke with tremendous force: its initial stages of development were more serious than later stages, and improvement came quickly. However, the present one developed from being mild to being serious and experienced a protracted stagnation. Even now, the recession is still lingering.

3. As far as damaging influences are concerned, the previous one affected very few trades -- mainly the textile industry -- and other trades such as the cement, electronics and electrical machinery industries all saw a sustained increase in exports. But the present one, as disclosed by Taiwan newspapers, "has spread to all trades, all areas and all aspects in Taiwan."

4. As for rescue measures, the rescue measures adopted in the previous recession had good and fast effects. There was an economic boom for many years before the current recession and the economic base was good. But a series of measures adopted in the present recession have been of no avail and the economic slump remains unchanged. There was only a short period of economic boom before the recession and the economic base was very weak, far from full recovery.

What Are the Basic Diffculties?

The trend of Taiwan's economic recession pointedly shows its own problems regarding economic structure. Taiwan's economic structure is a simple labor-intensive processing and assembling industry, with light and textile industries as its mainstay. The basis is, therefore, very weak. On the one hand, due to its dependence on foreign capital, it cannot stand the attack launched by the international economic storm, including the oil crises, and its present products are not as competitive on the international market as they were in the period from the 1950's to the early 1970's. This is the so-called "internal peril." On the other hand, the Western countries have been suffering from economic recession for quite a long time. The developing countries are practicing tariff and nontariff protectionism. Hong Kong, South Korea and Singapore are engaging in fierce competition with Taiwan and many developing countries and areas are developing labor-intensive industries similar to those in Taiwan. As a result, the industrial products presently manufactured by Taiwan are gradually becoming less marketable on the international market. This poses a serious threat to Taiwan, which treats foreign trade as its "lifeline."

In order to escape the predicament and find a way out, the Taiwan authorities called for the development of complicated industries and carried out "industrial escalation" as early as 10 years ago. "Industrial escalation" means the transformation of Taiwan's economic structure from being labor-intensive to technology and capital-intensive industry. This is to be accomplished by turning the present "simple," and "elementary" processing and assembling industries into relatively "complicated," "advanced," "high grade" and "high value" ones -- in short, to upgrade the organic capital and technological structure of Taiwan's existing industry.

However, despite the Taiwan authorities' appeal to 'upgrade the industrial structure" for many years, no upgrading has been achieved. There are, of course, many reasons for this. Of these, the most important two are as follows:

The first concerns funds. "The 10-year economic construction plan" drawn up by the Taiwan authorities is actually a plan for industrial escalation. According to estimates made by experts, at least $150 billion will be needed to fulfill the plan -- a figure 3 times the total investment of fixed assets in Taiwan over the past 30 years. The greater part of the funds are to come from the investment of civilian enterprises. However, due to these industries and the uncertain future and gloomy economic prospects in Taiwan, most civilian enterprises are hesitating to move forward or have even transferred their funds to foreign countries. In 1981, the growth rate in the investment of fixed assets by Taiwan's civilian enterprises dropped to 6.8 percent from the average figure of 35.2 percent in the previous 2 years and dropped to 4.6 percent from 1979's 41.8 percent official investment level. Taiwanese newspapers said: Taiwan's economy is suffering from "vicious anemia" due to "insufficient investment and the outflow of funds." It is now "pale and feeble." If things continue this way, Taiwan's economy "is likely to go into shock or die."

The second reason involves the problem of science and technology. In the past, major efforts were made in the labor-intensive processing and assembling industries. As they used simple technology, Taiwan has enjoyed unearned gains and neglected research in basic science and technology and applied science and technology. Some relatively advanced or important technical items are controlled by Japanese and Amercans in the name of "technical cooperation." In carrying out "industrial escalation," Taiwan is now confronting three insufficiencies, namely, the insufficiency of advanced scientific and technical personnel, the insufficiency of modernized technical installations and the insufficiency of large-scale modern enterprises. There are more than 500,000 small and medium enterprises in Taiwan, accounting for 98 percent of the total industrial and commercial enterprises. It is hard to imagine that "industrial escalation" can be achieved on the basis of these scattered and limited medium and small enterprises with insufficient talented people, outdated installations and backward technology in production and management. Even Chiang Ching-kuo himself had to admit: "In the long run, the principal weak point in the economy of our country (Taiwan) is the slow progress in technology."

In short, "with pursuing troops behind and no way ahead" is the basic difficulty in Taiwan's economy. By saying "with pursuing troops behind," we mean Taiwan's superiority in exports from the processing industry built on the basis of cheap labor is being replaced by that of the newly emerging developing countries and areas. "No way ahead" means that it is very difficult to transform Taiwan's scattered and backward small enterprises into large industries with modern technology. In capital and technological to tactical industries such as mechanical electronics, electrical machinery and the consulting business, all of which consume less energy and are of high value, it is meeting with more difficulties as higher scientific and technical requirements are needed in this kind of industry.

It is by no means accidental that Taiwan would meet with these economic difficulties at this time. This is the inevitable result of the Taiwan authorities' lopsided and abnormal efforts to develop processing and export industry over the past 20 years or so as well as the surfacing of the feeble, dependent and unstable nature inherent in such an economic structure under the new historical conditions.

Trend, Consequence and Impact

What are the prospects for Taiwan's economy? What are the trend, consequence and impact of the present economic recession? We would like to make some initial estimates, as follows:

1. Taiwan's economy depends on the Western countries to a great extent. The economies of the United States, Japan and other Western countries are declining and the world's periodic economic crises are becoming more and more serious. Under such circumstances, it is hardly possible for Taiwan's economy to recover. The yearly average growth rate of Taiwan's economy will drop sharply compared with previous years. The tentative plan drawn up by Taiwan's "economy minister" to bring about a change for the better in the economic structure by 1985 and to maintain a 7.5 percent level of yearly average economic growth in the future will certainly be of no avail.

2. In seeking a way out, the Taiwan authorities have no alternative but to continue to throw their lot with and depend on the Western countries. The monopoly capitalists of the United States and Japan, in order to rid themselves of the predicament, are restlessly shifting the economic crisis to Taiwan and are selling outdated and obsolete installations to Taiwan at depreciated prices. In the economic slump from 1979 to 1981, the capital of the United States and Japan surpassed their previous level in the 3 years before the economic recession, whether in direct private investment and medium- and long-term credit in Taiwan or "technical cooperation" with Taiwan.

On the average, direct private investment went up to $260 million from $110 million annually, medium- and long-term credit increased to $900 million from $600 million and items of "technical cooperation" were expanded to $130-odd from 90-odd. With the future development of Taiwan's economic crisis, the integration between Taiwan's official capital, consortiums and foreign capital will continue to be strengthened. All measures to halt the economic crisis in Taiwan will not "strengthen independence and self-reliance," as the Taiwan authorities boast but will lead Taiwan's economy to "depend on the economy of the Western countries to a greater extent."

3. Struck by the economic recession, the contradiction between Taiwan's three principal capital elements -- foreign capital, official capital and private consortiums -- is becoming more and more apparent. The three principal capital elements are united together to shift the crisis and the direct victims are medium and small enterprises. In recent years, there has appeared in Taiwan a so-called "Zhao Yaodong line," the basic point of which is that "national industry will no longer be protected." In other words, medium and small enterprises will no longer be protected.

Over the past several years, the three principal capital elements collaborated from within with forces from without, dumped goods, monopolized prices and obtained credit only for themselves. According to estimates, at least 100,000 medium and small enterprises were annexed and eliminated, and still more had to reduce production or were in a semi-operational state. In the past, proprietors of medium and small enterprises complained and cried for help, but now they grumble and fling abuses. Discontent and dissension are becoming more and more serious. In order to rid themselves of the predicament, more and more people among them are demanding to do business with mainland China.

4. The broad masses of workers and peasants and the vast number of consumers are the greatest victims of the crisis shift created by the three principal capital elements -- foreign capital, official capital and private consortiums. Even under the present economic recession, the three principal capital elements obtain high profits. According to statistics disclosed by the government, capital from overseas Chinese and foreign capital in Taiwan obtained a profit of $450 million in 1980, with an average profit rate of 16 percent and a surplus value rate of 253 percent. Taiwan's largest 100 civilian enterprises reached an average profit rate of 15 percent in 1980, and their total assets increased from $8.4 billion to $10 billion in one year. But the broad masses of workers and peasants are leading a more miserable life because of increasing unemployment, inflation and skyrocketing prices. The official figure of unemployed persons is around 100,000. Even Taiwan's newspapers have to admit that this is but a "figure game." The actual figure of unemployed or semiemployed person is 10 times that, well over 1 million.

5. Struck by economic recession, the number of unemployed or semiunemployed persons is increasing. As a result, vagabond and underground organizations are vigorously carrying out their activities, and the whole society is becoming more turbulent. The rates of crimes of all kinds -- economic crime in particular -- are increasing sharply. Compared with the early 1950's, major criminal cases increased by 270 percent in one year in the early 1980's and the average daily cases increased from about 30 to around 140. Taiwan is now full of various social problems. Prostitution, drug trafficking, drug addiction, gambling, deception, robberies and murders can be seen everywhere. Thousands and thousands of babies and women are secretly exported just like commodities. On average, almost 2,000 people commit suicide every year. Taiwan's newspapers cry in alarm that Taiwan has "entered a crisis period of moral degeneration" and "the increase of economic criminal cases is actually the beginning of the shaking of the economic base."

At present, Taiwan's economy has entered hard times "rare in the history" of the past 30 years. It is hardly possible for Taiwan's economy to recover and create a new situation in the foreseeable future. As the economy affects the feelings of the whole society, this cannot but deal a powerful blow to the Taiwan authorities who have always attached great importance to the economy and treated it as a mainstay of the society's stability and the protection of their own existence. If no great improvements are made in Taiwan's economic structure in the coming 3 to 5 years, it is quite possible that a more serious social and political crisis will appear.

TAIPEI ASSAILS FREE WORLD HOMAGE TO BREZHNEV

[Unattributed commentary]

[Text] Many Free World countries sent representatives to Moscow for Brezhenv's funeral. Speaking in terms of protocol, many of them had good things to say about the Soviet dictator. George Bush, the vice president of the United States, was among them. Mr. Bush and President Ronald Reagan are certainly not communists. It is no exaggeration to say that they really don't believe what they said about Brezhnev.

Not so long ago, President Reagan said that communism will be consigned to the ash heap of history and that he would do everything he can to expedite that process. So the appearances at Brezhnev's bier were really exercises in hypocrisy. Isn't this a weakness of those who stand on the side of freedom and against communism? The communists mean to bury us. They have been trying for a long time. Leonid Brezhnev had hoped to be one of the pall-bearers. He did everything in his power to weaken and damage the Free World. He was a communist and a bad man -- bad not only for us but for his own people.

Would the freedom fighters of Afghanistan attend his funeral? Would dissidents who fled Russia or who have been banished to lunatic asylums and Siberia? Would Aleksandr Solzhenitsyn? Is the fight against communism a struggle to the death or merely a semantic exercise? Remember the Hungarian freedom fighters? Who sent the tanks rumbling into Budapest? The Russian Communists! Who ended the Prague spring? Who compelled the Polish Communists to terminate Solidarity? How can we even pretend to honor Leonid Brezhnev, a man who was associated with the suppression of freedom all his life?

Some of the people of the Free World seem to regard the contest with communism as a game. If so, it is a deadly one, because the communists are intent upon our destruction. They know, if the free people do not, that the game is to the death, that the world cannot endure half slave and half free. Communism stands for slavery. It is a system of tyranny. Brezhnev was one the principal tyrants. He had no respect of the people, not even for the Russian people. He believed that the communists had to tell them what to do. He believed further that the communists would have to deal with freedom in other lands. He understood that liberty is contagious. If the Free World is going to pay honors to such men, where does that leave the adamancy of opposing communism? If you look up to a communist, don't you also look up to communism? Don't you admit that maybe it isn't so bad after all?

Western governments may say that they have to live with the communists. President Reagan has just called off his opposition to the natural gas pipeline linking the fields of the Soviet Union with Western Europe. He apparently decided that the Western European countries needed the gas so badly that the risk of helping the Soviets had to be taken. Such decisions may be made sometimes. The United States sells a great deal of grain to Russia because that helps American farmers. But there is a difference between hard-hearted business deals and the acceptance of communism at its face value. Trade with an enemy may be bad, but it can be identified as such and explained. People do not get the idea that a trading partner is a friend. The phoney admiration for Brezhnev is something else. People are likely to get the wrong idea. They may conclude that the communists are not so bad or at least that Brezhnev was one of the better ones.

Are we going to say that Russian leaders are good guys while the Soviet people are the bad guys? It seems to be the other way around. Tributes to communists have no place in the Free World. We ought to be ashamed that members of the Free World would go to Moscow and say such things.

Brezhnev was a brigand. That fact is not changed by his death.

AFP: PREMIER SUN YUN-HSUAN DISCUSSES PRC, USSR

OW180839 Hong Kong AFP in English 0759 GMT 18 Nov 82

[By Calix Chu]

[Text] Taipei, Nov. 18 (AFP) -- China could not afford to close its door to Western countries in spite of the current negotiation for rapprochement with the Soviet Union, Nationalist Chinese Premier Sun Yun-Hsuan said here today.

In an exclusive 50-minute meeting with Michel Saint-Pol, chief of international operations of AGENCE FRANCE-PRESSE, Premier Sun [words indistinct] China and the Soviet Union were currently playing cards against each other.

"Personally, I don't believe the Chinese Communists could close their door to the Free World, mainly because they need the technological and financial support and the market of the Free World," Premier Sun told Mr. Saint-Pol.

"It appears crystal clear that the Soviet Union is not in a position to furnish all these, and Peking can only get them from the United States, Japan and Western Europe," Mr. Sun asserted. He went on to express doubt about China's modernization programme, describing it as an "empty promise."

"Three years ago, Peking announced the modernization programme. Three years later, it said it needed 'adjustment'. I believe the Chinese Communists will continue to say so in the next three years. It is simply an empty promise to keep the Chinese people as well as the Free World on hoping."

Premier Sun predicted that the Chinese Communist regime would fall because of its paralysed economy, "a common disease in all communist countries." He noted that China had declared it would push its per capita income to reach 600 U.S. dollars in 1990. By then, he said, Taiwan's per capita income would be 6,000 dollars.

"The younger generation in China will knock down the communist regime, if communism is not abandoned and democracy restored," Premier Sun said.

Asked what the Nationalist Chinese Government expected of the Western world, Mr. Sun said it needed the moral support of Western countries. He maintained that Taiwan was strategically situated, and had been able to check communist expansion in the area at no cost to the Free World. "We should get some sort of credit," he suggested.

Premier Sun also said that although Taiwan is small it had become the 19th trading country in the world, "and we have been helping other free countries in developing their economy against communist infiltration."

Taiwan has dispatched agricultural and light industry demonstration teams to Africa, Latin America and Asia since 1961, initially funded by the United States.

"I have told my friends in Latin America that if all the countries in the area could maintain an economic standing and social wellbeing better than Cuba, the communist regime in Havana would be immediately overthrown," Mr. Sun said.

In a separate interview, Nationalist Vice Foreign Minister Fredrick Chien told Mr. Saint-Pol that he had been asked why there had not been many indigenous Taiwanese in top government positions.

He replied that 90 percent of elected local governments chiefs and parliamentarians were indigenous Taiwanese, and that "in due time as people get more experience, they will get to top positions. To push it unduely will not help," 47-year-old Mr. Chien, who is himself considered a rising star, said.

Mr. Chien also talked about Taiwan's unwillingness to "play the negotiation game" against Chinese Communist peace proposals, as suggested by Taiwan's supporters abroad.

He cited South Korea, which, he said, by embarking on negotiations with North Korean Communists, had suffered instability in the country.

"We can manage to offset suffering in refusing to negotiate with the Chinese Communists, but we cannot afford instability," Mr Chien told his French visitor.

CHIANG SEEKS COOPERATION IN ECONOMIC POLICY

OW171427 Taipei CNA in English 1350 GMT 17 Nov 82

[Text] Taipei, Nov 17 (CNA) -- President Chiang Ching-kuo Wednesday called on traders and industrialists to cooperate and coordinate closely with the government in pushing ahead economic policy.

The joint efforts will help overcome difficulties in promoting the nation's foreign trade and stabilizing the local economy, President Chiang stressed.

In his capacity as Kuomintang chairman, the president heard a report from V.C. Siwe, director general of the Board of Foreign Trade, on "The Current Foreign Trade Situation and Measures To Be Taken on It," At the Central Standing Committee meeting.

President Chiang said the government officials should pay special attention to eliminate the counterfeiting of foreign trade marks by minor traders. Such behavior should be strictly punished in order to maintain the reputation of the nation's traders and the nation's good image, President Chiang said.

Banking and financial organizations ought to be fully prepared to extend assistance to the trade and industrial sectors, especially the medium and small enterprises, to help them meet the increasing money demand at the year end as the world economy moves toward recovery next year, the president instructed.

PREMIER SUN ORDERS END TO TRADEMARK FRAUD

[Text] Taipei, Nov 18 (CNA) -- Premier Sun Yun-Hsuan Thursday instructed government organizations to take steps to eliminate counterfeiting of foreign trademarks by minor local traders.

The Ministry of Economic Affairs, Ministry of Justice and Ministry of Interior Affairs should meet to work out measures to stop such illegitimate business activities so as to maintain the good image of this nation, Premier Sun stressed.

Premier Sun has repeatedly asked related government units to take stricter measures to punish the violators.

During the Executive Yuan meeting Thursday, Premier Sun instructed these units to meet again and review the situation to work out new regulations. The counterfeited products should be prohibited from export as well as being reproduced locally, the premier stressed.

A draft of the revised "Trademarks Law" has been submitted to the Executive Yuan for deliberation while the "Patent Law" is also under study for revision, Premier Sun said.

BRIEFS

FISHERY DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM -- Taipei, Nov. 5 (CNA) -- The Executive Yuan ratified the 10-year development program for Taiwan's coastal fishery mapped out by the Council for Agricultural Planning and Development [CAPD]. The related fishery units have decided to promote the energy-saving fixed net to making catches in north and east Taiwan, Pingtung County and Penghu County (the Pescadores). The CAPD indicated that the fixed net method is a traditional fishing style in Taiwan, capable of fully using various coastal and marine resources; but in the past 30 years, due to lack of improvements in this technique, it has been eliminated gradually. Since 1980, CAPD has introduced from Japan the latest double deck improved style fixed net fishing technique. After 2 years' promotion, it has presently developed 17 new net tools and has a operational efficiency two to five times higher than the traditional fixed net. For the setting up of a set of fixed nets it requires much capital, about NT dollars 1 to 2 million, which is beyond the ability of most fishermen to put up the government is the only suitable source capable of offering the needed capital. PRC PLEDGES CONTRIBUTION TO UN REFUGEE PROGRAM

OW200248 Beijing XINHUA in English 0231 GMT 20 Nov 82

[Text] United Nations, November 12 (XINHUA) -- Forty countries pledged today a total of more than 110 million U.S. dollars to the 1983 program of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR).

The pledges were made at a meeting of the ad hoc committee of the General Assembly for the announcement of voluntary contributions to the 1983 program of UNHCR.

However, today's pledges were still short of the pre-set goal of 371 million dollars. Japan, the United Kingdom, West Germany, Canada and some other countries have promised to announce contributions at a later date. China announced a pledge of 300,000 dollars at today's meeting.

Addressing the meeting today, Poul Hartling, U.N. high commissioner for refugees, said the refugee situation in the Horn of Africa, the Sudan and Zaire remained of high priority. The level of assistance to refugees in Pakistan had to be maintained in 1983, and a significant number of refugees in Southeast Asia continued to need help.

Olara Otunnu of Uganda, chairman of the UNHCR Pledging Conference, stressed that the causes giving rise to refugee movements persisted, and all possible efforts must continuously be made in the appropriate forums to tackle the problem at its root.

ATOMIC ENERGY AGENCY CHIEF EXTOLS NUCLEAR POWER

[Text] United Nations, November 18 (XINHUA) -- Nuclear power has shown itself to be reliable way of generating electricity and to be cheaper than any available alternative, declared Hans Blix, director-general of the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA).

He was speaking at the 37th session of the U.N. General Assembly which began its consideration of the annual report and work of the IAEA today. Backing his viewpoint, he referred to France and the Federal Republic of Germany where the cost of electricity generated by nuclear power is only half of that by coal-fired plants.

He said after 25 years of development, today 291 nuclear power reactors are in operation in 24 countries. Last year, they generated 9 per cent of the world's electricity. By 1990, they are expected to generate 18 per cent and by the end of the century perhaps as much as 25 per cent.

He stressed that nuclear power plants had proven to be very safe in operation and did less damage to man's environment than fossil fuels like coal and oil. However, he said, the psychological and economic effect of the Three Mile Island accident was still felt by the nuclear industry.

Governments, plant operators and manufacturers should strive to increase public confidence by improving further the excellent safety record of nuclear installations, he stressed.

NATO PARLIAMENTARIANS URGE IMPROVED STRENGTH

OW192046 Beijing XINHUA in English 1653 GMT 19 Nov 82

["NATO Parliamentarians Call for Military Buildup" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] London, Nov. 19 (XINHUA) -- A resolution adopted Thursday by the 28th annual meeting of parliamentarians from NATO nations expressed strong opposition to any one-sided troop cuts by the alliance and called for improvement in the alliance conventional military strength.

The resolution voiced concern about the continuing modernization of both conventional and nuclear forces of the Warsaw Pact. It said technological advances in conventional weapons "offer the alliance the potential to perform with conventional weapons many of the tasks previously assigned to nuclear weapons." At the same time, the resolution stressed "the vitally important deterrent role of nuclear weapons in the alliance strategy, including the option of 'first use' of nuclear weapons."

It urged all NATO countries to examine "new conventional weapon technologies" and called for increased spending on them whole seeking East-West arms control agreement. The resolution said NATO should "refrain from unilateral troop reductions or other actions which would weaken the conventional strength and political cohesion of the alliance and lessen the prospect of success in current arms control talks."

NATO Secretary General Joseph Luns yesterday warned the U.S. against reducing its troops in Europe. He told the parliamentarians' assembly that any U.S. troop reductions "would have a fatal effect on European allies" and "would be a gift to the Soviet Union."

Rogers on Defense Spending

[Text] London, November 19 (XINHUA) -- General Bernard Rogers, supreme commander of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation (NATO), today called on allied countries to increase their defense spending by 4 per cent. Speaking at the 28th annual meeting of the North Atlantic assembly which closed here today, General Rogers said that Warsaw Pact now "had a two to one superiority over NATO" in virtually all areas of force comparison.

General Rogers urged NATO countries to work together for an adequate conventional deterrent as they key to achieving the objective of maintaining security in Eruope. However, he said, "in calling for an adequate conventional capacity which will reduce our dependence on the nuclear response, I am in no way implying that NATO should declare 'a no first use' policy or change its strategy."

Expressing doubt about unilateral disarmament, he said one of NATO's major security objectives was "the successful negotiation of equitable and verifiable arms reduction accords and control measures for all categories of forces and arms."

Indicating that NATO is muddling through a challenging period, General Rogers said that disagreements between the United States and West Europe over issues such as the Soviet gas-pipe-line, trade and sanctions "must not be allowed to erode the basic NATO consensus on collective security or to stifle initiatives directed towards other crucial alliance concerns".

NATO OFFICIAL ON MEDITERRANEAN AREA DANGERS

[Text] Venice, November 20 (XINHUA) -- NATO's unity and firmness is the crux of anti-aggression, Joseph Luns, NATO's general secretary said here today. Speaking at an annual Italian Atlantic Committee meeting, he said that the Mediterranean region faces greater dangers than any other regions, because it is a hub of material-supply for Western countries and the Soviet missilles can hit the region and the Middle East.

He said that the Atlantic alliance must have adequate strength to deter aggression and nuclear deterrent is a component part of the strength. Italian Vice-Defence Minister Martino Scovacricchi said at the meeting that his Defence Ministry is carrying out the program of deploying cruise missiles according to schedule.

This is because the West wants to balance its weapons with the Soviet ones and thinks this is the only way to press the Soviets to enter into negotiations, he stressed. According to the NATO plan, Italy will deploy 112 cruise missiles in Comiso in southern Sicily.

SHULTZ, TIKHONOV ON U.S.-SOVIET RELATIONS

["Shultz, Tikhonov Willing To Work for Better U.S.-Soviet Relations" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Beijing, November 19 (XINHUA) -- U.S. Secretary of State George Shultz and Soviet Chairman of the Council of Ministers Nikolay Tikhonov spoke respectively in Washington and Moscow yesterday in favor of improving relations between the two countries, according to reports received here today.

Speaking at a press conference held at the State Department yesterday, the U.S. secretary of state said, "we are ready to get in and discuss and try to work things out in a careful, thoughtful way." "We look for changes in behavior or indications of a willingness to discuss them," he added. Shultz outlined U.S. policy toward the Soviet Union:

-- "First, be realistic about what's going on, both in terms of military capacity, its use, the human rights aspects of the situation and other things;"

-- "Second, to be fully alert to the importance of our own strength and the strength of our alliance in the face of Soviet behavior;"

-- "Third, to be willing always to work on problems" and to try to solve them.

Shultz listed three areas where the United States "would welcome movement" on the part of the Soviet Union: arms control talks now under way in Geneva, talks in Vienna to reduce NATO and Warsaw Pact conventional forces in Europe and the Madrid Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe.

However, Shultz said the United States should not allow itself "to be deluded" away from its "convictions that we must do what is necessary for our own defense". "It is essential that we maintain the strength of our defense posture," he said.

On the same day in Moscow, Soviet Prime Minister Tikhonov made a speech at a dinner he gave in honor of the participants in the seventh session of the U.S.-USSR Trade and Economic Council. Tikhonov said, "the Soviet Union has been and is for normal, and even better, friendly relations with the United States of America. There were such relations in the past, and they can again become a reality."

He pointed out that the Soviet-U.S. relations had considerably cooled, and not through the Soviet Union's fault. He said that the United States had taken "all sorts of discriminatory measures, attempts to use various 'sanctions', embargoes, etc., against our country". Under such conditions, he said, "it is hard to expect a substantial growth in trade."

Tikhonov said that U.S. President Ronald Reagan has recently declared the wish to work in the direction of improving relations with the Soviet Union and expanding the fields where the two countries can cooperate with each other for mutual benefit. "This fully accords with the Soviet Union's wish and intentions," he said.

The seventh session of the U.S.-USSR Trade and Economic Council was held in Moscow on November 16 and 17. It was the largest meeting in Soviet-U.S. economic relations in the past five years with the participation of 250 representatives from more than 120 U.S. firms.

Petr Gorchakov, political chief of the forces, in an article carried in the Soviet Army newspaper the RED STAR, attacked the Pentagon of accelerating the armed race to obtain military superiority over the Soviet Union.

RENMIN RIBAO ON CHINESE WRITERS' U.S. VISIT

HK181209 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 17 Nov 82 p 5

[Report by Bao Ci [1405 1964]: "Chinese Writers Delegation Returns From Visit to United States"]

[Text] An eight-member delegation of Chinese writers headed by Feng Mu assisted by Wu Qiang returned to Beijing at the end of October after participating in a conference of U.S. and Chinese writers in Los Angeles and touring some cities in the United States in the second half of September.

At the conference, U.S. and Chinese writers probed certain issues of common concern and interest, and in particular held a heated discussion on the role and influence of literary works and writers in society. In the discussion there were differences of opinion and some arguments, but the writers of the two countries had identical or similar views in quite a few areas. Discussing the role of writers in present day society, Chinese writers held that men of letters ought to serve the people and write for the people's interests and that their works should be responsible for society and people. In his speech at the opening ceremony of the writers' conference on behalf of the Chinese writers delegation, Comrade Feng Mu said: Chinese writers think that only by maintaining flesh-and-blood ties with the people's life, only by sharing a common fate and happiness and going through hardships and tribulations together with people, will they be able to find the vital source and motive force guiding creation in literature and art. Most of the U.S. writers participating agreed with their Chinese friends, but one or two questioned the role of writers in society, saying that writers can hardly play their parts in present-day society in the United States. One of them said that in a figurative sense, the role of U.S. writers in present society had all the effect of a damp squib. Some of the U.S. writers took exception to the Chinese use of the phrase "the people." Such differences gave rise to arguments not only among Chinese and U.S. writers, but also among the U.S. writers themselves. In spite of this, the conference was still held in a friendly atmosphere, in the spirit of exploration.

The conference has enhanced the friendship and understanding between U.S. and Chinese writers and people and has promoted exchanges of literature. In order to further the exchanges of literature between China and the United States and to deepen the understanding and friendship between writers of the two countries, Feng Mu, on behalf of the China Writers Association, extended an invitation to the U.S. host, Mr Carsons (Ka Ceng Si), to pay a visit to China in 1983 and to consider the possibility of holding the second conference of Chinese and U.S. writers.

Following the writers' conference in Los Angeles, the Chinese writers delegation, at the invitation of Director Nieh Hua-ling and advisor Paul Engle of the International Writing Program of the University of Iowa, went to Iowa City to attend activities of "China weekend" sponsored by the program. In the city the Chinese delegation met more than 30 writers from 27 countries of Asia, Africa, Latin America and Europe. It also met famous old writer Yang Kui [2799 6652] and two other writers from Taiwan. Together with these Taiwan writers, the delegation attended a literary forum on "Literature and Society" and other activities.

As it happened, the Chinese delegation was in Iowa City at the time of our country's national day. Together with visiting Chinese writers Chen Baichen and Liu Binyan, the delegation gave a reception for more than 150 guests to mark the occasion.

After spending an unforgettable fortnight in Los Angeles and Iowa, the Chinese delegation paid visits to Washington, New York, Boston and a few cities in the West. It also held forums with writers and scholars in these places.

THAILAND'S PRIME MINISTER CONCLUDES OFFICIAL VISIT

Hu Yaobang Views Kampuchea

OW191734 Beijing XINHUA in English 1533 GMT 19 Nov 82

[Text] Beijing, November 19 (XINHUA) -- Hu Yaobang, general secretary of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of China, met with Thai Prime Minister Prem Tinsulanon and principal members of the prime minister's party in the Zhongnanhai here this afternoon.

Hu greeted Prime Minister Prem with a handshake at the entrance of the meeting hall. He praised Prem for his contributions to the development of Sino-Thai relations. Prime Minister Prem said: "We'll do our best to further develop relations between our two countries."

Hu welcomed the Deputy Prime Minister Soem Na Nakhon and Minister of Foreign Affairs Sitthi Sawetsila. Sawetsila is on his seventh visit to China. Hu said China and Thailand should strengthen their cooperation so as to compel Vietnam to withdraw its troops from Kampuchea. "This concerns not only the security of the five ASEAN countries, the security of China, but also concerns the peace and stability in the entire Southeast Asia," he said.

He said that there exists no vested interests between China and Kampuchea, and China has no ambition in Kampuchea. Hu said China firmly supports the Kampuchea's patriotic forces in their unity against Vietnam because Vietnam's aggression has endangered peace and stability of the Southeast Asian countries. "As a Chinese saying goes: 'We are drawing swords to help the bullied,'" he said. "We hope, after the withdrawal of the Vietnamese troops from Kampuchea, Kampuchea will become an independent, peaceful, neutral and nonaligned country," he said.

The prime minister reiterated support for the Coalition Government of Kampuchea, formed by the three resistance forces so that Democratic Kampuchea would have enough strength to resist Vietnamese aggression. He said that Vietnam's refusal to comply with the resolutions of the U.N. General Assembly and withdraw its troops from Kampuchea is an open violation of the U.N. Charter. "China, Thailand and other ASEAN countries should make joint efforts to force Vietnam to follow strictly the U.N. Charter and withdraw its troops from Kampuchea. China's consistent policy toward Vietnam is a correct one," he said.

Hu said there is a mutual trust between China and Thailand. "It has been the unswerving policy of China to keep permanent good-neighborliness and friendly cooperation with Thailand."

Prem praised China for its contribution to strengthening the friendship between the two countries. "We should develop the relations between our two countries with candidness and sincerity, and on the basis of mutual benefit," he said. Present at their meeting were Huang Hua and Wu Xueqian.

Hu on Hong Kong Recovery

[Text] General Secretary Hu Yaobang of the CPC Central Committee met with Gen Prem Tinsulanon, prime minister of the Government of the Kingdom of Thailand, and principal members of his party at Zhongnanhai this afternoon.

Hu Yaobang said: Our relations with Thailand have been tested for quite some time. It is our firm and unshakable national policy to coexist in a good-neighbor way, be friendly and cooperate with Thailand for a long time to come.

Hu Yaobang said: Forcing Vietnam to withdraw its troops from Kampuchea as soon as possible. Concerns, first of all, the interests of the five ASEAN countries and the fundamental interests of the three Indochinese countries. At the same time, it also concerns our interests. We have no direct interests in Kampuchea. We support the struggle of the Kampuchean people because Vietnamese aggression has damaged the reputation of communist parties all over the world. Vietnamese hegemonism has endangered peace in Southeast Asia and is harmful to the people of various countries.

Hu Yaobang also briefed the distinguished Thai guests on China's domestic situation. He said: Our national policy is: 1) to concentrate on the four modernizations; 2) to reunify our country with the return of Taiwan to the motherland and recovery of Hong Kong; and 3) to oppose hegemonism and safeguard world peace.

Prime Minister Prem said: China's consistent policy on the Vietnam issue is correct. China has contributed very much to the tripartite coalition of Kampuchea. We should urge the tripartite Kampuchean forces to unite and enable themselves to have sufficient strength to resist Vietnam's aggression.

Prime Minsiter Prem said he would do his best to continue strengthening cooperation with China. Present at the meeting were Huang Hua, state councillor and minister of foreign affairs, and Wu Xueqian, vice minister of foreign affairs.

BANGKOK POST Report

BK200820 Bangkok BANGKOK POST in English 20 Nov 82 pp 1, 24

[Text] Beijing -- Chinese Communist Party Secretary-General Hu Yaobang told Prime Minister Prem Tinsulanon yesterday that China wants Kampuchea to be a non-socialist and neutral country, an informed source told the BANGKOK POST. The source said Hu also told Gen Prem that he wanted the three partners of the Democratic Kampuchea coalition under Prince Norodom Sihanouk to close ranks and resolve their differences. Gen Prem called on Hu at the Great Hall of the People for about one and a half hours yesterday afternoon, following a second round of talks with his Chinese counterpart, Zhao Ziyang.

Foreign Minister Sitthi Sawetsila, who attended both meetings, told Thai reporters that Hu reaffirmed China's intention to maintain friendly relations with Thailand and the other ASEAN countries. He said that he was told by outgoing Chinese Foreign Minister Huang Hua during a meeting yesterday that China would abide by the UN resolutions as the basis for solving the Kampuchean problem and would also join the International Conference on Kampuchea.

Deputy government spokesman Mrs Wanida Chitman said Zhao asserted that China would continue to regard communist insurgency in Thailand as an internal Thai problem in which China will not interfere. China would give the communists only moral support, she quoted Zhao as saying. She said Prem raised the question of communist insurgency during the second round of talks yesterday. She said Prem expressed appreciation for China's wish to repatriate "misguided" Thai people living in exile in China to Thailand on a voluntary basis. China, she added, praised the Thai Government for its open-minded policy of allowing the "misguided" Thai exiles to return home.

The two parties also discussed bilateral trade and economic matters and international issues. Foreign Minister Sitthi said China had agreed to permit Thai Airways International to change its flight route from Bangkok-Canton to Bangkok-Beijing beginning next March 29. Thai suspended the Bangkok-Canton flight on November 1 because few passengers were using the service.

He said China also agreed to buy 100,000 tons of rice from Thailand this fiscal year and to expand bilateral trade, even though China is experiencing a trade imbalance with Thailand.

On Sino-Soviet talks on the normalisation of relations, Sitthi said China believed that rapprochement between the two countries would not take place in the near future, but assured that such an improvement in relations would benefit countries in this region. The XINHUA NEWS AGENCY said that Prem expressed full agreement with China's position on Sino-Soviet relations.

Premier Zhao once again invited their majesties the king and queen and other members of the royal family to visit China at a convenient time. Today Gen Prem will meet with Communist Party Chairman Deng Xiaoping. He will return to Bangkok tonight.

Meeting With NPC Vice Chairman

[Text] Beijing, November 20 (XINHUA) -- Deng Yingchao, vice-chairman of the National People's Congress Standing Committee, met with Thai Prime Minister Prem Tinsulanon and the principal members of his party at the Great Hall of the People here this morning. Deng Yingchao paid tribute to the Thai Government and Prime Minister Prem for the great contributions they had made in recent years in promoting unity among the three patriotic forces in Kampuchea and in trying to work out a solution to the Kampuchean issue.

Prem thanked the Chinese Government for its efforts to enhance the unity of the three patriotic forces in Kampuchea. He said he has been accorded an unforgettable, friendly reception during his current visit to China. "My talks with Premier Zhao Ziyang and General Secretary Hu Yaobang achieved what we had expected," he added.

Deng Yingchao said China and Thailand, who are friendly neighbors, should always live in friendship. Contacts between government officials and exchanges of non-governmental visits are beneficial and essential to the growth of freindship between the two peoples. The development of this friendship serves the fundamental interests of the two peoples, she said.

Recalling the warm welcome she received her from the royal family, parliament, government and people of Thailand in 1980, Deng Yingchao said, "recollection of the days I spent in Thailand brings me back to that country again." She asked Prime Minister Prem to convey her regards to King Phumiphon Adunyadet, the queen and the two princesses.

Also present at today's meeting were Chinese Foreign Minister Wu Xueqian and Advisor to the Foreign Ministry Han Nianlong.

Deng Discusses USSR Relations

OW200836 Beijing XINHUA in English 0815 GMT 20 Nov 82

[Text] Beijing, November 20 (XINHUA) -- Deng Xiaoping said today that China is upholding a principle in its consultations with the Soviet Union and that principle is opposition to hegemonism and preservation of world peace.

Deng Xiaoping, who is chairman of the Central Advisory Committee of the Communist Party of China, said this at a meeting with Thai Prime Minister Prem Tinsulanon and principal members of his party in the Great Hall of the People here this morning. They exchanged views on bilateral relations and international issues of mutual interest.

Referring to Sino-Soviet relations, Deng Xiaoping said: "We are still making contacts with the Soviet Union. But our consultations with the Soviet Union on the normalization of relations are based on one principle, namely opposition to hegemonism and preservation of world peace."

The superpowers' threats in the Asia-Pacific region are still there, he said. The Soviet Union is augmenting its military forces in this region, and the United States is unpopular because of its acts of intervention in this region.

Deng said the Kampuchean people's struggle against Vietnamese aggression is a protracted one, and its final victory is not determined by any temporary success or setback. "We should firmly support the three patriotic forces of Kampuchea in their fight against the Vietnamese invaders," he said.

Deng Xiaoping said Sino-Thai relations are firm and natural. Neither side tries to impose its views on the other. The two countries have established and developed their relations in the spirit of mutual understanding and cooperation. He said that China is willing to develop relations with other ASEAN countries. It is not an expediency but a long-term strategic policy. China will also develop friendly relations of cooperation with other Third World countries in the Asia-Pacific region.

Prem Tinsulanon expressed satisfaction with the wide-ranging talks he had with Premier Zhao Ziyang and General Secretary Hu Yaobang. These talks proceeded in a very friendly atmosphere and were a complete success, he said.

Deng Xiaoping gave a luncheon for the Thai guests after the meeting. State Councillor Huang Hua and Foreign Minister Wu Xueqian were present.

Prem News Conference

OW201124 Beijing XINHUA in English 1109 GMT 20 Nov 82

[Text] Beijing, November 20 (XINHUA) -- Thai Prime Minister Prem Tinsulanon today called for freeing Southeast Asia from the influence of superpower conflict. He made this call at a press conference he gave here for Chinese and Thai journalists this afternoon.

Prem said that the people of most Southeast Asian countries lost their freedom and independence under the influence of superpower rivalry in the old days. Now, the trend of rivalry between the superpowers from without and their intervention in the internal affairs of this region has not come to an end.

To achieve their objectives, Prem said, the ASEAN countries have cooperated in the economic, social, cultural and political areas. They demand that Southeast Asia be turned into a region of peace, freedom and neutrality and be freed from the influence of superpower conflict, he said.

The formation of the Coalition Government in Democratic Kampuchea, he said, is one of the major efforts Thailand has made toward a political solution to the Kampuchea issue. It also represents the Kampuchean's aspiration for determining their own destiny.

The joint struggle waged by the patriotic forces in Kampuchea to regain their national independence has won all-out support from the international community, Prem said.

"I am convinced," he said, "the Kampucheans will succeed in regaining independence and freedom for their nation and further in benefiting the peace, stability and security of Southeast Asia."

Referring to bilateral relations, Prem said Sino-Thai relations have developed smoothly on the basis of the five principles of peaceful coexistence, friendship, mutual trust, equality and cooperation in political, economic and other fields in the interests of both sides. "These international principles are not only beneficial to both sides, but also to promoting the ties and understanding between the governments and peoples of the two countries," he said. "We hope that Sino-Thai relations will develop constructively so as to safeguard the interests of the two countries and defend peace and stability in Southeast Asia and Asia as a whole."

The Thai prime minister said that there are bright prospects for the development of Thai-Chinese relations in the economic, cultural, scientific and technological fields. There are trade, scientific and technological and air service agreements between the two countries, which are beneficial to the development of bilateral relations. It is estimated that the trade volume between China and Thailand will be 24 times the 1975 figure.

Prem expressed the hope that the cultural, scientific and technological exchanges between the two countries will continue to grow. He said that the development of Thai-Chinese relations will be conducive to the economy and the life of the people of the two countries. Referring to the fifth economic and social development plan of Thailand, Prem said this plan aims at developing agriculture and industry and raising the living standards of the peasants -- the majority of the population. To achieve this goal, the Thai Government will absorb foreign funds, build plants, improve telecommunications and transport services and provide more jobs for the rural population.

These relations benefit both countries and enhance contacts and understanding between the private sectors and the governments of the two countries. Therefore, he hopes that Thai-PRC relations will continue to develop constructively in the interest of peace and stability in Southeast Asia and Asia as a whole.

Asked by newsmen about Thailand's economic development, the prime minister said the fifth national and social development plan stresses agricultural and industrial development in order to improve the living conditions of the people and the income of the farming people who make up the majority of the population. [Text] Cairo, November 18 (XINHUA) -- A senior Egyptian official has declared that the Israeli settlement policy in the occupied Arab territories constitutes a "threat to peace" and "hinders the peace process" in the Middle East.

Usamah al-Baz, first assistant to the foreign minister, said, "if the United States is unable to move Israel from this policy, much of its own credibility shall be shattered in the eyes of most Arabs including the Egyptians, because the U.S. is providing Israel with vast amounts of aid and most sophisticated weapons and it should be able to influence the Israeli policy."

Talking to XINHUA correspondents in an exclusive interview at his office today and yesterday, Al-Baz, who is also director of the president's office for political affairs, said first of all there should be an immediate Israeli withdrawal from Lebanon. "We can not resume the negotiations when any part of Lebanon is under Israeli occupation," he said. After Israeli withdrawal from Lebanon, he continued, "we can concentrate on creating the right conditions and environment for effecting the participation of Jordan and the Palestinians in the negotiations."

He went on to say, "the Palestinian people should be given the right to select their spokesman in the negotiations without outside interference. Neither the United States nor anybody else has the right to say whether a certain group is a true representative or not, let alone any guardianship or imposition." "Since the Palestinian people have chosen the Palestine Liberation Organization as their representative, the United States should not give itself the right to challenge that," he stated.

Al-Baz rebuffed the view of some Americans who insisted that the Palestine Liberation Organization was not elected. He said liberation movements are usually not elected, but emerge as an expression of the will of the people who are fighting against colonialism and foreign domination. As to the PLO, there has been a process of election by certain representatives of the Palestinian people at their national congress. The U.S. attitude seems to be a "deliberate decision to ignore the will of the Palestinian people," he said.

Concerning a link between the Jordanians and the Palestinians, Al-Baz believed that "the most suitable form for this link is a confederation that guarantees coordination and cooperation between the two entities, not the dissolution of one into the other, or a merger of the two."

Turning to the current relationship between Egypt and Israel, Al-Baz described it as "normal", adding that "we are just two neighbors living in peace." However, the "quality" of the two countries' relations is determined by the Israeli behaviors in the region, first of all by its attitude towards the Palestinian issue. He said, "if Israel continues to threaten the security and stability of different Arab countries as it did when it conducted the raid on the Iraqi reactor and launched its offensive in Lebanon, this will definitely influence the quality of the relations."

Referring to the relationship between Egypt and other Arab countries, Al-Baz noted that "tension has disappeared, given way to cooperation which is increasing steadily." He stressed that there is no contradiction between the interests of Egypt and those of other Arab countries and that all Arab countries "share an interest in the maintenance of peace and security in the region, in the resistance of foreign exploitation and intervention, and in improving the life of the people." He said, "at this stage, we are not concerned with the resumption of diplomatic relations. The important thing is that we should join forces or at least work in parallel lines in the same direction of liberating the Palestinian land and defending the Arab region against foreign intervention."

With regard to the Iraqi-Iran war, Al-Baz reiterated Egypt's stand against this war as from the very beginning. He said that Egypt provided Iraq with badly needed weapons with a view to stopping the war. He said, "Iran decided to continue the war with the purpose of toppling the Iraqi government. This is a serious precedent that should never emerge between two countries belonging to the Third World and the Non-Aligned Movement."

Al-Baz declared that Egypt belongs to the Arab world, the African countries and the Third World countries. He said, "We consider the Arab, African and Third World countries as our partners in our march for progress and peace. The rest of the world can only be our friends if their interests coincide with those of Egypt, but not our allies."

EGYPT HOLDS MILITARY EXERCISES IN SINAI 19 NOV

[Text] Cairo, November 18 (XINHUA) -- Egypt's Second Army today staged a live ammunition maneuver in Sinai Peninsula. Long-range field artillery and anti-tank guided missiles were used in addition to fighter planes and mechanised infantry units.

Egyptian Defense Minister 'Abd al-Halim Abu Ghazalah, who watched the maneuver, told reporters that it was defensive in character and "we are for peace." He said "we have plans to rebuild our armed forces" and "to keep our armed forces equipped with the most up-to-date equipment to defend our country and to be ready for facing any threats around us".

Referring to his forthcoming visit to Washington, the defense minister hoped the reports that the United States may reduce the size of military assistance to Egypt will turn out to be untrue. "It would be detrimental to the Egyptian rearming program and very detrimental to the situation in the area", he asserted.

He said that Egypt is asking for more equipment and has bought arms from many countries. Egyptian troops reportedly carried out another maneuver in Sinai a week ago.

The Sinai Peninsula was taken by Israel in 1967 and has been returned to Egypt last April.

SYRIA'S AL-ASAD MEETS U.S. CONGRESSIONAL GROUP

OW182112 Beijing XINHUA in English 1523 GMT 18 Nov 82

[Text] Damascus, Nov. 18 (XINHUA) -- President Hafiz al-Asad said yesterday that Syria will not impose any conditions for the evacuation of its troops from Lebanon when Israeli occupation comes to an end. This statement, made by the Syrian president to a visiting U.S. congressional delegation here yesterday, was carried in today's local newspapers.

Syrian troops entered Lebanon in 1976 in accordance with a mandate of the Arab summit. Israeli troops invaded Lebanon last June.

Al-Asad said, "Syria wants to see security and national unity re-established in Lebanon and the authority of the state extended throughout the country." Al-Asad told the Americans that the U.S. Middle East peace proposal put forward by President Ronald Reagan did not take into account all the foundations of a fair settlement to the Middle East problem. There is no bargaining over certain conditions such as Israeli withdrawal from all the territories occupied since 1967 and the recognition of the rights of the Palestinian people, the president added.

Al-Asad accused Israel of rejecting peace, saying that this is because Israel thinks that with substantial U.S. aid, it can challenge the world public opinion and continue its aggression in defiance of any resolutions adopted by international organizations.

He assured Mugabe of American support in his attempt to lead the country to political and economic stability. At a banquet given by Mugabe in honor of Bush this week, Mugabe said that Zimbabwe, through OAU, firmly supported the Southwest African People's Organization in its liberation struggle and wanted to see a speedy resolution of the Namibian problem and establishment of peace in that country.

In reply, Bush said that the American Government wants a Namibian settlement too and has spared no effort in striving for a solution.

[Text] Lusaka, November 19 (XINHUA) -- Zambian President David Kaunda Thursday urged the United States to intensify its initiative in finding a peaceful solution to the Namibian problem.

Kaunda told the visiting American Vice-President George Bush at a dinner that the present situation in Namibia and South Africa is very unhealthy. Unless a quick solution is found, he noted, the whole southern African region would be involved in a big conflict.

The president asked Bush to seize the opportunity to determine the best way of solving the problem. Before leaving for Kenya this morning after his one-day visit here, the American Vice-President stated that he had an impression that the United States shares Zambia's concern for this region.

"The United States, you and other frontline states, are working hard to end the scourge of the civil war, and bring the peaceful independence to Namibia, so that we can turn our attention from conflict to this region's need for economic progress," Bush said.

SELF-CRITICISM ON ZHAO YIYA ARTICLE PUBLISHED

[Editorial department article: "Self-Criticism for Publishing an Article With Grave Mistakes"]

[Text] This paper and JIEFANGJUN BAO on 28 August simultaneously published Comrade Zhao Yiya's article "Communist Ideology Is the Core of Socialist Civilization." This is an article written under a correct title but containing serious theoretical and political mistakes. On 27 September JIEFANGJUN BAO published an article by its editorial department, "An Article With Serious Mistakes" (which this paper reprinted on 28 August) making a comprehensive and profound analysis of the mistakes in Zhao Yiya's article and bringing a number of questions to the due theoretical and political level. Presenting facts and reasoning things out, this article is very convincing as its criticism is both solemn and sincere. We completely agree with the JIEFANGJUN BAO editorial department article's analysis and criticism of Zhao Yiya's article and we have received a profound education from it.

Reading the article today, the serious mistakes in Comrade Zhao Yiya's article are very obvious. Under the general proposition that spiritual civilization has a class nature, Zhao's article not only states that each specific content of spiritual civilization has a class nature but the contents of material civilization also have this nature. In the name of "giving prominence to the three precepts," the Zhao article fabricates the totally non-existent issue of the so-called four precepts "negating" the three precepts and sets the building of ideology against the building of civilization -- setting the three precepts of having lofty ideals, moral integrity and a sense of discipline against the precept of having education. The article implies that stressing education would weaken the function of communist ideology and hamper the raising of people's political consciousness. Zhao's article also holds that the key to the emergence of the trend of bourgeois liberalization inside and outside the party is the lax and weak leadership on the ideological front. It then reproaches "some individual responsible comrades" in the theoretical, literary and art, and journalistic circles and even reproaches the overall "ideological guidance" of the party. It appears to him that our leadership has failed to maintain ideological sober-mindedness because such things as what should be advocated, what should be opposed, and what should attract our attention in inner-party education and in public propaganda are not quite clear and specific. Just as the article by the JIEFANGJUN BAO editorial department has pointed out, Comrade Zhao Yiya's article is propagating a kind of "left" viewpoint under the pretext of opposing bourgeois liberalization. In publishing such an article, which contradicts certain important contents of the report to the 12th CPC National Congress, thereby propagating the above-mentioned "left" viewpoints, our paper's mistakes are grave and we should conduct serious and conscientious self-criticism.

Why did we carry Comrade Zhao Yiya's erroneous article? Principally because there was the remaining poisonous influence of "left" ideas in our minds. So, we not only failed to discern the grave mistakes in Zhao's article but believed that his article was propagating socialist civilization with communist ideology at the core and, therefore, we hurriedly reprinted it in a prominent place in our paper, thereby extending the influence of its mistakes and causing very bad consequences.

1. Having been under the influence of the erroneous idea of "taking class struggle as the key link" for quite a long time, we frequently considered certain social phenomena to have a class nature when actually they did not. Such remaining poisonous influences were not totally eliminated until now. Therefore, we failed to detect that Zhao's article ran counter to Marxist "class analysis" and, on the contrary, believed that the author was stressing "class nature." This belief of ours is wholly erroneous. Under the conditions when class and class struggle exist, we should observe and handle social phenomena and contradictions having the nature of class struggle firmly and from a Marxist class standpoint. However, Marxism has opposed indiscriminate application of the class viewpoint and the method of class analysis all along. Indiscriminate application of the class viewpoint and the class analysis method is virtually distorting Marxism, which can only create ideological confusion and precisely impede the building of socialist civilization with communist ideology at the core.

2. Due to the influence of the erroneous viewpoint which belittles education, science and culture and due to our insufficient understanding of the dialectic relations between the building of ideology and the building of civilization which combine and promote each other, we failed to notice that the so-called "giving prominence to the three precepts" in Zhao's article was actually negating the vital significance of education in building socialist material and spiritual civilization and failed to note that expositions in his article were contradictory to the party's consistent policies. When our party was placing education and science in an important strategic status and scientifically expounding the important role of culture in modernization, our publication of Comrade Zhao Yiya's erroneous article which downgrades the role of culture was very detrimental to the stepped up efforts to build culture and to the task of selecting and promoting cadres strictly on the basis of being more revolutionary, younger, better educated and professionally more competent.

3. Since the 3d plenary session of the 11th party Central Committee, the party's ideological guidance on both opposing the "left" erroneous tendency and keeping alert for and opposing the right deviationist trend of bourgeois liberalization on the ideological front has been very clear, specific and consistent. In August last year, the party Central Committee called a discussion meeting on problems on the ideological front and set forth the principles, policy and methods for strengthening the leadership to imporve the lax and weak condition and overcome the trend of bourgeois liberalization. Marked results have been achieved in the past year. We did know these things. However, we did not fully understand the party Central Committee's principles, policies and methods for solving the problems on the ideological front, nor fully understand its requirement for handling practical problems according to Marxist scientific and comprehensive method. In addition, there was the influence of "left" ideas in our attitude toward liberalization. As a result, we did not pay sufficient attention to such grave political and organizational mistakes as reproaching, in disregard of the facts, the "individual responsible comrades" in various circles and even reproaching the party's entire "ideological guidance" and we indiscreetly carried Comrade Zhao Yiya's article without serious study. This is extremely reckless. The consequences are extraordinarily serious.

In addition ot the remaining influence of "left" ideology, we also have committed organizational mistakes. As an organ of the Shanghai Municpal CPC Committee, we carried an article dealing with matters involving the over-all situation and, in particular, reproaching "individual responsible comrades" of the three circles and the party's entire "ideological guidance" -- without permission, without asking for instructions beforehand and without reporting to the leadership of the municpal CPC committee afterwards. This was not in line with the position of a local party paper and seriously violated the party's organizational principle.

In short, we erred both politically and organizationally in publishing Comrade Zhao Yiya's article. The fundamental cause of this error was our failure to study fully and grasp the party's line, principles and policies after the 3d plenary session of the 11th party Central Committee, our failure to eliminate thoroughly the "left" ideas and our failure to keep a correct ideological line. We must learn a lesson from this mistake. While studying the 12th congress documents, we must at the same time study all the important documents after the 3d plenary session of the 11th party Central Committee, continue efforts to eliminate the influence of the "left" ideas, truly guide our thinking and propaganda with the program, principles and policies formulated by the 12th party congress, resolutely overcome the interference of "left" and right erroneous deviations and ideologically and politically keep in unison with the party Central Committee at all times.

"A fall into the pit, a gain in our wit." The mistake this time has given us profound education. We are determined, under the guidance of the spirit of the 12th CPC National Congress and under the correct leadership of the Shanghai Municipal CPC Committee, to sum up our experiences, conscientiously take the lesson, correct our mistake and with enhanced vigor do a still better job in our paper's propaganda work.

BA YI RADIO DEFENDS CURRENT PURGED PLA LEADERS

OW191822 (Clandestine) Ba Yi Radio in Mandarin to China 1325 GMT 18 Nov 82

[Text] Recently somebody accused PLA senior cadres of being influenced by the leftist tendency and urged them to take the lead in eliminating the leftist influence and following the correct line. The accusation, which is undoubtedly aimed at making the senior cadres the targets of the current anti-leftist campaign, is, however, contrary to the facts. Historical facts prove that an overwhelming majority of PLA leaders have displayed Comrade Peng Dehuai's dauntless spirit in firmly resisting the leftist tendency. It should be pointed out especially that during the decade of turmoil when the gang of four persecuted a large number of party and government leaders, it was only the PLA and its leaders who struck back at the ultra-leftist tendency by dealing ruthless blows at smash-and-grabbers, sheltering many outstanding party cadres and protecting state property. In view of these facts, how can one accuse the PLA senior cadres of making leftist errors and use the accusation as a pretext to dismiss them from their posts or force them to retire?

Speaking at a meeting of leading cadres at and above the divisional level of the Guangzhou PLA units, Comrade Wang Zhen accused the units' leading cadres of being seriously influenced by the leftist tendency and, under this pretext, of carrying out a so-called rectification of the leadership of the Guangzhou PLA units. Commander Wu Kehua and other comrades of the units were dismissed from their posts. However, it is well known to all that during the Cultural Revolution the leading comrades of the Guangzhou PLA units, following the instructions of Marshal Ye and Huang Yongsheng, resisted the leftist tendency and struck at the smash-and-grabbers. Because of their resistance to the leftist tendency some leading PLA comrades were suppressed and persecuted by the gang of four. Therefore it is unreasonable to accuse the PLA leaders of having erroneous leftist views and, thus, relieve them of their duty.

At the present time, all localities are carrying out the campaign against the leftist tendency within the PLA and are directing the spearhead of attack at the senior army leaders. They have groundlessly attacked Wu Kehua, Nie Fengzhai, Zhang Caiqian, Du Yide, Rao Shoukun and many other comrades.

The bitter lessons we have learned from history remind us that somebody is obviously trying to use the current anti-leftist campaign to carry out another purge throughout the army to liquidate the dissenters. True, appropriate reform is needed in the army, but the method of a political campaign should not be used to liquidate the dissenters. It is well known to all that the resolution adopted by the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee strictly forbids the launching of a political campaign in the future. The 12th CPC National Congress as reaffirmed the resolution of the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee. Nobody should violate this resolution.

SUN YEFANG ON QUADRUPLING OUTPUT IN 20 YEARS

[Article by Sun Yefan [1327 0396 2455]: "There Are Not Only Political But Also Technical and Economic Guarantees for Quadrupling Output Value in 20 Years -- Also Discussing the Notion 'Big Base, Low Speed' as Not Being a Law"]

[Text] In his report to the 12th party congress Comrade Hu Yaobang pointed out: "The general objective of China's economic construction for the two decades between 1981 and the end of this century is, by steadily working for more and better economic results, to quadruple the gross annual value of industrial and agricultural production -- from 700 billion yuan in 1980 to 2,800 billion yuan or so in the year 2000." The grand strategic objective unanimously approved by the 12th party congress has enhanced the morale of the people of the whole country, who are determined to advanced bravely and redouble their efforts to attain this grand objective. However, there are also some people who do not have much faith in quadrupling the output value in 20 years. They reason that a short while ago, the slogan was still to "ensure a 4 percent increase and strive for 5." Now that we want to quadruple the output value in 20 years, there should be an annual growth of 7.2 percent. Does not this mean that we are again committing past errors of exaggeration and rash advance? Moreover, for many years the convention "big base, slow speed" has also fettered people's minds. They think that since the speed laid down in the Sixth 5-Year Plan is to "ensure a 4 percent increase and strive for 5," therefore, according to this "law," the future speed can only be longer, not higher.

It should be pointed out explicitly that these views are wrong. There are not only political but also technical and economic quarantees for quadrupling the output value in 20 years. Just as Comrade Hu Yaobang pointed out in his report to the 12th party congress, this grand objective is a strategic objective for economic construction which the party has formulated in a spirit of realism. I think, so long as the whole party and the nation make concerted efforts, not only can we have complete assurance of attaining this grand objective but also that we can attain it "by steadily working for more and better economic results" as pointed out by Comrade Hu Yaobang in his report. I shall try to explain my views as follows. It is hoped that the readers, particularly economists and practical economic workers, will point out mistakes so that they can be corrected.

I

First of all, it should be pointed out that, according to our historical experience in the 33 years since the founding of the PRC, an annual growth of 7.2 percent in the gross annual output value of industrial and agricultural production cannot be considered high. Let us exclude the exceptional situation during the 3 years of economic rehabilitation in the early years of the PRC (the gross output value of industrial and agricultural production of that time increased at an average of 21.8 percent annually).

From 1953 to 1981, the annual growth rate of the gross value of industrial and agricultural production was 8.1 percent. In my article "Readjustment, Reorganization and Speed" published on 14 September 1981 in SHIJIE JINGJI DAOBAO No 50, I stated:

"In the 3 years of economic rehabilitation of the early postliberation period, our annual industrial growth was as high as 20-30 percent. If, due to its special characteristics, the rehabilitation period could not be used as evidence, then, our average industrial growth in the First 5-Year Plan period was 18 percent annually. At that time, there was no practice of exaggeration or giving arbitrary and impracticable directions. In the early 1960's, from the time of the meeting which was attended by 7,000 people and summed up the experiences and lessons of the 3 years of great difficulties, up to the start of the 10 years of upheaval in 1966, our industry again developed at a steady rate of 17.9 percent annually. It was a period of 'readjustment, consolidating, filling-out and raising standards' and there was no practice of exaggeration or of giving arbitrary and impracticable directions."

"An important cause of our failure to attain a high speed ties in with our failure to do a good job of readjustment and restructuring. The cause of our failure to do a good job of readjustment and restructuring lies in the fact that the people are not so united, and some leading bodies are not so pure, as they were at that time. For example, some people refuse to act according to the principles of the CPC Central Committee. In these circumstances, in order to do a good job of economic readjustment and institutional reform, it is necessary to do a good job of the struggles on the ideological and political fronts. It is necessary to oppose both 'leftism' and right liberalism. With respect to those people who refuse to act according to the line and principles of the CPC Central Committee or are slack in their work, it is necessary to educate them or transfer them to other posts."

The current situation is better still than it was last year when I wrote the article "Readjustment, Reorganization and Speed." After several years of arduous work, we have won major victories in bringing order out of chaos in practical work on all fronts. A political situation characterized by stability and unity has taken shape and is being increasingly consolidated. The report to the 12th party congress has also proclaimed the building of a high level of socialist civilization as a strategic principle for building socialism, and that the success or failure of socialism depends on whether or not we adhere to this principle. At the same time, the report has also made a systematic and detailed exposition of the question of "striving to build a high level of socialist spiritual civilization" by dealing with it as a special aspect. It holds that only with a high level of socialist democracy will it be possible to develop all our undertakings in accordance with the will, interests and needs of the people, to enhance the people's sense of responsibility as masters and give full play to their initiative and enthusiasm. The 12th party congress has also decided to conduct a conscientious consolidation of party organizations, which will proceed by stages and by groups over a period of 3 years beginning from the latter half of 1983, so as to effect a fundamental turn for the better in the style of the party and thus bring about a fundamental turn for the better in standards of social conduct. All these provide an important political guarantee for carrying out socialist construction and attaining the objective of quadrupling the gross annual value of industrial and agricultural production by the end of this century. In retrospect, an important reason for the major setbacks in our economic construction in the past 30-odd years lies in the lack of socialist democracy, particularly the lack of democracy with the party.

I think, therefore, so long as we resolutely implement the policy decisions and principles of the 12th party congress cited above, consolidate the party work style and bring about a fundamental improvement in standards of social conduct, the initiative and creativity of the broad masses of people will be greatly aroused and thus vigorously promote our production and construction.

II

The most direct technical and economic guarantee for quadrupling the total annual output value of industrial and agricultural production is the correct road which we have already found to the speedy development of agriculture and industry.

Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, a highly favorable situation has been created for developing our country's agriculture as a result of gradually liquidating the wrong "leftist" guiding thought, adopting flexible policies, instituting production responsibility systems of various forms and advocating scientific farming. The total agricultural output value in 1978 topped that of 1977 by 9 percent. On this basis, the total agricultural output value in 1979 topped that of 1978 by 8.6 percent, with its growth rate surpassing that of the total industrial output value. The total output value of grain, cotton and oil-bearing crops also surpassed the highest levels of the past. In 1980 and 1981, many areas in our country were attacked by serious flood and drought. Nevertheless, because the correct policy was adopted, it was possible to arouse the enthusiasm of the rural cadres and commune members in production, to alleviate the harm done to agricultural production and to increase the capacity for self-salvation by developing production. Total agricultural output value in 1980 and 1981 topped that in 1979 by 2.7 percent and 5.7 percent respectively. Among other things, total output value of such cash crops as cotton, edible oil and sugar continued to increase by a big margin. New headway was made in forestry, animal husbandry, fishery and other enterprises run by communes and production teams. Household sideline production developed even more quickly. Agriculture is the foundation of the national economy. The importance of agriculture is known to everyone. The rapid change for the better in agricultural production has been the most important expression and indication of the speedy improvement of the nationwide economic situation since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee. Agricultural development has created favorable conditions for pushing forward the development of the national economy as a whole. In the future, provided we act on the guidelines of the 12th CPC National Congress, really take agriculture as the strategic key area of economic construction and continue to implement the policy of developing agriculture by "relying on both policies and science," it will definitely be possible to maintain continuously the highly favorable situation in agriculture and to develop it at a speed markedly higher than the average annual growth rate of 3.4 percent during 1953-1980 period. Once agriculture has developed, the peasants will become well-off, thereby imposing new and greater demands on industry, transportation, education, science, culture and public health and promoting the rapid development of industry and communications and of the national economy as a whole.

III

The rapid development of industry is the mainstay of quadrupling the total annual output value of industry and agriculture. Industry is a big sector of the economy. Its total output value usually accounts for about 70 percent of the total output value of industry and agriculture.

Industry must absolutely not be developed by assigning quotas to every department and every locality alike, and uniformly demanding they quadruple their output value. This method aims exclusively at total output value and will invariably lead to "exaggeration." To develop industry quickly, it is first necessary to carry out the work in many aspects, such as establishing a rational line-up of industrial departments, setting up a rational product mix, drawing up a rational layout of the producing areas, organizing cooperation for specialized projects, rationalizing the organizational structure of enterprises and raising the level of operation and management. However, in my opinion, the most fundamental principle in developing industry, as in developing agriculture, is to rely on policy and on science and technology. The most important and most practical thing at present is to carry out firmly the 4th point in the 10-point policy for economic construction put forth by Premier Zhao Ziyang at the 4th Session of the 5th NPC last year, that is, to carry out technical transformation step by step in key units and make the maximum use of existing enterprises. He said: "In the past, we carried on expanded reproduction chiefly by building new factories, which had to be done in the period of laying the foundation for industrialization. Now that China already has several hundred thousand enterprises in industry and transportation, we will have to rely chiefly on the technical transformation of existing enterprises and on their initiative for expanded reproduction in the future. The good results obtained by many enterprises in this respect indicate that this course will yield faster results and bigger economic returns and require smaller investments than the building of new enterprises." "This is the key to smoother economic development."

Technical transformation of existing enterprises is a very important issue. Our country now has 400,000 enterprises in industry and transportation, of which more than 380,000 are in industry. However, only 1,000 large- and medium-scale projects (chiefly projects in industry and transporation, are under construction each year, and only about 100 of these projects are completed and put into operation each year (since 1976, only about 10 percent of the construction projects have been put into operation). These projects are relatively advanced and attain a relatively high labor productivity. However, they account for only a small proportion of the existing several hundred thousand enterprises. The existing enterprises are the mainstay. To increase industrial output value and accelerate industrial development, we certainly must also rely on the newly-built enterprises and especially the large- and medium-scale projects, which play the role of the backbone. However, stress should be put on tapping potential and carrying out technical innovation and transformation in the existing several hundred thousand enterprises. That is to say, industrial development should be achieved by relying chiefly on carrying out technical innovation and improving operation and management of these several hundred thousand enterprises.

During the 1930's the Soviet Union upheld the law that "if the base is big, the speed must be low." People holding this opinion generally quoted Stalin's "The Results of the First 5-Year Plan" to support their argument. Stalin said: "In studying the speed of increase of output value, we should not confine our scope to the percentage of increase but must also know the content of each percent of the increase and the total increase of the annual output value." ("Collected Works of Stalin," vol 13, p 171). Here, Stalin also talked about the speed of increase of total industrial output value in the Soviet Union, pointing out that the speed of increase during the First 5-Year Plan period was lower, but in terms of absolute value, was higher than that during the recovery period. Generally speaking, during the several decades of industrial development in the Soviet Union and the three decades of industrial development in China, the speed of development decreased instead of increasing gradually.

This gave more reasons for people to apply the law of "big base, low speed" in explaining the slowing down of economic development. In fact, this explanation was flimsy and untenable. The speed of industrial development decreased in the Soviet Union. Industrial development in China also showed a downward trend. The concrete historical conditions were different in the two countries. The superficial phenomena were somewhat similar. But this did not constitute a law. There were numerous causes for the low rates of industrial development in the Soviet Union and China. An important cause was that the economic and financial systems strangled technical innovation and transformation of the existing enterprises. As a result, the great majority of the old enterprises underwent little technical development, their labor productivity remained basically unchanged, their output increased very slowly and even remained at the previous level. The small number of newly built or expanded enterprises were relied on to increase productive capacity and accelerate industrial development. But the number of enterprises that were built or expanded each year was pitifully small. Under these circumstances, if the productive capacity of the existing enterprises is the denominator and the productive capacity of the newly built or expanded enterprises is the numerator, then the speed of economic development is determined by the value and the change of the fraction. When the number of old enterprises grows, the denominator will be bigger. At the same time, no matter how vigorously it is expanded, the capital construction front cannot expand miraculously because it is after all restricted by national capacity. Every year there can only be an increase of about 100 big or medium-sized enterprises and a few thousand small enterprises. That is to say, the numerator can hardly get any bigger. In other words, the numerator can hardly grow faster than the denominator. If the situation goes on like this, the value of the fraction will continue to diminish and development will certainly be slow.

In his opening speech at the 12th party congress, Comrade Deng Xiaoping pointed out that we should, in a long period to come, do a good job in restructuring the economic setup. Comrade Hu Yaobang in his report to the congress also set forth the task of completing the reform of the economic institutions in a systematic way. That is to say, we should not rest content with the previous revisions of the old economic setup, including the institutions of planning and finance; rather, what we need is to carry out a major reform so as to meet the needs of the development of productive forces. We can imagine that if we make a change in the economic setup and blaze a new trail in developing industry in the way Premier Zhao Ziyang described, such that the expansion of reproduction in the future will rely mainly on technical transformation and giving full play to existing enterprises, then, the growth of production will not exclusively depend on a few newly built enterprises; rather, it will at the same time rely on the technical transformation of existing enterprises which always account for a vast majority. In this way, both the minority and the majority will be taken care of and the rate of growth will be much faster. Even if we make new investments, but still take the measure of carrying out technical transformation in existing enterprises, good results, that is quick returns from low expenditure, can still be achieved. In general, investment can be saved by 1/3 or even more by carrying out technical transformation rather than building new enterprises. The time necessary for the former is only half as long as for the latter and the equipment and materials needed in the former are only 60 percent as much as in the latter. These instances can be found everywhere. Therefore, carrying out technical transformation is an important technical and economic guarantee for us to maintain a high rate of growth in the development of industry and the national economy as a whole.

"When the base is big, the rate will become slow." This viewpoint does not tally with the history of production development in human society. Facts show just the opposite.

If we look at the several economic formations that human society has been through, we find that the production growth rate is accelerating. The well-known Soviet economist, the late Academician (Stelumirin) has made a rough estimate about the technical progress of human society and the rate of production development. He found that the average growth rate of technology in the Stone Age was only 1-2 percent every 10,000 years; in the Iron Age, the growth rate of productivity which reflected technical progress was at an average of less than 4 percent every 100 years; while in the Ages of Steam and Electricity, taking the United States as an example, in the period from 1870 to 1949, the productivity of industrial workers increased by an average annual rate of 1.5 to 3 percent. (See the Soviet magazine NEW TIMES No 47, 1959). Because technology advances at an increasing rate, even in capitalist countries, the growth rate of industry has been accelerating and not slowing down. Some people have estimated that in the period of 80 years from 1700 to 1780 the annual growth rate of industrial output value in Britain was 0.9 percent; while in the 136 years afterward from 1781 to 1917 this rate increased to 2.2-2.5 percent. (see Nottkin): "Rate and Ratio of Socialist Reproduction" p 2). Therefore, the notion that "if the base is big, the growth rate will be slow" does not conform with the law of the development of science, technology and production. This notion ignores the reality that modern science and technology always develops at a high speed.

In order to speed up the development of our industry we should first break through the old habit of, whenever increasing production is mentioned, thinking only about carrying out capital construction, building new enterprises and developing new setups. We should instead attempt to expand production capacity on the basis of existing technology, equipment, materials, technological procedures and products. In particular, we should not proceed solely from the interests of our own localities, departments and units and ignore the relevant stipulations laid down by the state, continuing to build those small enterprises, such as small tobacco processing plants, small distilleries and small textile mills, which always compete for raw materials and energy with large enterprises with advanced equipment. The reason for this is that running small local enterprises will not help raise the growth rate of the economy, and moreover this can hold down the utilization rate of equipment in large enterprises and make them operate below capacity, resulting in a decline in social productivity and economic results. It should be realized that apart from the necessity of concentrating some funds on developing energy and transport as well as some newly emerging branches of industry, we must mainly concentrate our efforts on technical transformation in existing enterprises and give guarantees of funds and materials for this work. So long as we no longer "love the new and hate the old," wear down the vast number of old enterprises, freeze technological progress and stake economic development solely on the building of new enterprises, and instead exert great efforts to do a good job in carrying out technical transformation in existing enterprises, our production development is bound to speed up.

Along with the change of economic construction policy, we must, as Premier Zhao Ziyang said, "formulate within a relatively short time an equipment replacement policy that is in line with conditions in our country and favorable to economic development. The depreciation rate for fixed assets of enterprises must be gradually raised, based on the conditions of different trades and enterprises, so as rationally to shorten the equipment replacement cycle of enterprises."

On the question of raising depreciation rate, there have always been different views in our economic circles. In the article "Starting With the Need To Reform the Equipment Management System of 'Reproducing Antique Equipment and Freezing Technical Progress'" published in HONGQI No 6, 1979, I said: "To enable the hundreds of thousands of existing old enterprises to fulfill this great task, that is, develop production in a short time at a speed no slower that that already reached in the First 5-Year Plan, and thereby bring about a marked improvement in the people's livelihood, then... we must completely change the equipment management system of 'reproducing antiques' and 'freezing technology's still being practiced in the industrial sector. For this reason, we must first raise the depreciation rate and shorten the depreciation time." If we cannot shorten it to about 4 or 5 years as in the case of advanced industrial countries, at least we must not fall behind the replacement cycle already reached by Western countries in the 19th century. In other words, depreciation time cannot exceed 10 years. What I have said regarding the problem that the present depreciation rate is inclined to be too low conforms to objective reality. Recently, Comrade Zhou Guanwu, introducing the experience of the Shoudu Iron and Steel Company, talked about actual conditions in his company. He said: "In the past, of the depreciation fund which was 3.3 percent of the total fixed assets received by the enterprise, 50 percent had still to be handed over to the state. Actually, the enterprise only received 1.65 percent. The Shoudu Iron and Steel Company has a lot of old quipment, such as the boilers produced by the Ford Company in 1918 and an old type of turbine left over from the Qing Dynasty, which are still in use. We reckon that it will take 60 years to replace and transform all the old equipment based on this depreciation rate for fixed assets. The old methods for the major repair of equipment and plants stipulated: 1) There is to be no change of locality. 2) There is to be no increase in area. 3) There is to be no addition of floors. In fact, we could only reproduce 'antiques' in the same old way. All this has seriously hindered technical progress." (RENMIN RIBAO 30 October, 1982)

However, some comrades hold that the present depreciation rate is not low. For example, Comrades Liu Biao and Tian Chunsheng said in an article that according to the statistics of the 1978 end-of-year accounts, the average depreciation rate of fixed assets for industrial enterprises was 4.1 percent and the depreciation time was 24 years. If the funds allocated by the state and the funds in the form of loans used for the replacement and technical transformation of the fixed assets of enterprises are added, then the actual depreciation rate of our country's industrial enterprises would be above 6 percent. They also said: "At present, some comrades advocate raising the depreciation rate, but they seldom or basically never take into consideration material or technical conditions. They seem to think that with the raising of depreciation rate, 'antiques' will become 'fashionable goods,' old equipment will be eliminated and there will be only advanced equipment. This is not realistic." To defend their argument, they also listed as an example that the average depreciation rate of the United States was also only about 8 percent. (Liu Biao and Tian Chunsheng: "Several Questions Regarding Depreciation of Fixed Assets in China," JINGJI YANJIU No 9, 1980)

It should be mentioned that the "comrades" refuted in the article included myself. However, I am of the opinion that their view is unconvincing and its basis untenable. If their formulation can be established, then the development of the history of capitalist society is retrogressive. As everybody knows, "Das Kapital" written by Marx more than a century ago, clearly pointed out that a capitalist economic crisis occurs approximately once every 10 years, and its material basis is determined by the fact that capitalist society replaces its fixed assets about once every 10 years.

Marx said: "The development of fixed capital extends the length of this life on the one hand; it is shortened on the other by the continuous revolution in the means of production, which likewise incessantly gains momentum with the development of the capitalist mode of production. This involves a change in the means of production and the need for their constant replacement, on account of invisible depreciation, long before they expire materially. One may assume that in the essential branches of modern industry, this life cycle now averages 10 years.... True, periods in which capital is invested differ greatly and far from coincide in time. But a crisis always forms the starting point of large new investments. Therefore, from the point of view of society as a whole, a crisis, to a greater or lesser extent, forms the basis for the next turnover cycle." (Das Kapital vol 2, "Selected Works of Marx and Engels" vol 24, pp 206-207). This means that in the preceeding century and more, the depreciation rate of fixed assets in capitalist society was about 10 percent. Since then, as a result of the further development of capitalist production techniques, world science and technology in recent decades are again in a state of high speed development. Correspondingly, for the sake of strengthening competitiveness, some capitalist countries and enterprises have speeded up depreciation, further shortened depreciation time and raised depreciation rate and replacement of fixed assets once every 3 to 5 years or 5 to 7 years is nothing new. This is also a reason as well as material basis for the shortening of the capitalist economic crisis cycle to 4 or 5 years in recent decades. However, Comrades Liu Biao and Tian Chunsheng have instead ignored these facts and insisted that the depreciation rate of capitalist society has not been raised but lowered. If the depreciation rate of fixed assets is 8 percent as they claim, then the replacement cycle of fixed assets in capitalist society would be 12 to 13 years or the capitalist economic crisis cycle would be longer, not shorter than before. This neither conforms to objective reality nor to theoretical logic.

The present low depreciation rate in China is a generally acknowledged fact, and has also become a factor restricting our country's development in production and technology. I have repeatedly pointed out that the depreciation rate should be gradually increased to 10 percent. My proposal is based on the fact that our country is now short of fiancial resources and burdened with the heavy task of carrying out technical transformation for fixed assets and updating equipment in existing enterprises. Such a task has built up over the past 30 years, so it is difficult to accomplish it overnight. A 10 percent depreciation rate is an interim measure only. It should be gradually raised further in the 1990's when our country's economy enters a new vigorous stage of development.

In order to carry out gradual technical transformation in existing enterprises, the depreciation funds, in principle, should be kept and used by these enterprises. No doubt, the depreciation funds of those enterprises which should be closed down or stopped from further development, should be forwarded to the state ot keep and utilize under a unified plan. The technical transformations of ordinary enterprises should rest on depreciation funds.

The problem of depreciation rates for fixed assets should be in no way underestimated in the building of socialist civilization. In an editorial entitled "Exploring the Diversification of China's Economy" published in the Japanese newspaper NIHON KEIZAI SHIMBUN on 20-21 October 1982, Keizi Samejima, deputy editor-in-chief, said: "In China, neither members of relevant economic departments nor management personnel of enterprises can really know the importance and necessity of depreciation rate, because they think that when machines or equipment become obsolete, they can be renewed with allocated state funds. When such thinking prevails it is probably natural that the issue of depreciation rate is somewhat neglected. When visiting industrial bases in Changchun and Shenyang, northeast China, I heard the opinion that if all depreciation charges were at least recognized by enterprises, then a first step would be made toward improving the present situation."

Increasing the depreciation rate and allowing enterprises to keep and use these funds, coupled with other financial measures, will give the enterprises the needed financial resources to carry out technical transformation. However, we should be aware that giving the needed financial resources to enterprises may not solve all problems. Just as in his important speech at a recent national meeting giving awards for scientific and technical achievements Premier Zhao Ziyang pointed out, in order to intensify efforts of enterprises in promoting technical development, not only should we give them the needed strength, but we should give them also motive force and pressure. This involves the system of economic management. As a result of applying the old managerial system our enterprises still regard quantity as superior to quality, concentrate on increase of output value, but neglect the improvement of labor productivity, product properties and profit rate, and like to build new projects and augment equipment, but neglect technical transformation and the updating of equipment. If no major and essential reforms are made to such a managerial system, which is now hampering technical transformation, then the following situation will appear: enterprises will not make use of their funds to update the outdated equipment and promote technical transformation, but will continue to follow the old path of building new projects of augmenting equipment.

At the same time, in promoting effective technical transformation in existing enterprises, the state should give the enterprises guidance and supervision and make overall arrangements. First, funds earmarked for technical transformation in existing enterprises are not to be diverted to any other purpose, and in particular should not be used to build meeting halls, houses or new workshops. Owing to the greater autonomy accorded to enterprises, including financial power, generally speaking enterprises now have sources of funds for promoting technical transformation. But, the problem is that such funds are sometimes diverted to other purposes. For this reason, strict financial supervision should be exercised. In addition, funds should be clearly divided into three portions -- C,V, and M. The depreciation funds in the C portion should be mainly used for updating the equipment and carrying out technical transformation. In funds of the M portion, except a small amount of funds drawn from profits to be retained by enterprises, 90 percent of them should be forwarded to the state for making new investments and used for non-productive expenses. Expenses for trial manufacture of new products and new equipment and for new technology will be mainly allocated by the state, that is to be paid by the funds drawn from surplus products (M). Funds for trial manufacture of new products, which are drawn from profits retained by enterprises, are also of the same nature. Second, in carrying out technical transformation of all types of existing equipment, including those installed in the time of the Qing Dynasty, professional departments of all trades should invite specialists for discussions to work out overall plans and draft unified policies. Thus, not only can the work of technical transformation be done with leadership and planning, and be undertaken group after group and at different times, but also the autonomy accorded to enterprises can be fully respected and everything will not be put under too much control.

In a recent interview conducted by Itsuro Tagawa, member of the editorial board of the Japanese newspaper YOMIURI SHIMBUN with Konosuke Matsushita, an influential entrepreneur in Japan, Konosuke said: It will take China a century to realize her modernization." What is the basic concept of a century? In Japan, it meant the whole period of modernization from the Meiji Reformation in 1868 to the late 1960's. I maintain that we will only trail behind foreigners at a snail's pace and will hardly catch up with them if we make no change in our system of reproducing "antiques" and "freezing" technical development.

However, so long as, under the correct leadership of the party Central Committee and in line with the 12th party congress spirit, we strive to create a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization and attach great importance to the role of technical progress, we will surely be able to overcome difficulties and obstacles on the road of progress and bring credit to the Chinese nation and socialism. We will be able not only to fulfill but also overfulfill the targets in our strategic objective for the coming 20 years so that we will shorten the course of our modernization and accomplish the four modernizations in less than a century.

STATE COUNCIL ENTERPRISE CONSOLIDATION MEETING

[Text] Beijing, 20 Nov (XINHUA) -- A responsible person of the national leading group for enterprise consolidation called for all localities and departments to check and accept the first group of consolidated enterprises in accordance with the requirements set forth in the central authorities' relevant documents. Enterprises must be checked according to the high standards and strict requirements and can be accepted as consolidated enterprises only when they meet such standards and requirements. This must not be done perfunctorily.

At a meeting on the work of enterprise consolidation done by various departments under the State Council, which opened today, this responsible person pointed out: It has been discovered recently that enterprises that had not yet been consoldiated well were checked and accepted as consolidated enterprises in some localities. For example, 13 of the first 15 enterprises in Mianyang Prefecture, Sichuan Province, designated for consolidation, had been checked and accepted as consolidated enterprises by the end of August. The provincial department responsible for this work discovered that these enterprises which were checked and accepted as consolidated enterprises had not consolidated themselves in accordance with the requirements set forth in the documents of the CPC Central Committee and the State Council. In particular, they had not even dealt with several knotty problems, such as the problems of consolidating their leading bodies and labor orgnaizations. Thus the provincial department responsible for this work required them to continue to consolidate themselves.

In view of this situation, the responsible person of the national leading group for enterprise consolidation called for doing a better job in checking enterprises and accepting them as consolidated ones and made it a rule that enterprises remaining in one of the following five situations are not to be accepted as consolidated enterprises:

-- Enterprises whose consolidation of their leading bodies and primary party organizations is not up to the standard set by the Organization Department of the party Central Committee.

-- Enterprises which have not yet divided their economic responsibility to the state among various levels, have not yet had their workshops, shifts, sections and individual workers fulfill such responsibility and have not yet done away with the practice of "sharing food from the same big pot" and egalitarianism in distributing bonuses.

-- Enterprises which have not yet organized production according to their fixed number of workers and production quotas, and are overstaffed but have not yet dismissed their superfluous personnel. Even if they have done so, they have not yet trained and made proper arrangements for the dismissed superfluous personnel.

-- Enterprises which have not yet conscientiously implemented the "Regulations on Rewards and Penalties for Enterprise Workers and Staff Members" and the "Rules for Workers and Staff Members," and whose labor discipline is lax and their financial management cannot meet the six standards set in the "Report on Strengthening State Enterprises' Financial and Accounting Work."

-- Enterprises whose technical and economic indices have not yet reached their past record highs in these regards, whose variety and quality of their products cannot satisfy their customers and have not yet noticeably improve their economic results.

This responsible person also said: The year of 1983 will be a critical year for the all-round consolidation of enterprises. All localities and departments should continue to consolidate vigorously the first group of enterprises designated for consolidation before the end of this year and pay attention to summing up experiences in order to lay a solid foundation for enterprise consolidation next year.

CPC LEADING COMRADE ON TIANJIN COMMERCIAL WORK

[Text] Beijing, 20 Nov (XINHUA) -- A leading comrade of the CPC Central Committee and the State Council recently wrote his instructions on a written report his instructions on a written report on Tianjin Municipality's experience in establishing 594 collective commercial service outlets within 3 months by breaking through the unnecessary and overelaborate formalities involved. He pointed out that Tianjin Municipality's experience is a good example and such a work style should be popularized among all departments.

Acting in accordance with his instructions, the Ministry of Commerce and XINHUA's Tianjin branch conducted a joint investigation in Tianjin Municipality and recommended the municipality's revolutionary spirit and new work style in developing collective commercial undertakings to a national conference on commercial work.

The Research Office under the CPC Central Committee's Secretariat has issued a circular on Tianjin Municipality's experience and pointed out that the experience shows everything depends on human efforts. The circular said: Many things seem to be difficult to handle, but they can be readily tackled so long as the leadership is resolved, has a good work style, relies on the masses and is bold in and good at solving practical questions.

CHEN PIXIAN ADDRESSES CONFERENCE ON SOCIAL ORDER

[Text] Beijing, 18 Nov (XINHUA) -- The Political and Legal Affairs Committee under the CPC Central Committee held a telephone conference this evening to draw up plans for improving social order this winter and next spring. It was pointed out at the conference that organizations in all parts of the country, inspired by the 12th party congress' guidelines, should exert further efforts to improve social order this winter and next spring on the basis of marked improvements.

Chen Pixian, member of the CPC Central Committee's Secretariat, delivered a speech at the conference with Liu Xiazhi, secretary general of the CPC Central Committee's Political and Legal Affairs Committee, presiding.

Since the beginning of this year, all local organizations have done a great deal of work to improve urban and rural public security under the leadership of party committees and the people's governments at various levels. Social order and security have turned for the better.

Statistics indicate that the number of criminal cases in the first 9 months of this year throughout the country dropped by 15.7 percent compared with the same period last year. The purpose of the telephone conference was to exploit this victory and to take the lead this winter and next spring in fulfilling Comrade Hu Yaobang's call at the 12th Party congress that, in the next 5 years, we should "strive to bring about a fundamental turn for the better in the country's financial and economic situation, in the standards of social conduct and in the party's style."

Chen Pixian pointed out at the telephone conference: The party Central Committee and the State Council are greatly concerned about current social order. A marked improvement in this field has been made since the beginning of this year. We must, however, adhere to the concept of "one dividing into two" regarding achievements and shortcomings. We must understand the urgent need to improve social order and understand the arduous and protracted task involved. Further efforts to ensure continuous improvements are still needed in areas where social order has turned for the better, still greater efforts should be made immediately in areas where public security and order has deteriorated.

As a rule over the years, winter and spring are the seasons in which problems of public security and order frequently occur, Chen Pixian pointed out. Only by thoroughly implementing the guidelines of the national work conference on political and legal affairs and by improving social order this winter and next spring, will we be able to consolidate and exploit the achievements we have made this year in improving urban and rural public order and security and lay a good foundation for scoring still greater achievements next year.

Chen Pixian continued: The key to success in improving social order and security lies in party committees and governments at all levels who should attach great importance to, and strengthen their leadership over, public security. Problems concerning social order and public security should be comprehensively tackled. The political and legal affairs departments have great responsibilities in such problems, but we cannot rely only on those departments. Under the unified leadership of party committees and governments at various levels, it is necessary to mobilize the forces of all sectors, explicitly define the functions and responsibilities of the departments and units concerned and establish various systems of personal responsibility to include everyone at both upper and lower levels. Leading cadres are required to work on duty shifts by rotation and to see that plans carried out are supplemented by supervised followup action. Those who have rendered meritorious service should be commended and rewarded, while those who have failed to perform their duty should be criticized and educated.

Party committees and governments at all levels are required to pay great attention to research on the new conditions and tendencies of social order. They should discover new questions, sum up fresh experience and take new measures to deal with such questions, so that our work can keep abreast of the times.

Chen Pixian urged political and legal affairs departments at all levels, their cadres and the police handling such affairs to brace up, unite as one, concert their actions and contribute to common efforts aimed at improving social order this winter through next spring. He called on them to tackle earnestly and systematically important problems concerning public order and security in local areas, strengthen work at grassroots levels, preempt potential crime, forestall any possible escalation of civil disputes into criminal cases, and prevent transformation of contradictions among the people into animosity.

Efforts are needed, he said, to coordinate with various departments in carrying out political and ideological work aimed at strengthening education in communist ideology, in publicizing the legal system and in bringing about a fundamental turn for the better in the standards of social conduct.

To do so, it is necessary to give full play to our democratic work style, forge close links with, and fully arouse, the masses and rely on them so that we shall be able to establish a mighty contingent of activists in safeguarding public security and social order. Political and legal affairs departments at various levels should conscientiously improve work style, go deep into realities, strengthen investigations and study at grassroots level units and give them specific guidance.

Concluding his speech, Chen Pixian urged local organizations in all localities to get mobilized and strive to bring about a fundamental turn for the better in the country's social order and public security this winter through next spring while working hard to create a new situation in political and legal affairs work.

Also speaking at the telephone conference were Wang Wentong, vice minister of public security; Li Shiying, deputy chief procurator of the Supreme People's Procuratorate; Zeng Hanzhou, vice president of the Supreme People's Court; Zhu Jianming, vice minister of justice; Cui Naifu, minister of civil affairs; and Yan Jinsheng, deputy director of the PLA General Political Department.

Taking part in the conference at the other end of the telephone were principal responsible comrades of the party committees and people's governments of various provinces, autonomous regions and special municipalities directly under the central government; party committee secretaries in charge of political and legal affairs; responsible persons of political and legal affairs committees, departments of public security, people's procuratorates and courts, and departments of justice and civil affairs; leading comrades of the PLA's military regions in charge of political and legal affairs; and responsible persons of various security departments, procuratorates and courts.

ZHAO ZIYANG HAILS SHANXI COUNTY'S SUCCESSES

[Text] Taiyuan, 17 Nov (XINHUA) -- Pinglu County in Yanbei Prefecture -- a well-known poor county in Shanxi Province -- has reaped a good harvest this year, thus removing at one stroke the label of a poor county that had always relied on the state for grain supply over the past 20 years. On 1 November Premier Zhao Ziyang wrote a letter to the Pinglu County CPC Committee and the people's government, congratulating them for their achievements.

In his letter, Comrade Zhao Ziyang said: Northwest Shanxi is one of the areas for which the party Central Committee and the State Council are extremely concerned. It is highly encouraging that this year Pinglu County has reaped a bumper harvest. I hope that, in this victorious situation, you will keep clear-headed, seriously sum up your experiences, do your work soundly, continue to stabilize and improve the agricultural production responsibllity systems, popularize agricultural science and technology, pay attention to maintaining ecological balance, strive for sustained growth in agriculture, forestry, animal husbandry, industry and sideline occupations, and do a still better job in building Pinglu County.

In June this year, Comrade Zhao Ziyang went to this poor country in northwest Shanxi to investigate the situation in its rural areas. At that time, the county CPC committee reported to him that owing to the implementation of the production responsibility system of making payments on the basis of output, the practice of paying full attention to farming with a scientific approach and the rational readjustments in crop pattern, they were confident that the country's agricultural production figures this year would reach the three "7's" -- 70 million jin of grain crops, 7 million jin of oil-bearing crops and an average per capita income of 70 yuan. If everything went well, it was possible that these figures would reach the three "1's" -- 100 million jin of grain crops, 10 million jin of oil-bearing crops and an average per capita income of 100 yuan.

Comrade Zhao Ziyang pointed out: Pinglu County is one of the poorest counties in the entire nation. A report must be submitted to the State Council if Pinglu realizes its goal of pushing production figures to the three "1's." The results show that Pinglu Country's total grain output has actually surpassed the 100 million jin mark after the autumn harvest. Its output of oil-bearing crops has exceeded the 10 million jin mark and the average per capita income has reached more than 190 yuan.

The county CPC committee and the people's government are greatly inspired by Comrade Zhao Ziyang's letter in reply to their report. In the course of discussion, the cadres warmly expressed their determination to respond with actual deeds to the solicitude to the people in the hilly areas by the party Central Committee and the State Council.

BEIJING CPC COMMITTEE ELECTS NEW LEADERSHIP

[Report by Liu Shiping [0491 2514 1627] and Zhai Qiyun [5049 0796 6663]: "Beijing Municipal CPC Committee Elects New Leadership"]

[Text] After the conclusion of the Fifth Beijing Municipal CPC Congress, the Beijing Municipal CPC Committee, advisory commission and discipline inspection commission respectively held plenary sessions from 14 to 15 November to elect their new leading bodies. The newly elected leading bodies consist of: Municipal CPC Committee First Secretary Duan Junyi, secretaries Jiao Ruoyu, Chen Xitong, and Zhao Pengfei; Municipal Advisory Commission Chairman Jai Tingsan, vice chairmen Ye Lin, Wang Chun and Ye Zilong; and Municipal Discipline Inspection Commission Chairman Jiao Ruoyu, vice chairmen Li Zhenhai [2621 2182 3189], Cui Xudong [1508 2485 2639], and Meng Zhiyuan [1322 1807 0337].

At the end of the plenary session of the Municipal CPC Committee, Duan Junyi put forth his opinions on the current work of Beijing in five points: 1. Continue to thoroughly study the documents of the 12th CPC Congress and further implement the spirit of the congress. Based on a thorough understanding of the spirit of the documents, more closely integrate our ideological understanding with the actual work, continue to eliminate "leftist" influence, further emancipate our minds and seek unity of action. 2. Speed up organizational reform and consolidate the leading bodies at all levels. 3. Conscientiously promote the building of spiritual civilization and further improve social security. 4. Conscientiously do a good job in economic work; try our best to fulfill or overfulfill this year's work; try our best to fulfill or overfulfill this year's national economic plan. 5. In preparation for the future party consolidation, conscientiously carry out current party consolidation on a trial basis.

When talking about party consolidation, Duan Junyi pointed out that the basic state of the vast number of party members and party organizations in Beijing was generally good. He asserted that this was the dominant aspect. However, there are indeed quite a few problems. At present, about 10 percent of the grassroots organizations are facing a relatively large number of problems, and some of them simply cannot operate. Nearly 30 percent of those people found to be economic criminals wiped out the "five types of people." Such circumstances show that party consolidation is imperative.

He said: The Municipal CPC Committee decided to start party consolidation on a trial basis in December. At the same time, the Municipal CPC Committee will comprehensively carry out three things: 1. Deal penetrating blows at serious criminal activities in economic and other fields, and further wipe out the "five types of people" from the party, in particular from leading bodies. 2. Promptly solve any problems emerging within the party in connection with unhealthy tendencies. 3. Make preparation for party consolidation by giving potential rotational training to party members.

Party Committee Elected

OW171840 Beijing XINHUA in English 1631 GMT 17 Nov 82

[Text] Beijing, November 17 (XINHUA) -- Duan Junyi, re-elected first secretary of the Beijing Committee of the Chinese Communist Party, stressed maintaining extensive ties with the masses in his address to the first plenary session of the new Fifth CPC Beijing Committee.

Duan said in the November 14 address that party consolidation will be started on a trial basis in December.

Greater importance will be attached to socialist civilization, communist ideological education and development of science and education, Duan said.

The Fifth Beijing Committee of 62 members and 16 alternates was elected by secret ballot at the Fifth Beijing Municipal Party Congress, which closed November 13.

Jiao Ruoyu, Chen Xitong and Zhao Pengfei were elected secretaries.

The number of secretaries in the Beijing committee was reduced from 11 to four and Standing Committee members from 22 to 13.

The new committee members have an average age of 54, about 3 years younger than the previous committee. Eighty-two percent are newcomers, 83.3 percent have an educational level of college or technical secondary school, 10.3 percent are women and 6.4 percent are of minority nationalities.

The fifth congress approved the work report made by Duan on behalf of the Fourth Beijing Party Committee and elected a 39-member Beijing Advisory Commission and a 42-member Beijing Commission for Discipline Inspection.

Jia Tingsan, chairman of the Standing Committee of the Municipal People's Congress, was elected as chairman of the Advisory Commission and Mayor Jiao Ruoyu was elected as secretary of the other commission.

BEIJING MUNICIPAL CPC CONGRESS HELD

[Text] Beijing, 13 Nov (XINHUA) -- The Fifth Beijing Municipal CPC Congress closed today. The congress elected the Fifth Beijing Municipal CPC Committee, the Beijing CPC Advisory Committee and the discipline inspection committee.

When the congress was in session, the delegates earnestly and penetratingly discussed the report entitled "Resolutely Implement the Guidelines of the 12th CPC National Congress and Create a New Situation in all Fields of Socialist Modernization in the Capital" -- a report made by Comrade Duan Junyi on behalf of the Beijing Municipal CPC Committee. They pledged that they would unite all the party members and people in Beijing, continue to emancipate their minds, heighten their spirit and make still greater contributions to creating a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization in the capital.

The delegates maintained that after the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, leading cadres at all levels in Beijing have achieved salient success in eliminating the influence of "leftist" guiding ideology. However, they pointed out that because the discussion of the criterion of truth began fairly late in Beijing -- although the discussion was accomplished later -- the development has been uneven, and this has made it particularly important for Beijing to eliminate the influence of "leftist" ideas.

Certain delegates said that with regard to adopting the system of responsibility in agricultural production, certain localities in Beijing still have been unable to detach themselves from the restrictions of "leftist" ideology, and that the responsibility system has not been satisfactorily implemented and development has been slow. They pointed out that in order genuinely to arouse the enthusiasm of the broad masses of peasants, it is imperative to break through the bondage of "leftist" ideology and do a good job in implementing the system of responsibility in agricultural production. Many delegates pointed out that while studying the documents of the 12th CPC National Congress and implementing its guidelines, it is necessary to continue to emancipate their minds, continue to eliminate the influence of "leftist" ideology and be at one with the party Central Committee ideologically and politically. They said that this is an important guarantee for attaining the goal of creating a new situation in the capital.

The delegates also analyzed the favorable and unfavorable factors of creating a new situation in Beijing. They maintained that there are many favorable factors for creating a new situation in Beijing: Beijing has great potential since it has a relatively sound foundation in the industrial, agricultural, construction and other departments of material production; it has strong scientific and technological strength since there are many scientific research and designing institutes and schools of higher education; as a capital, it has bright prospects for developing commerce, foreign trade and tourism, and there are many opportunities for utilizing foreign capital and importing advanced technology; and Beijing has already become experienced in enlivening the economy.

However, they pointed out that there are also unfavorable factors in Beijing since there are limited areas for agricultural production and for construction and since there is a shortage of energy, water, capital and raw materials. They maintained that as long as the leading cadres at all levels are spiritually sound, heighten their spirit, fully utilize favorable factors, combat unfavorable factors, and are men of action in creating a new situation and leading the masses to work hard and act indomitably, they can certainly turn the goal of creating a new situation in Beijing into beautiful reality.

The delegates maintained that, according to the requirements of making the ranks of cadres more revolutionary, younger in average age, better educated and more professionally competent, the leading groups at all levels in Beijing must be built into strong headquarters capable of leading the fight to create a new situation.

Many delegates pointed out that to solve the problems of aging and intellectually incompetent leading groups and overstaffed and inefficient organizations, the central authorities' plan of boldly and effectively restructuring the administration must be followed, and firm and effective measures must be adopted to promote a large number of middle-aged and young cadres -- who are ethically and professionally competent and who are in their prime of life -- to the leading groups so that there will be cooperation between old and new cadres and succession of the new to the old. The delegates firmly believed that only when leading groups throughout Beijing have enhanced their understanding of policies and are professionally proficient and dedicated to their work and reject personal gain, will the masses trust them, follow them and work hard wholeheartedly for attaining the new goal.

Many delegates maintained that leading cadres at all levels must significantly change their work style and method and foster the work style of creating a new situation.

They said that to create a new situation, leading cadres at all levels must not remain on the surface but should go deep into reality and among the masses to gather first-hand information and should consult with the masses. These delegates pointed out thay only by doing this can they make the correct decisions and solve the many difficult problems more promptly.

When the congress was in session, the delegates, after repeated deliberations, elected the Fifth Beijing Municipal CPC Committee and the Beijing Municipal CPC Advisory Committee is composed of Duan Junyi and others; the advisory committee is composed of Jia Tingsan and others; and the discipline inspection committee is composed of Jiao Ruoyu and others.

The presidium of the Beijing Municipal CPC Congress also accepted the requests from four veteran comrades -- Chen Peng, Fan Rusheng, Su Zhan and Xiao Zekuan -- that they not be nominated as candidates for the advisory committee. The Presidium has sent them letters to express its respect for their requests.

BEIJING PROMOTES YOUNGER, MORE EDUCATED LEADERS

OW130347 Beijing XINHUA in English 0127 GMT 13 Nov 82

[Text] Beijing, November 13 (XINHUA) -- Beijing has promoted 3,600 better educated leaders with an average age of 40 during the past three years, according to the Organization Department of the Municipal Party Committee.

The leaders, whose predecessors averaged in their fifties, now administer districts, counties, institutes of higher learning and major companies, the department said.

One thousand and two hundred of the new leaders are college graduates and another 1,000 have attended technical schools or senior middle schools. Cadres with educational levels above secondary school make up 35 percent of the total above district and bureau level. In some organizations, the rate has reached 50 percent, as compared with 28 percent before 1980, the department said.

In the capital iron and steel complex, with a staff of 66,000, one hundred and forty young and middle aged people, of whom 98 are professionals, have been promoted at various factories and other units within the complex. The majority of the leaders of the complex's factories and mines are college graduates. Engineers account for 81 percent of all factory directors and managers, the department said.

Because of the changes, in 1981, despite state quotas 10 percent lower for iron and 6 percent lower for steel than 1980, the complex turned over 8.9 percent more profits to the state.

With the adoption of the economic responsibility system, reforms in production planning, the wage system, personnel administration and with technological improvement, the complex, within the next three years, will hand profits to the state equal to the net value of the complex's fixed assets in 1981.

The complex has won approval for renovating its technique with the accumulated profit of its own. Leading economist Xue Muqiao described its practice as "beneficial experience for the comprehensive reform of China's industry".

Before 1978, no college graduates were among the heads of the Beijing bureau of livestock farming. Now, however, four of the eight bureau heads are college graduates. The bureau's 15 chicken or pig farms are all led by specialists or veterinary surgeons with a college education.

Beijing formerly relied on imports of eggs and meat from other provinces, but now 66 percent of the city's egg supply and 77 percent of its meat are produced locally. Bureau leaders expect the city will be self-sufficient in eggs and meat by 1984.

SHANXI COMMENDS ADVANCED PARTY BRANCHES, MEMBERS

[Excerpt] Party organizations of provincial government organs have extensively unfolded activities to emulate advanced party branches and groups and fine party members. This has effectively inspired primary party organizations and the masses of party members to give full play to their role as combat bastions and as vanguards and models while ensuring the implementation of the party's line, principles and policies and the carrying out of their various tasks. A large number of advanced party branches and groups and fine party members have emerged in the activities. At a commendatory meeting held by the party committee of the provincial government organs on 26 October, 47 advanced party branches, 10 advanced party groups and 251 fine party members were commended and awarded.

Compared with last year, activities this year not only are larger in scale but also set higher demands and standards for advanced party branches and fine party members. In addition, leading party cadres at all levels have strengthened leadership over the activities, set themselves set themselves as examples and energetically made efforts to be advanced. Many units have regarded requirements for advanced party branches and groups and fine party members as requirements for regular party activities and instituted the system of frequently measuring themselves by these requirements. For this reason, the quality of the selected advanced party branches and fine party members is higher this year. Among selected fine party members, six are leading cadres at and above the office or bureau level, 74 are scientific and technical workers and 60 are staff members and workers at the frontlines of production. Some of them are tried, fine veteran party members. Some are fine new party members who have set strict demands on themselves according to the criteria for party members and have made outstanding contributions. This shows that the party's ranks in the provincial government organs are increasingly stronger. The quality of party members is increasingly improving and the party's combat strength increasingly enhanced. This also reflects the vigorous mental outlook of party organizations of the provincial government organs, effectively promotes the improvement of a party organs' workstyle and steels their confidence in achieving a fundamental turn for the better in party workstyle in 5 years.

Comrade Hu Xiaoqin, Standing Committee member and director of the Organization Department of the Shanxi Provincial CPC Committee, spoke at the meeting.

SHANXI ARTICLE ON PUNISHMENT OF ECONOMIC CRIMINALS

SK170708 Taiyuan SHANXI RIBAO in Chinese 27 Oct 82 p 3

[Article by Yang Xuquan [2799 4872 0356] and Zhai Quanqing [5049 0356 3237] entitled: "It Is Reasonable and Legal To 'Imprison' and 'Fine' at the Same Time;" from the column "Comment on the Legal System"]

[Text] When we are sternly punishing economic crimes, we often hear two kinds of arguments.

One of them is "Do not fine those who are imprisoned." This means that once the criminals are put into jail, they do not have to return or pay compensation for what they have illegally taken. The other is "Do not imprison those who are fined." This means that once the criminals return or pay compensation for what they have illegally taken, they do not have to be put into jail. Both of these arguments are wrong and legally groundless.

Our law has explicit stipulations on punishment for economic criminals -- regarding those who commit serious crimes of smuggling, selling smuggled goods, profiteering, swindling, embezzlement, theft and giving and receiving bribes. Chapter III, "Acts Against the Socialist Economic Order;" Chapter V, "Encroachment on Property;" and Chapter VIII, "Malfeasance" of the specific provisions of the criminal law not only stipulate that they should be sentenced to fixed-term imprisonment or detention, but also stipulate that they can "concurrently be sentenced to fines" and "concurrently be sentenced to have their property confiscated."

"The decision on severely punishing offenders who do great damage to the economy", the Standing Committee of the National People's Congress," regarding the punishment of economic criminals for serious offenses, stipulates not only that they should be "sentenced to fixed-term imprisonment of more than 10 years, to life imprisonment or to death" but also that they can "concurrently be sentenced to have their property confiscated." All the stipulations demand both "imprisonment" and "fines" for serious economic criminals.

The arguments "do not fine those who are imprisoned; do not imprison those who are fined" and satisfy the very intention of some economic criminals. The intention of most economic criminals is to seize a great amount of money and wealth to satisfy their extremely excessive desire for comfort. To these people, imprisonment is nothing serious. As long as they can keep the money and wealth, they still can enjoy them a few years later. Such people "prefer to be imprisoned rather than fined." Some other economic criminals "prefer to be fined rather than imprisoned." When their problems are exposed, they go around pleading for mercy and absolution, and would rather pay a tremendous amount of property than to be imprisoned. They think that "as long as the green mountains are there, they need not worry about firewood," vainly attempting to stage a comeback.

Regarding the abovementioned economic criminals, whether they "prefer to be imprisoned rather than fined" or "prefer to be fined rather than imprisoned," we should sternly punish them according to law. We should sentence them to fixed-term imprisonment according to the seriousness of their crimes and also recover what they have illegally taken so that they cannot gain any economic profit. This is reasonable and legal. Toward those who try to plead for mercy and absolution and replace imprisonment with economic punishment, public security organs should handle them impartially in strict accordance with law. Of course, those who frankly confess their crimes and try hard to return or pay compensation for what they have illegally taken should be treated leniently or be exempted from punishment according to the seriousness of their offenses.

PLA UNIT PRAISED FOR TIANJIN ENGINEERING WORK

[Excerpts] Beijing, 16 Nov (XINHUA) -- (XINHUA editor's note): The fact that armymen of a division under the Beijing PLA units, led by its party committee, have overfulfilled this year's construction target by 200 percent tells us that it is necessary to be in a good mental state in order to implement the guidelines of the 12th National Party Congress.

If we are in a good mental state, we will be able to overcome all sorts of difficulties and continuously create a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization. [end editor's note]

(Report by XINHUA reporters) -- The party committee of a division under the Beijing PLA units has courageously and creatively led its commanders and fighters to overfulfill this year's tunnelling task by 200 percent for the project of diverting water from the Luan River into Tianjin. They have set a new record in terms of their work's speedy completion, good quality and high safety. Leading comrades of the CPC Central Committee, the State Council and the Central Military Commission have praised them for setting a good example in creating a new situation.

Diverting water from the Luan River to Tianjin is a large-scale hydraulic engineering project aimed at solving the water supply problem in Tianjin. The division was assigned the taks of digging a tunnel to divert water through a hill. This was a key project and full of hardships and difficulties. In order to bring benefits to the people, the armymen worked very hard with no fear of difficulty or danger.

In their struggle to create a new situation, the division's party committee became the command headquarters. Engineering progress had somewhat slowed down since early May when armymen started to work on the main tunnel. However, work progress was greatly accelerated after Xie Zhengrong, the division's commander, personally stayed at work sites for half a month to gather firsthand information, analyze the situation, sum up new work experience and encourage the whole division to persist in its work.

TIANJIN RIBAO ON ILLEGAL HOUSING CONSTRUCTION

SK220531 Tianjin City Service in Mandarin 0030 GMT 22 Nov 82

[Text] According to TIANJIN RIBAO, letters from many readers have recently revealed a problem in the administration of Tianjin's urban construction that urgently needs a solution. Some units arbitrarily put up shacks or shabby houses in public places in violation of construction regulations. These letters have pointed out that in the past year, many illegally built shacks and shabby houses were dismantled in line with [words indistinct]. Great changes took place in the appearance of the city. However, since the beginning of this year, the phenomenon of arbitrarily putting up shacks or shabby houses has reappeared and become more serious each day. The readers have urged leading departments concerned to adopt resolute countermeasures.

From the present situation, we can see:

1. Some people build shacks in streets and byways;
2. Some build workshops and storehouses on vacant land in residential areas to pile up articles and materials;
3. Some build shacks on vacant land where illegal houses have already been dismantled; and
4. Some units even build houses in parks.

Why have these unhealthy situations become so serious? The reasons are as follows:

1. Urban construction departments in some districts approve construction licenses in an unplanned way, thus encouraging this evil trend.
2. Some units take advantage of positions and powers to build houses arbitrarily in spite of the construction plan.
3. Departments responsible for checking illegal housing construction are unclear about policies and irresolute in deeds.

The tendency to build shacks and houses arbitrarily shows that liberalism and anarchism exist in some units.

Moreover, because the departments responsible for checking illegal housing construction have weak organizational functions, it is difficult for them to adopt powerful measures to check this unhealthy tendency, thus making the tendency more serious each day.

Checking the illegal housing construction is, indeed, a struggle against an evil that has no organization, discipline or government laws and regulations. But if we fail to check it, there will be serious consequences. Therefore, in the course of strengthening ideological education, it is necessary to reaffirm the relevant regulations of the government, strengthen leadership and enforce discipline. Punishment should be given to those who commit the serious mistake of building illegal shacks. More severe punishment should be given to construction law violators.

[Text] Taipei, Nov. 20 (CNA) -- Fredrick F. Chien has been appointed as the Coordination Council for North American Affairs [CCNAA] new representative in the United States, a spokesman for the CCNAA said Saturday. To make it possible for him to step into his new job, Chien was relieved of his post as the political vice minister of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs Friday. Chien, 47 and a native of Chekiang Province, graduated from National Taiwan University and obtained his bachelor's and doctor's degrees from Yale University in the U.S. The new appointment for the outgoing CCNAA's chief in the United States, Tsai Wei-ping, is not known.

CNA ON DENG CAMPAIGN FOR PRC PRESIDENCY

[Text] Taipei, Nov. 19 (CNA) -- Teng Hsiao-ping's faction has been launching a nationwide campaign to help Teng gain Red China's newly reinstated presidency of state, according to sources from behind the bamboo curtain. The sources said that Teng's faction recently issued a document for intra-party circulation saying that "Teng Hsiao-ping is the most suitable candidate for president of state after considering domestic and foreign situations." The letters have been sent to local government, autonomous areas and military regions across the China mainland, the sources added. In spite of denouncement by anti-Teng forces, Teng's faction members are trying to make a favorable atmosphere on the China mainland to help Teng capture the throne. They hope to lobby Teng's nomination for state president through the upcoming fifth session of Red China's Fifth National People's Congress, the sources said.

IMPORT BAN ON ADDITIONAL JAPANESE GOODS LIFTED

[Text] Taipei, Nov. 18 (CNA) -- The Ministry of Economic Affairs Friday announced the lifting of ban on the import of another 689 items of Japanese goods. However, Japanese video recorders will still not be allowed to be imported.

Speaking at a news conference, Vice Economics Minister Wang Chou-ming called on Japan to take more effective steps to improve its trade imbalance with the Republic of China. In February this year, the Chinese Government imposed a ban on the import of 1,546 items of Japanese products. In July, Masumi Esaki, former minister of international trade and industry, led a mission representing Japan's ruling Liberal Democratic Party to hold talks with Chinese officials here on the trade disputes between the two nations. In view of the sincerity shown on both sides to improve the trade imbalance, the Chinese Government made first move by lifting ban on the import of 842 items of Japanese consumer goods in August.

Vice Minister Wang said that although Sino-Japanese trade imbalance cannot be corrected overnight, Japanese side should make more efforts to show sincerity in reducing tariff and non-tariff restrictions on the Chinese goods. He said that Japan will send a purchasing mission to this country in April next year in addition to strengthening technical cooperation with the Republic of China.

EDITORIAL CALLS FOR KEEPING TAIWAN SECURE

OW190929 Taipei CHINA POST in English 15 Nov 82 p 4

[Editorial: "Keeping This Bastion Secure"]

[Text] Premier Sun Yun-suan has once again reminded the people on this island to remain watchful and alert in the face of the Chinese communists' ambition to invade from across the Taiwan Strait.

Speaking at a recent meeting, the premier remarked, "despite the Chinese communist regime's various united front maneuvers toward the international community, its ambition to invade Taiwan, Penghu, Kinmen and Matsu has not changed.

"Therefore, we must remain on guard and not relax our preparedness for war. We must, instead, think of possible perils despite ostensible peace and keep this island of national revival secure while expanding the nation's strength."

This warning from the premier is enlightening and timely in view of the growing threat posed by communist expansion and the tendency among people here to pursue material comforts and to neglect the still trying situation of the country. Such a tendency is cause for concern, if not for alarm. It is eroding our morale and will to fight communism. If not checked, it could eventually make this island powerless in the event of a communist attack.

Furthermore, there is the even more severe danger posed by a handful of malcontents and plotters inside and outside the country. They resort to all types of devices to defame the government and, most probably aided by the communists, create civil unrest for the purpose of toppling the government.

Just recently the internationally famed Soviet writer Aleksandr Solzhenitsyn advised us not to "permit the youth of your country to become soft and placid, to become slaves to material goods until finally they will prefer captivity and slavery to the struggle for freedom."

Well aware of the evils of communism and the weakness and decadence of the Western world, Solzhenitsyn pointed out that "the fact that for 33 years you have lived peacefully does not mean that you might not be attacked in the following three years. You are not a serene, care-free island; you are an army, constantly under the menace of war."

The Soviet Nobel prize winner has the same wisdom as countless Chinese sages of the ancient times who kept warning their contemporaries and posterity against entertaining a false sense of security in times of turbulence and confusion.

The Republic of China on Taiwan is in a unique situation which few outsiders can fully appreciate. As Solzhenitsyn has pointed out, our goal is not only defense and self-preservation, but also the liberation of our billion compatriots on the mainland. The success of the ROC on Taiwan, in fact, is exerting a strong influence on conditions of the mainland. The existence of the ROC Government is therefore not only to the interest of the 18 million people on Taiwan, Penghu, Kinmen, and Matsu; it gives the billion of mainland Chinese the hope for freedom and a good life.

Any attempt to disrupt political order on this island bastion, thus jeopardizing the security of its 18 million residents, is a threat to the whole Chinese nation. He who makes such an attempt is putting his own self interest above the good of the billion Chinese who are struggling to carve out a brighter future. All of us in this last stronghold of the anti-communist movement should, instead of being narrow-minded, think of the future of Taiwan, Penghu, Kinmen, and Matsu in the larger context of the whole Chinese nation. The fate of this stronghold is dependent on that of the Chinese nation, and vice versa.

If we continue to be safe, strong, and prosperous, we will have an even stronger impact on the mainland where people have long been disillusioned with communism.

It is altogether imperative that we take every step to keep out island bastion secure and stable. To achieve that goal, every citizen must live a disciplined life and help maintain the orderliness of our society. We would have nothing to gain, but much to lose, if we should do anything that does harm to the unity and stability of our society.

SERIOUS SOCIAL, ENVIRONMENTAL PROBLEMS NOTED

OW220453 Taipei CNA in English 0246 GMT 22 Nov 82

[Text] Taipei, Nov. 22 (CNA) -- The average population in the Taiwan area now is 508 persons per square kilometer, the highest population density in the world. It is expected that the high birth rate will continue for many years, Interior Minister Lin Yang-kang said last Saturday.

He said that the target of the nation's population policy is to cut the natural population growth rate to 1.25 percent by the end of 1989.

Lin also reported the administrative situation of the Interior Ministry at the interior committee session of the Legislative Yuan.

He pointed out that the Taiwan area has only a limited inhabitable land area, but its population is increasing steadily. By the end of June, the population had reached 18.27 million, an average of 508 persons per square kilometer. The figure tops the list of the population density in the world.

For this reason, social and environmental problems, such as air pollution, traffic congestion, public facilities shortages, employment and school-attendance difficulties as well as the rising criminal rate, are getting serious.

PRESIDENT CHIANG VIEWS TIES WITH PRC, U.S.

PM191151 Paris LE FIGARO magazine in French 13-19 Nov 82 pp 102-107

[Interview with Republic of China President Chiang Ching-kuo by Henri-Christian Giraud -- date and place not given]

[Text] Henri-Christian Giraud: Mr president, the Chinese communists very recently launched a new "peace offensive" directed at the Republic of China. What is the practical significance of their proposals and why has your country paid no attention to them?

President Chiang Ching-kuo: The Chinese communists' ultimate aim in launching their peace offensive is to isolate and then destroy Free China in order to establish communism in it. They are merely adapting their methods to the events. They recently tried to prevent the Americans from selling us defensive weapons and then, after opposing it in vain, they tried to sabotage the women's world softball championship which was held in Taipei. They even went so far as to forbid other countries to open representation offices in Taipei. Despite attempts to camouflage it, it is obvious that the peace offensive is merely a ruse. The Chinese communists are assuming peaceful airs to deceive the world and eliminate us from the community of nations. I would really like the countries of the Free World to see their true face and not be taken in by their tactics.

Henri-Christian Giraud: In the West the news from mainland China is very incomplete and often conflicting, especially as regards the regime's present situation. How do you explain that and do you think mainland China has changed fundamentally since Mao Zedong's death?

President Chiang Ching-Kou: The explanation is simple: The mainland is a completely closed society under the communists! It is important not to be deceived: The "liberalized" zones and spheres (in other words what is shown to the foreigner -- tourist or politician -- who has come to find out for himself) are merely the regime's "high spots." That is why the outside world has difficulty in understanding what is really happening there. According to our information the communists are in fact encountering insuperable difficulties on all sides. The strict controls imposed by the party inhibit the population's enthusiasm, hence great reductions in yield and a drop in production. The present bureaucracy whose essential characteristics are corruption, privileges for officials and violent power struggles, is the most inefficient that has ever existed. That means that the population no longer has any confidence at all in the party and the regime's very foundations have been shaken. The problems of unemployment and young people are very serious. Society is disintegrating. The inefficiency of the economy and the government merely aggravate its ills and are leading the mainland to disaster. Those problems are all inherent in the communist system and changing the people in power cannot solve them. That was the situation under Mao Zedong and is still the situation under Deng Xiaoping. I must stress that Deng Xiaoping's apparent moderation is deceiving because the ideological principles remain the same and the party's control over people's minds and the government is still complete. Fundamentally there has been no change.

Henri-Christian Giraud: Since the recognition of the communist regime by the Western countries, the latter seem to have maintained official and peaceful relations with it. Do those ties really herald peace and tranquility?

Chiang Ching-Kou: Despite their official and peaceful relations with the PRC, the Western countries must never forget that the Chinese communists are Marxist-Leninists and, as such, have one ultimate objective: to establish communism in the Free World. Moreover their "anti-imperialist" and "anticolonialist" slogans are heard throughout Southeast Asia, and in Latin America and Africa. But they do not stop at propaganda. What is more serious is that throughout those regions they support anti-government and anti-Western movements. One example of their duplicity can be seen in Malaysia which asked them to stop supporting the rebel Malaysian communists. Do you know what they did? They dodged the issue by claiming that support depended on the party and not the "government!"

Henri-Christian Giraud: It seems that we are now witnessing an attempt at rapprochement between communist China and the Soviet Union. What do you think of that?

President Chiang Ching-Kuo: It is vital to go beyond appearances because relations between the Chinese and Soviet communists are complex and subtle. Why? Because they are both antagonistic and cooperative. They are antagonistic because the two parties are vying for leadership of the world communist movement (that is why the Chinese communists constantly call for "anti-hegemonistic" struggle). They are cooperative because they are communists and both preach world revolution. Moreover their views on and actions toward the Middle East, Poland, Southern Africa, the Korean Peninsula and the Caribbean are comparable. As regards relations between the Chinese and Soviet communists, therefore, it is dangerously misguided to try to predict their future disagreements. Instead it is necessary to monitor their hostile attitude toward the democratic and free societies. Even if they do not change substantially and continue to oppose each other the Free World has nothing to gain from a confrontation between them.

Henri-Christian Giraud: The Republic of China's achievements in Taiwan are inspired by the three principles of the people. Could you explain what the three principles of the people are?

President Chiang Ching-kuo: The spirit of the three principles of the people can be compared with the French Revolution's slogan: "Liberty, Equality, Fraternity" and with President Lincoln's expression: "A government of the people, by the people and for the people." Its goal is to establish democracy and freedom in China and promote peace and happiness in this world, which corresponds to the Chinese people's aspirations.

Henri-Christian Giraud: The Republic of China has set itself the mission of saving the mainland and reunifying China. Is not that mission actually impossible in view of the huge disproportion in surface area and forces?

President Chiang Ching-kuo: Communism's failure on the mainland proves that it is not suitable for China, whereas what we have achieved in Free China in around 30 years is the proof that the three principles of the people suit the Chinese. The Chinese people's culture and personality make them completely impervious to the communist doctrine and system and the mainland's population has now realized that the only path to salvation is to abandon communism and adopt the three principles of the people which are the source of democracy, freedom, peace and happiness. Our mission is to encourage that attitude: The communist dictatorship will be overthrown not so much by arms as by popular feeling. Of course the Chinese in Free China will support their mainland compatriots to the end in this difficult and implacable anticommunist struggle. They are already channeling all their strength into that.

Henri-Christian Giraud: The XINHUA agency has not ruled out any means of rejoining Taiwan to the mainland. In addition, hostilities between the two Chinas in the Taiwan Straits have never stopped. Do you think that the communists might launch military action?

President Chiang Ching-Kuo: The communists hope to seize our bases at Kinmen, Matsu, Taiwan and Penghu. That is laid down in their "constitution." It is common knowledge. The existence of the Republic of China, a beacon of democracy and freedom over the mainland is a considerable threat to them and that is why they only think of destroying it. However they know that they are not strong enough to seize Taiwan and that is why they have adopted a "cooperative attitude" by calling for "reunification by peaceful means." Their objective is to deceive the Free World, undermine the support which the Republic of China has in the international community and sap our morale in order to be able to launch a military attack.

Free Economy

Henri-Christian Giraud: The Republic of China will shortly have four nuclear power stations. Your country's armed forces could use them to manufacture nuclear weapons and restore some balance of forces. Will your country abandon that idea?

President Chiang Ching-kuo: Our principle has always been to use nuclear energy peacefully in order to improve the lot of the whole population. That is how we have acted and how we will act. We have already made known our decision not to manufacture nuclear weapons.

Henri-Christian Giraud: At the same time as strengthening its relations with the Chinese communists the United States is trying to maintain its ties with Taiwan. Is that not inconsistent?

President Chiang Ching-kuo: We have already explained our opposition to the strengthening of relations between the United States and communist China on several occasions. Those countries have nothing in common. On the other hand the Republic of China and the United States have in common a free economy and a democratic government, are long-standing allies and cooperate in many spheres. The strengthening of their relations is not only in the two countries' interest but also contributes to the prosperity and regular progress of the free countries in the West Pacific. The Reagan administration has stated several times that it would honor the law on relations with Taiwan and would boost their relations.

I am sure that cooperation between the Republic of China and the United States, which is mutually beneficial to us, will constantly be increased.

Henri-Christian Giraud: Does your country not have common interests with the Soviet Union?

President Chiang Ching-kuo: The terrible afflications that the Republic of China has suffered for decades all stem from the Communist International's intrigues. Thus our policy is and remains firmly anticommunist. The Republic of China has no common interest with the Soviet communists who follow Marxist-Leninism and who have the evil plan of "spreading communism throughout the world."

Henri-Christian Giraud: What is the state of relations between the Republic of China and the Common Market? In what directions are they heading?

President Chiang Ching-kuo: Because of geography and the traditional economic support provided by their capital, their raw materials, their investments, their advanced technology and their support in winning foreign markets, we are particularly attentive to the quality of our relations with the United States and Japan. But we are making every effort to diversify our markets and extend our relations with Europe. However, although it is composed of democratic countries, Europe discriminates against us and does not allow us to enjoy customs advantages that are enjoyed by countries at the same stage of development as us. This is not only unjust but contravenes the principles of equality in free trade. We are perfectly well aware that commercial relations must be balanced if they are to be healthy. Thus, before the participants in the multilateral commercial negotiations in Geneva even reach agreement, we have taken the inititive of implementing a differentiated customs system and enabling the West Eruopean countries to benefit froma preferential customs tariff. We have also taken positive action by staging exhibitions of European products and increasing our imports from Europe. Western Europe has now become an important trade partner. From that viewpoint our relations are making constant progress. For several years the European banks have been hurriedly opening a branch of representation office in Tapei. For their part the International Commercial Bank of China and the First Bank have opened representation offices in Paris and London. I hope that this trend will continue.

Henri-Christian Giraud: Your imports from Japan are much too high, whereas that country has reduced its investments in Taiwan. Is that not having a harmful influence on your country? Can Europe not take the place occupied by Japan?

President Chiang Ching-kuo: The trade deficit between the Republic of China and Japan is a serious problem that we are trying to solve. That deficit, which constantly increased in recent years, reached $3.45 billion in 1981. Mr Ezaki Masumi, chairman of the Liberal Democratic Party's international economic relations commission, came to Taiwan in July at the head of a delegation. That was an opportunity for a sincere exchange of views and we succeeded in ensuring that Japan will increase its imports, remove obstacles other than tariff barriers and encourage its nationals to come and invest in Taiwan.

A number of agreements in principle were signed. I think that this trade deficit problem will gradually improve. Furthermore economic and commercial relations between the Republic of China and the West European countries are increasingly close. There is reason to be optimistic about the future of those relations because at present our industry, which is moving on to a higher stage, urgently needs equipment, new technology and advanced European industrial products.

PREMIER SUN COMMENTS ON PRC-USSR RAPPROCHEMENT

[Text] Taipei, Nov. 19 (CNA) -- Premier Sun Yun-hsuan said that both Moscow and Peiping are playing games against the U.S. in pretending to talk with each other.

In an interview with the "ASIA MAGAZINE" published in Hong Kong Thursday, the premier pointed out that in order to seek Western technology, investments and trade, the Peiping regime has to come close to the West, particularly to the U.S. because the Chinese communists know well that the Soviet Union cannot give them assistance. From the long-term viewpoints, Premier Sun said, both Moscow and Peiping are firm believers in communism with aims to communize the Free World. He stressed that the Republic of China will continue to maintain its basic national principles and policy of self-reliance because it does not want to play games of power politics. The premier also reaffirmed to strengthen ties of friendship and cooperation with the nations in this part of the world. He then expressed concern about the future of Chinese compatriots in Hong Kong, indicating welcome for them to join the task of national reconstruction in Taiwan.

Premier Sun said the Republic of China will never recognize the Peiping regime's claim of sovereignty over Hong Kong. The Peiping regime is currently engaging more than 200,000 people in the united front warfare against this country, he told the magzazine. Under such circumstances, he said, this country is not in a position to life the "martial law" which actually has not interfered with the normal ways of life in Taiwan.

Turning to the question of forming new political parties, the premier emphasized the government's stand to prohibit the setting up of new parties at present in view of the special conditions existing in the nation. However, he said that the government has always allowed individuals to take part in the elections and politics.

As to the economic problems facing the nation, he said the government will try to cultivate more personnel with advanced training so as to accelerate the transformation of economic structure from the labor-intensive stage to the technology-intensive level.

He again stressed that Taiwan and mainland China are inseparable and should be reunified under freedom and democracy so as to give the whole Chinese people happiness and good life.

The premier then predicted that President Chiang Ching-kuo will be reelected to a second term because he is in good health and enjoys popular support from the people in Taiwan, the compatriots on the mainland and the overseas Chinese around the world.

TA KUNG PAO: DENG XIAOPING MEETS U.S. PROFESSOR

[Special feature: "Deng Xiaoping Meets Yuan Shaowen" -- remarks by Professor Yuan Shaowen, chairman of the American delegation to the Sino-U.S. conference on energy, resources and environment held in Beijing, on 13 November meeting with Deng Xiaoping]

[Text] "During the meetings our revered Mr Deng mainly talked about the Sino-U.S. conference on energy, resources and environment and affirmed its achievements. I was unexpectedly gratified to see that he was hale and hearty. Looking at my white hair, he asked how old I was. I answered that I was 68 years old. He said that he was 10 years older than me. At the old age of 78, he is really a rare example of someone who has preserved his swift judgment and shows no sign of senility. The only bad thing is that he smokes too much.

"Our revered Mr Deng cordially asked me where I had visited. I said that I had already been to my home town, Shaoxing. He said: Then you are a townsman of Premier Zhou's? I said: A schoolmate too -- I studied at Nankai University in Tianjin. Mr Deng has a good memory. In our conversation, he even talked about my father-in-law Hu Bijiang, the former chairman of the Jiaotong Bank in those years. He also mentioned some personages of the financial and economic circles at that time. All those present at the meeting, including myself, knew very little about what Mr Deng referred to."

The above is a statement by Professor Yuang Shaowen of George Washington University of the United States, who talked in Hong Kong on 16 November about his meeting with Deng Xiaoping on 13 November. Having done valuable work, he was received by the Chinese leader. This shows that Chinese leaders today are concentrating on national construction and attaching importance to the contributions of foreign scholars. Professor Yuan was the chairman of the American delegation to the Sino-U.S. conference on energy, resources and environment held in Beijing 7 - 12 November. He stopped over in Hong Kong en route to the United States.

Energy, Resources and Environment

Such a conference held when our country is concentrating on the four modernizations is of great significance. To study energy, resources and the environment as a whole is a new concept of the modern era, or rather an understanding that industrialized countries have reached after suffering from the disastrous effects of industrial development in the last few decades. The best example to illustrate this is the City of London that in its early years, was blocked by thick smoke and suffered from polluted water in the Thames. Today, once again it is enjoying a pure and fresh atmosphere on fine days and trout can be seen swimming in the river. According to Professor Yuan, the relationship between a country's economic construction and its energy supply, resources and environment is like that between man's livelihood and food, clothing and housing. Each of these things is equally important. However, their integration is even more important. Through overall planning we can avoid those divergent courses that our countries have taken in the past.

Unlimited Resources Should Be Utilized

The exploitation of energy is a problem that draws special attention in our country's construction. According to Professor Yuan, during the conversation Mr Deng asserted that China has abundant water resources. However, only 4 percent of those resources have been exploited thus far.

Although hydropower projects require vast funds, a long period of time to implement and enormous manpower, they provide long-term utility and are free of pollution once they are completed. Our country has done quite well in developing small-sized water power projects, but has moved too slow on large projects.

Our country has an extremely rich reserve of coal. Professor Yuan pointed out that the proportion of carbon dioxide in the air will increase terribly if we fail to pay attention to preventing pollution when using coal as a source of energy. Most of our country's petroleum is exported in exchange for foreign exchange. The reserve of energy resources, both petroleum and coal, will be reduced as it is exploited. For this reason, we must, at the same time, pay attention to exploiting unlimited resources, such as solar energy and wind power. If we can store the abundant heat energy of summer for use in winter, and preserve ice in winter for use in summer at low cost, we will be able to save a considerable amount of petroleum and coal, and thus greatly raise the people's living standards. When asked if it is possible to develop and mass produce a solar energy collecting device that is as easily available as refrigerators and washing machines and can help solve the problem of household energy supply, Professor Yuan smiled and said yes, but asserted that our generation may not see such a development -- solar energy equipment is too expensive at present.

It should be noted that besides Yuan Shaowen, Leonard Woodcock and Melvin Calvin were also among the American representatives to the conference. Leonard Woodcock is the former chairman of the United Auto Workers of America and was U.S. ambassador in China during the Carter presidency. He is now a professor in politics at the University of Michigan. By making a speech on the theme of the conference, he made the conference a more constructive one and added a new chapter to his long-term effort to improve the Sino-U.S. relations. Melvin Calvin, a Nobel Prize winner, is a professor in Chemistry at the University of California. He read a thesis entitled "Fuels For Tomorrow That Can Be Recycled," inspiring a new approach to solve the energy problem. He decided to go to Xishuanbanna after the conference to study the possibility of planting a type of petroleum tree that he discovered in Brazil. Just as rubber trees produce rubber, petroleum trees produce petroleum naturally. The theses published at the conference by the above two participants and other Chinese and foreign specialists and scientists have already been compiled by Yuan Shaowen into a collection of more than 600 pages, available to all the participants for further study.

On the Chinese side, the organs participating in the conference included the China Scientific and Technological Association and the China Energy Research Association. All members of the Chinese Central Advisory Commission are vanguards of Chinese scientific, technological and academic circles, including Zhou Peiyuan, Qian Xuesen, Ma Hong, Wang Ganchang, Wu Zhonghua, Zhang Wei, and so on.

A Wish To Make Contributions to the Four Modernizations

Professor Yuan said that he was really moved by Mr Deng's cordiality in inviting him to come again with his wife. As an American citizen, he has lived in the United States for half a century. As Leonard Woodcock pointed out in his speech, Professor Yuan is a man of high standing in American academic circles. He is enthusiastic about making contributions to his ancestral country. "It is an honor to work with such a man," Leonard Woodcock asserted. The Chinese nation is not inferior in intelligence. Many overseas Chinese, including American-Chinese, who have shown their talent and are acknowledged as specialists in scientific and technological fields are eager to make contributions to the four modernizations of China.

On the other hand, quite a few foreign specialists and scholars are also willing to help us. The current Sino-U.S. conference on energy, resource and environment is one of the best forms to import foreign technology into China to facilitate its construction. At the old age of 78, and as chairman of the Advisory Commission of the CPC Central Committee, Deng Xiaoping still found time to meet with Yuan Shaoven although he was really busy. Professor Yuan regards this reception as a distinguished honor. Such a reception clearly shows that China welcomes all technological imports and all friends from all over the world who want to assist in her construction.

WEN WEI PO ON ZHANG AIPING APPOINTMENT

HK200321 Hong Kong WEN WEI PO in Chinese 20 Nov 82 p 3

["Random Talk on the News" by Chao tung: "Zhang Aiping Appointed Minister of Defense"]

[Text] The NPC has appointed a new defense minister: Zhang Aiping has taken over from Geng Biao.

Everyone is very familiar with Zhang Aiping, an old general who presided longest over the National Defense Science and Technology Commission. He put in a lot of hard work for China's first atomic bomb explosion, the launching of its first satellite, the launching of its first ICBM carrier rocket and its first launching of a carrier rocket from a submarine.

Zhang Aiping's appointment as defense minister is quite appropriate today, when China's armed forces are striving to develop modern weapons and become revolutionized, regularized and modernized.

Zhang Aiping joined the CYL in 1926. He took part in the Long March. During the war of resistance against Japan he served as political commissar of the 8th Route Army Column, commander of the subcolumn, deputy commander of the 3d Division of the new 4th Army and commander of its 4th Division. In 1949 he became naval commander in the East China Military Region, and after founding of the state he was made chief of staff of the 3d Field Army. In 1962 he became vice chairman of the National Defense Science and Technology Commission (the chairman was Nie Rongzhen).

Zhang Aiping is both a resourceful and skilled general and also an expert well versed in military science. In 1939, when Liu Shaoqi, secretary of the Central Plains Bureau, was surrounded by puppet forces in the Hongze Lake region in Northern Jiangsu, Zhang Aiping devised a clever strategem for enabling Liu Shaoqi and the other leaders of the Central Plains Bureau to break out of the puppet forces' encirclement. Liu Shaoqi greatly appreciated this. During the National Liberation War, with the strength of only one army, Zhang Aiping checked the Kuomintang's Qiu Qingquan Corps several times its size in the Huaihai campaign. He fought a heroic and stubborn battle that enabled the main force to completely annihilate the Qiu Corps. The fame of this exploit resounded throughout the army.

Zhang Aiping has also made great efforts to become an expert in national defense science and technology. During one rocket launching instruments indicated abnormal voltage during the countdown. At the time the weather had been poor for many days, and advantage had to be taken of the slightest break. If the launch were halted, the experiment would be delayed. Relying on his scientific knowledge, Zhang judged that the malfunction was minor and would not affect normal launching. He decisively gave the order to launch, and the result was successful.

Zhang Aiping is very astute in grasping modern military trends.

Not long after the United States had successfully tested the neutron bomb, he wrote a poem brimming with both pride and scientific spirit: "Alloy steel is not unyielding, and there is nothing difficult about the neutron bomb. Mastering science and technology, the heroes dare to break through all barriers." RENMIN RIBAO published this in 1977. It can be imagined that Zhang Aiping, who was presiding over the National Defense Science and Technology Commission, attached considerable importance to the power of this weapon in thwarting a mass attack by enemy tanks, took accurate aim, and immediately organized an effort to tackle the major technical hurdles so as to acquire new weapons and tactics. Thus the hard steel alloy of the polar bear's tanks would become "not unyielding," and their attack would be smashed.

It is precisely at the time when the military expert Zhang Aiping has been appointed minister of defense that the three old marshals, Ye Jianying, Xu Xiangqian and Nie Rongzhen, have instructed the army to do a good job in logistical work, pointing out that this work must make still greater contributions to modernizing national defense.

Logistical work includes the manufacture of new weapons and the successful operation of defense industries. The National Defense Science and Technology Commission has sophisticated research projects in hand that will transform the fruits of new national defense science and technology into new weapons for the entire armed forces. This effort depends on the logistics departments. It appears that China's Armed Forces are now speeding up their regularization and taking on a new appearance.

WEN WEI PO ON 'OPTIMISTIC' SINO-SOVIET PROSPECTS

[Editorial: "Optimistic Outlook for Sino-Soviet Relations"]

[Text] When Huang Hua, China's special envoy and former foreign minister, returned to Beijing after attending the funeral of Brezhnev, he told reporters at the airport that the next round of Sino-Soviet talks would be held in Moscow. He said he was optimistic when asked about prospects for the talks.

There are reasons for Huang Hua's "optimism." There are three aspects:

1. Since Brezhnev spoke in Tashkent on 26 March 1982 calling for improved relations with China, there has been some easing of the tense confrontation between China and the Soviet Union. That the two great countries that have been at drawn daggers and also engaged in bloody clashes at Zhenbao Island and on the Xinjiang border can engage in calm discussions is in the interests of world peace and not just in the interests of the Chinese and Soviet peoples. China certainly does not want a war. China hopes for a peaceful international environment for carrying out its four modernizations, and so she is sincere in her desire to put an end to the tense confrontation between herself and the Soviet Union. And in the past 9 months, the Soviet Union has indeed taken a series of steps and also dispatched Deputy Foreign Minister Ilyichev to Beijing for talks in order to discuss "possible ways of strengthening mutual trust in the border region between the Soviet Union and China." The chief editor of PRAVDA has also revealed that the large-scale military confrontation on that border may be gradually changed, and that both sides have started to talk about proportional troops withdrawals there. In the past 9 months Sino-Soviet relations have advanced toward the goal of normalization.

2. After Andropov succeeded Brezhnev, he adopted a clear-cut approach and held a series of dialogues with China, the United States, Japan, West Germany and Pakistan (on the Afghan issue) calling for an easing in relations. This indicates that the Soviet Union is now in a period of transition when new people are taking over from old. Due to the aging of the leadership during the last years of Brezhnev, the Soviet Union's efficiency in handling affairs declined, and the piled-up problems of domestic economic deterioration and thorny issues in foreign affairs need to be cleared up by new leaders. As far as Andropov is concerned, changing the Soviet Union's situation of making enemies and behaving aggressively every where and seeking an easier international environment will help consolidate the position of the new Soviet leadership. In fact, the Soviet Union is unable to swallow China, while China will not invade the Soviet Union. The sharp confrontation between China and the Soviet Union was an affair of the Brezhnev era. Andropov is not burdened with this problem, so for him to change this situation will not affect his own prestige but will in fact help him create a new situation.

3. Due to economic instability and recession in the West, one after another rulers in Japan, West Germany, Spain, Italy and the Netherlands have been dismissed from office. Reagan's Republican Party also suffered a setback. This economic recession is not only a matter for the West. It has also occurred in the Soviet Union's Eastern Europe bloc. If the present rulers fail to devote their energy to the economy for the time being, fail to adopt the popular measures of cutting military spending and increasing foreign trade channels, and fail to ease international relations somewhat, they will find themselves in a very isolated position. Hence Reagan, who strikes the pose of an anti-Soviet hero, has had to cancel his embargo on the shipment of natural gas pipeline equipment to the Soviet Union, increase grain exports to the Soviet Union when that country is short of grain, and ask the Soviet leaders to expand the scope of hot-line dialogue. That leading politicians of so many Western countries went to Moscow to attend the funeral shows that, based on the interests of the West, they hope for dialogue with the Soviet Union instead of still sharper encirclement and military confrontation. And that the new Kremlin leaders were quick to respond indicates that the possibility of seeking solutions by peaceful means has emerged in the world.

The peoples of the world do not want war, and it is ultimately a good thing that the antagonistic factors and misunderstandings that could lead to war should be reduced somewhat. China's foreign policy of maintaining independence and keeping the initiative in its own hands is to do more to benefit peace and also more to resist hegemonism.

XISHA QUNDAO DESIGNATED RESTRICTED MILITARY ZONE

HK220122 Hong Kong HONG KONG STANDARD in English 22 Nov 82 p 12

[Text] Hong Kong fighermen were recently informed by the Chinese authorities not to fish in the Paracel Islands [Xisha Qundao] as the area has been designated a military restricted zone in August.

Hong Kong and Kowloon Fishermen's Welfare Association Chairman Keung Yin-man said they were informed by Shenzhen Fisheries Association in a meeting two weeks ago.

He said they were also told two months ago that Chinese soldiers were instructed to fire at vessels intruding on the zone.

"Not all Hong Kong fishermen knew about this when shooting incident occurred in mid-October," he said.

Then, a Cheungchau fisherman was shot dead and his brother seriously injured while seeking refuge from a typhoon on Yezi Island in the Paracels.

It was learnt that Chinese personnel on the island had been on a red alert since China's relationship with Vietnam deteriorated. The island is part of the Paracels group also claimed by Vietnam.

Mr Keung said at the meeting with the Shenzhen Fisheries Association, the Chinese authorities told them the soldiers who fired, had acted correctly and according to instruction.

However, the Chinese authorities had shown sympathy to the victims' family members, he said.

After the shooting a representative of Hong Kong fishermen visited China to investigate the tragedy.

Mr Ng Kam-chuen returned after three days and reported that Guangdong authorities would send a team to probe the shooting.

Meanwhile, Mr Keung Yin-man said his association members would be further warned not to approach the military restricted zone to avoid a possible similar tragedy.

12 Mile Limit Announced

HK220208 Hong Kong SOUTH CHINA MORNING POST in English 22 Nov 82 p 1

[Excerpts] Local fishermen have been given an urgent warning to stay away from Paracel chain of Islands, where a fisherman was shot dead last month by the Chinese.

The Hong Kong and Kowloon Fishermen's Welfare Association Chairman, Mr Keung Yin-man, said he was told by Shumchun fisheries officials about two weeks ago that the islands have been put on a "first degree" military alert since September.

Fishermen from all countries have been warned to stay at least 12 nautical miles from the islands. Sovereignty of the Paracel chain is in dispute between China and Vietnam.

Hong Kong people who want to fish Chinese waters are asked to register at monthly meetings in China. Mr Keung said he was told by Chinese officials that the islands had been declared a restricted zone both for Chinese and for Hong Kong fishermen, at a meeting before the zone came into force.

UN COMMITTEE APPROVES TELEVISION SATELLITE PLAN

OW230343 Beijing XINHUA in English 0236 GMT 23 Nov 82

[Text] United Nations, November 22 (XINHUA) -- The U.N. special political committee approved today a set of draft principles for governing international direct television broadcasting by satellite which have been under negotiations for years.

A draft resolution which contains these principles stresses that access to the technology in this field should be available to all states without discrimination on terms mutually agreed by all concerned.

It provides that "a state which intends to establish or authorize the establishment of an international direct television broadcasting satellite service shall, without delay, notify the proposed receiving state or states of such intention and shall promptly enter into consultation with any of those states which so request."

International direct television broadcasting by satellite should be carried out "in a manner compatible with the sovereign rights of states, including the principle of non-intervention as well as with the right of everyone to seek, receive and impart information and ideas as enshrined in the relevant United Nations instruments," (?the resolution) adds.

The draft resolution was supported by most developing countries, but opposed by certain developed countries. The draft resolution will be submitted to the U.N. General Assembly for adoption.

XINHUA VIEWS SCHEDULED GATT SESSION IN GENEVA

OW192332 Beijing XINHUA in English 1624 GMT 19 Nov 82

["Background Material: Developing Countries Expect Equal International Trade Relations" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Beijing, November 19 (XINHUA) -- Trade ministers from the 88 members of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT) will meet in Geneva Nov. 24-27 to work out ways to settle worldwide trade frictions.

At the meeting, the first of its kind in 10 years, the developing countries are expected to cry for improvements on the equality of international trade and on the worsening trade conditions they are facing. Analysts believed that whether they will achieve their goals or not, the developing countries have every reason to do so.

In recent years, the economy of the developing countries has been not only affected by the continuing Western economic crisis, but also hit hard by protectionist measures taken by the developed countries. Facts are telling:

-- Many developed countries have adopted various measures to limit or reduce imports from the developing countries while dumping more manufactured goods into the latter. Compared with 1980, the total export of the Western countries increased by 2 percent in 1981, of which 60 percent went to the developing countries. But the latter's export of mineral products and oil was reduced by 12 and 15 percent respectively.

-- The discriminative tariff barriers, imposed by the Western countries, have barred the developing countries' export of agricultural goods, processed goods in particular. According to Western reports, Japan makes an average levy of 3.3 percent on imported foodstuffs coming from other developed countries. But it makes an average levy of 54.3 percent on foodstuffs imported from the developing countries. Similar unequal duties are also seen in the European Economic Community (EEC) and the United States.

-- The developed countries have further forced down prices for raw materials such as mineral and agricultural products, from which the developing countries earn 75 percent of their foreign exchange. In 1981, prices for raw materials on the world market were reduced by 15 percent as compared with 1980. However, they fell further by 8 percent to the lowest point in 35 years in the first half of this year as compared with the same period of 1981.

Statistics of the International Monetary Fund (IMF) show that in 1981 prices for coffee, cocoa and sugar on the world market fell by 24, 20 and 37 percent respectively. Prices for rubber and copper were also reduced by 21 and 20 percent respectively, according to the statistics.

As a result of the Western protectionist measures, the trade deficit of the developing countries in the past two years totalled 192.7 billion U.S. dollars, amost equal to the total of their trade deficits in the 1970's. This has certainly hindered their national economic development.

However, the slowed economic development in the developing countries, partly resulting from the unequal trading pattern, is also harmful to the Western developed countries, for they heavily depend on raw materials and agricultural goods of the developing countries and vast markets there for their manufactured goods. The EEC admitted that the European and world economic crisis cannot be overcome if economic relations with the developing countries are not expanded.

Since the beginning of this year, representatives of the developing countries, at the U.N. General Assembly and other international conferences, have strongly demanded that the unequal economic and trade relations between the North and the South be changed. Their demand has won sympathy and support from public opinion and figures of insight in the world.

Now, the developing countries hope that the GATT meeting will play an active role in weakening protectionism and abolishing the discriminative measures imposed on them. They believe that this is beneficial not only to the developing countries but also to the recovery and development of the Western economy and improvement on the North-South relations.

Talks With Zhao Ziyang

[Text] Beijing, November 21 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang held talks here this morning with Prime Minister Son Sann of the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea. It is learned that both sides exchanged views on world situation and, in particular, Kampuchea's struggle against Vietnamese aggressors.

Zhao Ziyang said the Kampuchean people have won tremendous victories in their struggle against Vietnamese aggressors. However, the struggle is a protracted and arduous one, and calls for vigilance.

To develop the excellent situation in the Kampuchean people's struggle against Vietnam, Zhao said, it is important to consolidate and enhance the alliance of the three patriotic forces of Kampuchea and strengthen thei role in the anti-Vietnamese struggle. The Chinese premier appreciated Son Sann's view that alliance, once formed, should keep.

Zhao said China supports the three patriotic forces of Kampuchea resisting Vietnamese aggression, and will not favor one against another. China has no intention to establish its sphere of influence in Kampuchea, he added. The Chinese premier said, "We hope that the three forces of Kampuchea will place the national interests and their united struggle against Vietnam above everything else, and cherish and strengthen their alliance."

"We wish to see an independent, peaceful, neutral and nonaligned Kampuchea and a national union government which unites all patriotic forces of Kampuchea," he said. Zhao stressed that it is not an expedient measure but a long-term fundamental policy for China to support the alliance of the three patriotic forces of Kampuchea resisting Vietnamese aggression.

Outlining the situation in Kampuchea, Prime Minister Son Sann said the Kampuchean people, in high spirits, are taking the initiative in waging a guerrilla war throughout the country. "We maintain that the united struggle against Vietnam by the three patriotic parties represents the supreme interests of the Kampuchean nation. We shall exert ourselves in the fight against the Vietnamese aggressors until our country is liberated," he stated. Son Sann also thanked China for its assistance to the Kampuchean people over a long period.

Taking part in the talks were Wu Xueqian, Chinese minister of foreign affairs, Han Nianlong, advisor to the Foreign Ministry, Zhang Zhen, deputy chief of the General Staff of the Chinese People's Liberation Army, Dien Del and Hing Kunthon, members of the Executive Committee of the National Front for Liberation of the Khmer people (F.N.L.P.K.), and Eang Chin Han, secretary general of the Executive Committee.

Zhao Ziyang Hosts Banquet

[Text] Beijing, November 21 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang gave a banquet in honor of Son Sann, prime minister of the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea, and his party at the Great Hall of the People here this evening.

Speaking first at the banquet, Zhao Ziyang said: "The formation of the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea reflects the desire of the Kampuchean people and conforms to their interests. It also accords with the common aspiration of all justice-upholding countries in the world. It marks a new stage of the Kampuchean people's efforts to strengthen their unity, resist the Vietnamese aggressors, and safeguard national independence and state sovereignty.

"Since the formation of the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea its three principal leaders have carried out active diplomatic activities, extended the influence of the coalition government and won wider sympathy and support." The Chinese premier described Son Sann as "a patriot who has made contributions to defending national independence and the fatherland's liberation and uniting all the patriotic forces in Kampuchea to resist the Vietnamese aggressors."

Zhao Ziyang said: "For more than three years, the Vietnamese authorities, backed by the Soviet Union, have intended to annex Kampuchea by armed strength. But its dream of wiping out Kampuchea was smashed by the resistance of the valiant Kampuchean armed forces and people. The Vietnamese aggressors are now bogged down in a quagmire."

He said: "The Vietnamese authorities have not changed their policy of aggression and expansion. They continue to refuse to carry out the U.N. resolution and pull out its troops from Kampuchea. They are preparing for a new operation on the Kampuchea theater. Furthermore, the Vietnamese authorities have employed various intrigues to sow dissension among the patriotic forces of Kampuchea in an attempt to obstruct and undermine their coalition." Premier Zhao quoted Prime Minister Son as saying: "Closing our ranks is our answer."

Zhao Ziyang said: "We believe that if the patriotic forces in Kampuchea, under the leadership of the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea, strengthen their unity and persist in the struggle, they realize the aspiration of the Kampuchean nation and liberate their country from the iron (?heels) of the Vietnamese aggressors.

"Justice and truth are on the side of the Kampuchean people. All the peace-loving and justice-holding countries and peoples in the world are siding with the Kampuchean people. Final victory certainly belongs to the heroic Kampuchean people."

Son Sann, in his speech, said, "the Khmer people are waging a heroic struggle to beat back the Vietnamese aggressors." He strongly condemned the Vietnamese invaders for "their barbarous suppression, expansion and incorporation of the Kampuchean territory into their own."

The Kampuchean prime minister said Vietnam's occupation of Kampuchea has created an increasingly intense and unstable situation in this region. "The Soviet Union has done its utmost to strengthen its strategic position in Southeast Asia by having access to the naval bases in Cam Ranh, Danang and Ream and providing more and more military, financial and other aid to Vietnam. The Soviet Union stands by the side of Vietnam in the Kampuchean conflicts," he said.

He said the countries which concern themselves with the safeguarding of regional and world peace and stability, the ASEAN nations in particular, have made unremitting efforts to work out a peaceful and fair political solution to the Kampuchean issue.

Son Sann said the three resistance forces of Kampuchea are aware of their mission for Kampuchea's liberation. As prime minister of the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea, he declared that the three forces that form the coalition government will mobilize all their forces to wage struggles in political, diplomatic and other fields so as to fully restore Kampuchea's independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity.

He said, "to lead an effective struggle for the liberation of the Khmer people, we are determined to take all necessary actions to maintain and develop the mutual knowledge, trust and understanding among the various parties of the coalition government and to realize the national harmony on the basis of respecting each other's obligations and the acknowledged and agreed principles."

Son Sann said, "in the face of the subversive activities of the insidious enemies of the Kampuchean state and people, we shall make every possible effort to safeguard the prestige of the coalition government at home and abroad." Son Sann called on all peace-loving and justice-upholding countries and people to aid the Kampuchean people fighting for national liberation.

Son Sann thanked the Chinese Government and people for their continuing support to the just struggle of the Kampuchean people. Son Sann said: "When we drive all Vietnamese aggressors out of Kampuchea and win final liberation, we shall build Kampuchea into a truly independent, neutral and non-aligned country with no foreign military bases on our territory."

Present were Ngapoi Ngawang Jigme, vice-chairman of the Standing Committee of the National People's Congress; State Councillor Huang Hua; Foreign Minister Wu Xuequian; Han Nianlong, adviser to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs; Zhang Zhen, deputy chief of the General Staff of the Chinese People's Liberation Army; and leaders of other departments.

HK210054 Beijing ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE in Chinese 0849 GMT 20 Nov 82

[Text] Beijing, 20 Nov (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- NPC Standing Committee Vice Chairman Liao Chengzhi said when meeting a Hong Kong factory owners' association delegation here this morning: China will recover sovereignty over Hong Kong by 1997 at the latest, and Hong Kong will be ruled by Hong Kong people. I do not think they will be changed.

The reception was held in the Jiangsu Room of the Great Hall of the People.

PM221403 London THE DAILY TELEGRAPH in English 20 Nov 82 p 7

[Graham Earnshaw Beijing dispatch: "UK Plans for Defense of Hong Kong"]

[Text] Britain's Army chief, General Sir John Stanier, indicated in Hong Kong yesterday that contingency plans existed to defend the British colony from an attack by China, a statement certain to further anger the Beijing government.

Secret Sino-British talks on the future on Hong Kong are underway, but China has said repeatedly that it regards the colony as Chinese territory and intends to recover sovereignty over it no matter what.

"Obviously you do not have military forces anywhere in the world without making contingency plans, but it is not our policy to discuss these openly," he told a press conference.

Britain has five battalions based on Hong Kong, including about 5,000 Gurkhas from Nepal.

Asked if the troops would defend Hong Kong against a Chinese invasion, General Stanier said:

"The question is hypothetical, but you have got armed soldiers and in the defence cost-sharing agreement (between Hong Kong and London) Britain is prepared to maintain the integrity and security of the colony."

RENMIN RIBAO REPORTS ON MIDDLE EAST PEACE TALKS

[Dispatch from Correspondents Yu Chengxiu [0205 2052 4423] and Lin Jiaoming [2651 4109 2494]: "Middle East Peace Talks Hard To Keep Going"]

[Text] Cairo, 19 Nov -- An Arab League delegation headed by King Husayn of Jordan has visited France for talks with President Mitterrand on the Middle East peace issue. This is the second permanent member of the UN Security Council to be visited by the delegation. At the same time, U.S. presidential special envoy Habib has arrived in Beirut where he has begun meeting with countries concerned on the withdrawal of foreign forces from Lebanon and on promoting President Reagan's peace proposals. These events are linked to the new Middle East peace talk process.

This new process began in September with the Arab summit in Fes and Reagan's proposals, but so far there are no prospects of a solution. The main obstacles are concentrated in two issues: how to force the Israelis to withdraw their forces from Lebanon; and how to effectively prevent Israel from building new settlements on the West Bank and in the Gaza Strip.

It is very difficult to create a new situation in the Middle East peace talks while Israel hangs on in Lebanon. Even the United States recognizes this. Besides refusing to withdraw its forces from Lebanon under the pretext that the Syrian Army and the PLO armed forces are there, Israel has also arrogantly demanded that the Lebanese Government guarantee that the southern part of the country will be a "security zone" and also that Lebanon establish "a kind of relationship" with Israel. In addition, there are reports that the Begin authorities are also preparing to extend the control zone of the Hadad forces in southern Lebanon, 40 to 50 kilometers to the north, to the town of Sur. This zone was single-handedly propped up by Israel. Thus Israel has taken a new step forward along the path of dismembering Lebanon.

According to reports, Habib's current visit to the Middle East aims at achieving the withdrawal of foreign forces from Lebanon by the end of the year. People are all watching the United States to see if it can exert sufficient influence on Israel to attain this goal. Lebanese President al-Jumayyil recently visited Saudi Arabia where he expressed his solemn and just stand in demanding the withdrawal of Israeli forces. King Fahd of Saudi Arabia personally cabled President Reagan demanding that the United States take swift action. Some people in the West have pointed out that Reagan sent Habib on his Middle East mission precisely because the continued Israeli presence in Lebanon endangers U.S. efforts to maintain the momentum of the peace talks.

The other major obstacle in the peace talks is that Israel recently made the brazen announcement that it would build or expand 20 settlements in the Sinai and the Gaza Strip and planned to increase settlements there from the current 103 to 160 within 5 years, with the number of Jews there increasing to 100,000. It is held that the Arab states and the PLO acknowledge certain "positive factors" in the Reagan proposals, meaning the United States' declaring it would not recognize Israeli "sovereignty" over the West Bank and the Gaza Strip, and advocating freezing the settlements there. But what has happened now is quite the contrary. In France King Husayn of Jordan warned that this Israeli move would "completely wreck the Middle East peace talks process." During Begin's recent visit to the United States, President Reagan declared that he wanted to "find a way to overcome this obstacle." But at the same time he stated that he wanted to avoid controntation with Begin. The Western press has reminded the United States that if it allows this situation to continue, the Reagan proposals will be totally defeated.

Apart from this, simultaneous mutual recognition between the PLO and Israel is held to be an essential precondition for starting new Middle East peace talks. The PLO's stand has already been conveyed to the United States by Egyptian Deputy Prime Minister 'Ali; this stand is that the PLO will only consider talks if the United States treats it as equal with the Arab states in participating in the peace talks. It remains to be seen what substantial policy decision the U.S. Government will make. At the same time, there is also concern over what new decisions will be taken by the imminent Palestinian National Council meeting.

XINHUA COMMENTARY ON IMF TREATMENT OF ZAMBIA

OW230309 Beijing XINHUA in English 0105 GMT 23 Nov 82

["Commentary by XINHUA correspondent: IMF's Unequal Treatment to Zambia" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Lusaka, November 21 (XINHUA) -- The different attitudes of the International Monetary Fund (IMF) to Zambia and South Africa in terms of its loans are being questioned and challenged. The Zambian Government and IMF officials are holding negotiations on loans in Lusaka.

It was reported that the IMF demands, as a condition of giving loans to Zambia, that the country close down some of its seriously loss-making copper mines and, especially, devaluate kwacha, the country's currency by over 30 percent. K.S. Musokotwane, Zambian finance minister, recently said the IMF's conditions for loans were "tough".

The IMF has promised to give a loan of 800 million kwachas, the equivalent of 976 million dollars, to Zambia in a period of three years. The country received a loan of 300 million kwachas from the IMF last year. But this year, the IMF has been reluctant to give a loan of 200 million kwachas as it promised.

Rounds of talks have taken place between the Zambian Government and the IMF both in Washington and Lusaka since last May. But no result has so far been reached.

At the same time, however, the IMF, in defiance of strong opposition from world public opinion, has decided to offer a loan of 102 million dollars on favourable terms to the racist South African regime by the end of this month.

Is it just for the IMF to adopt different attitudes towards Zambia and South Africa in terms of loans? In offering loans to South Africa, it did not require the South African regime to devaluate its currency or close down its seriously loss-making copper mines as it did in Zambia.

The IMF claimed that it decided to give loans to South Africa on "purely technical and economic grounds, without political considerations." The South African regime gave a footnote by saying that it needed IMF loans to "compensate for the drop in the price of gold" in the world market which had brought it economic difficulties. All those remarks are not convincing.

It is well known that South Africa is an economic power in Africa. The manufactured goods and farm products it exports to other African states have been increasing year after year. Its economic problems have not come out of the drop in the price of gold in the world market. "Strategic Survey, 1981-82", published in London, pointed out that "the cost to South Africa of carrying war to her neighbours, and particularly her highly aggressive campaign in Angola were substantial." The South African defence budget rose thirty percent to the record level of over 3 billion dollars for 1981-1982, it added.

So it is easy for people to come to the conclusion that South Africa's economic difficulties are mainly attributable to its big increase in military expenditure, aggression and expansion.

Zambian Minister of State for Foreign Affairs Musuka [as received] was right when he said that giving loans to South Africa was "tantamount to providing the racist regime with carte blanche to terrorise frontline states."

The IMF's loan to South Africa despite strong opposition from the majority of the U.N. member states has made people believe that it was done out of "political considerations" under the pressure of a superpower.

It is hoped that the IMF would change its pro-South Africa attitude and make a just decision in terms of giving the second-year loan to Zambia.

ANTIGUAN OFFICIAL INTERVIEWED ON FOREIGN POLICY

OW220620 Beijing XINHUA in English 0218 GMT 22 Nov 82

[Text] Kingston, November 21 (XINHUA) -- Antigua stands against any adventures in the Caribbean by any country and calls on the superpowers to refrain from using the Caribbean as an arena for their power struggle, Antiguan Deputy Prime Minister Lester Bird has told XINHUA in an exclusive interview.

Bird also reaffirmed his country's principled position and independent foreign policy.

The deputy prime minister, who had attended the just concluded third Caribbean Community (Caricom) summit meeting in Ocho Rios, Jamaica, warned the superpowers not to infiltrate and destabilize the Caribbean countries against the will of the people of this region as expressed at the summit.

Antigua does not intend to be a satellite of any country and believes that the people have the right to take part in their own political, economic and social development, he said.

He stressed the principle of non-interference in the internal affairs of other countries.

On domestic issues, Bird said that Antigua is fighting the impact of recession and to maintain the growth rate it enjoyed over the past four years. The government is laying emphasis on infrastructure development with a plan to establish proper energy and water supply systems. The government is also reviewing a development program formulated last year which requires an investment of some 70 million U.S. dollars, he added.

ECONOMIC RESPONSIBILITY SYSTEM REPORT ISSUED

OW230423 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1137 GMT 22 Nov 82

[Text] Beijing, 22 Nov (XINHUA) -- Departments concerned recently pointed out that currently it is necessary to concentrate on the following five tasks in perfecting the economic responsibility system in industry: 1) seriously implement the principle of ensuring the leading role of the planned economy, supplemented by market regulation; 2) strive to improve the economic responsibility system enforced within enterprises; 3) correctly handle the relationship between the state, enterprises and workers regarding their respective interests; 4) combine the perfection of the economic responsibility system with the technological transformation of enterprises; and 5) plan overall and strengthen leadership.

The State Commission for Restructuring the Economic System, the State Economic Commission and the Ministry of Finance submitted a report on this to the State Council, which approved and circulated it among various localities and departments.

The report analyzes the development of the economic responsibility system in China's industry and the notable results achieved. It points out: The economic responsibility system is a system of production management which aims at raising economic results in society and which brings close integration of responsibility, rights and benefits, all under the guidance of state planning. Practice shows that the economic responsibility system has played a positive role in promoting the readjustmer of the national economy and improving the financial state. In addition, it has opened up a new path restructuring the industrial management system. All localities and departments should act in accordance with the guidelines of the 12th CPC Congress, achieve greater unity in ideology and action, seriously sum up past experience, study the new conditions and resolve the new problems in order to further improve and upgrade the economic responsibility system.

On the implementation of the principle of ensuring the leading role for the planned economy supplemented by market regulation, the report says: To enforce the economic responsibility system it is necessary first to define an enterprise's economic responsibility to the state and to give the enterprise certain decisionmaking powers. The foremost responsibility of an enterprise is to fulfill the state plan to the full. An enterprise should take the interests of the whole into consideration and have the courage to take on assigned work. It should fulfill not only the state profit target, but also the various technological and economic targets, such as output, quality, variety, consumption and cost. Planning departments should strive to raise the scientific standards of plans, achieve overall balance and gradually ensure that various planned targets are relevant to each other and that the targets are issued by a responsible department.

The report says: Enterprises should have different degrees of decisionmaking power in planning in light of the different forms of planning enforced. They should strictly implement plans of a mandatory nature. When they discover that the plans do not accord fully with the actual conditions, or when they are unable to overcome the shortages in raw or semifinished materials and in energy supply despite their efforts to overcome the shortages, they may propose the higher planning department revise the plan and make adjustments after the proposal is approved. Enterprises have the right to tap their production potentials and to produce, in light of market needs and availability of energy and raw and semifinished materials, more readily salable products to make up for inadequacy in planning, provided that the state plans have been, or will be, fulfilled. In fulfilling plans of a mandatory nature, enterprises have the right to formulate specific plans in light of the market supply and demand and to submit them to the responsible department for record and then make arrangements for production.

Enterprises are allowed to arrange, in light of market supply and demand changes, the production of commodities under the "market regulation" category. However, in doing so they must observe state policies, laws and decrees. Regardless of the form of planning enforced, supply, production and marketing departments should gradually establish a contract system among themselves and strictly observe the contract.

The report says: To enliven the economy, it is necessary to give the enterprise the right to sell a certain proportion of the products themselves. This applies to all products, except for those which the state specifically forbids, including products procured, distributed and sold under unified state plans and those in short supply. The proportion of self-marketing shall be decided by responsible departments concerned, after studying the case of each product. Provisions of the state provisional regulations governing commodity price control must be strictly observed regarding the price of the self-marketing products.

On the basis of the experience of a number of advanced units, the report asks that the following tasks be accomplished, in order to improve the economic responsibility system within the enterprise:

1. In light of the demand of the state macroscopic plan and the enterprise's economic responsibility to the state, enterprises should set an objective for struggle, with particular emphasis on raising economic results. This objective should be carried out at each level, from section, work and teams down to individuals.

2. Seriously strengthen basic and specialized administrative work. Particular efforts should be made to perfect the system of fixed production quotas, measurement and inspection, safekeeping of original records and performance evaluation.

3. Reform the award system. By strictly enforcing the evaluation system, overcome egalitarianism in the distribution of bonuses and ensure that they truly reward the advanced and spur the backward. No ceiling should be broken in bonus distribution. Units should be rewarded according to their performance. Individuals should be promoted or demoted according to their merit.

4. Seriously consolidate labor organizations.

5. Strengthen democratic management and rely on the vast numbers of staff and workers, the masters of the enterprise, to run the enterprise well.

6. Uphold the principle of ideology taking the lead, carry out deepgoing and meticulous ideological-political work and combine the strict economic responsibility system with a high sense of political responsibility.

7. Readjust leading bodies. This will be the decisive factor in the success of reorganizing enterprises and perfecting the economic responsibility system.

In explaining how to handle correctly the relationship between the state, the enterprise and the worker regarding their respective interests, the report stresses: In distribution, enterprises must see to it that the state receives more revenue to enable it to concentrate proportional financial resources for major construction projects. The increase in the enterprise and worker's income should be achieved through improvements in management and the tapping of the potential of the enterprise. All localities and departments should sum up their experience and, on the basis of this summing up, readjust profit-retaining measures, the ratio of profits retained and the quota base.

The readjustment should guarantee a greater increase in state revenue for major construction projects and, at the same time, protect the legitimate interests of the enterprise and provide it with the conditions for technological transformation and for improving the workers' life so that the enterprise has greater initiatives in production.

The report says: In allowing enterprises to retain a portion of the profits, the principle of rewarding the diligent and penalizing the lazy should be implemented. Within the level of the total amount of retainable profits authorized by the state, various responsible departments may appropriately raise the profit-retaining ratio for those enterprises which made special efforts in production, brought their various key technological and economic targets to the advanced levels in their departments and made greater contributions to the state because of successful management. The ratio of profits retained should be lower for poorly managed enterprises.

The report says: It is necessary to combine efforts to perfect the economic responsibility system with technological transformation of enterprises. The creation of a new situation in socialist modernization and the realization of the magnificant goals before the end of this century should rely mainly on technological advance and on the renewal of equipment and technological transformation of existing enterprises.

The report says: The enterprise production development fund and the equipment renewal and technological transformation fund should be used in the right direction. They should be used mainly for technological development and transformation and for trial production of new products. In the reward fund, a fixed amount should be set aside for rewarding workers who have made contributions to technological advances. The responsible department of enterprises should make plans for the industry's technological transformation, guide enterprises in rationally using funds, and carry out technological transformation of industry and enterprises systematically. Higher prices should be set for better quality products to encourage enterprises to raise product quality, develop new products and speed up technological advances. It is necessary to study the proper use of surplus funds kept by various enterprises to promote the transformation of the industry's major sectors. Bank loans should also be extended for the use of technological innovation and transformation on a priority basis.

The report concludes by asking all localities and departments to make overall plans and give appropriate guidance in perfecting the economic responsibility system. All localities and departments should correctly define the decisionmaking power of the various enterprises in production, commodity flow and distribution, in accordance with the position and role of the respective enterprises in the national economy, and put forward different demands on them. Main efforts should be made to perfect the economic responsibility sywtem of large enterprises in succession. Plans should be mapped out to help large enterprises improve their management and speed up their technological innovation and transformation, in order to make full use of their potential as quickly as possible. At the same time, a number of small enterprises may also pay income tax and assume responsibility for profits and losses. Efforts should be made to continue the study of the Shoudu Iron and Steel Company's experience in the context of the situation in their respective locality or unit. At the same time, efforts should be made to sum up and popularize local experience and promote the perfection of the economic responsibility system from selected units to the entire area. Efforts should be made gradually to improve and perfect the economic responsibility system in industry within the next 2 to 3 years.

RENMIN RIBAO ON PARTY CONSTITUTION FEATURES

HK221226 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 22 Nov 82 pp 1, 4

[Editorial: "The New Party Constitution's Special Features of the Era"]

[Text] The new party constitution adopted by the 12th party congress has attracted attention throughout the party, and many friends outside the party have also evaluated it highly. In their study, many comrades have, in light of their intimate knowledge of party life, paid attention to comparing this new party constitution with those of the past and have thus recognized many new regulations and special features of the new party constitution and deepened their understanding of it. This is a desirable study approach and method. However, it is not enough just to know the differences in wording and specific clauses between the new party constitution and those of the past: it is also necessary to further understand that the party's present environment and era are different from the past, and that the demands on party organizations and members are higher now, and to recognize how the new party constitution expresses the needs of this era. In this way the party members can grasp the new party constitution's basic spirit and its special features of the era, and more spontaneously regard it as their guideline in action.

The new party constitution adopted by the 12th party congress differs fundamentally from those adopted by the 9th and 10th party congresses, which were drawn up when there were serious "leftist" errors in party guiding ideology during the "Great Cultural Revolution." The new party constitution also differs from that drawn up by the 11th party congress, when "leftist" guiding ideology had not yet been corrected. It also differs from that drawn up by the seventh party congress, which was formulated during the years of revolutionary war, when our party had not yet gained political power throughout the country. It also differs from that drawn up by the eighth party congress, when the party had only been in power for 7 years. The new party constitution has been drawn up when our party has 33 years' experience of holding power, has corrected the errors of the "Great Cultural Revolution" and the guiding ideology, brought about the great historic change, and also when it is facing the historic task of creating a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization. Hence, it has fresh characteristics and special features of the era.

1. The new party constitution meets the needs of the ruling party in the new period. There is no change in the party's working class nature and its aim of endeavor of ultimately realizing communism; however, there are very great changes in the party's status and the tasks it faces after taking power compared with the period prior to taking power. These changes bring new special features in party building. The main one is that we must be skillful at correctly exercising leadership over the state political power, pay more attention to maintaining and strengthening our ties with the masses, and effectively avoid the danger of becoming divorced from the masses. This is also the hope and demand placed on us by the people of the whole country, and the new party constitution must fully express this point. The constitution of the eighth party congress only touched on part of the question of the ruling party. The new party constitution adopted by the 12th party congress has fully considered the status of the ruling party and made many appropriate provisions in this respect. The new party constitution first scientifically analyzes the main contradictions in China's society in the current stage, stipulates the party's general task, and also lays down clear-cut regulations with regard to exercising party leadership correctly after the party comes to power. It points out that "party leadership is mainly political, ideological and organizational leadership."

The question of party work style is an issue related to the life and death of the ruling party. Lenin said: A ruling party that wants to go on existing cannot tolerate the slightest wavering over the issue of its life or death. In order to avoid and correct various unhealthy tendencies of becoming divorced from the masses, the new party consitution stresses that "throughout the entire process of leading the masses to realize the communist ideal, the party must constantly share weal and woe with them and keep the closest ties with them. No party member is allowed to become divorced from the masses or place himself above them." The new party constitution puts forward stricter demands on party members than previous ones, pointing out in extremely clear language: "The members of the CPC are forever ordinary members of the laboring people. Apart from the personal interests and work powers defined by systems and policies, party members may not pursue any private interest or special powers whatever." The new party constitution also has added a chapter on "party cadres," which points out that the party's cadres are all servants of the people. It sets higher demands on party-member cadres than on ordinary party members. By unswervingly acting in accordance with these demands of the new party constitution, we can ensure that our party will never become divorced from the masses or become corrupt and degenerate when it is holding power.

2. The new party constitution suits the need to continue to bring order out of chaos in party life. Bringing order out of chaos is expressed in many aspects, first of all in ideological and political line. As a result of several years' efforts, the problem in this aspect has now been fundamentally solved. The task of the party constitution is to further confirm and consolidate this process. Another important aspect of bringing order out of chaos is to implement democratic centralism in party life. This is also expressed with extreme clarity in the new party constitution. Democratic centralism is our party's fundamental organizational principle. However, beginning in the latter part of the 1950's, party political life became more and more abnormal, the principle of collective leadership and democratic centralism were weakened and even wrecked, and individual autocracy and personality cult became more and more serious in the party. This was one of the main social and historical reasons for the outbreak of the "Great Cultural Revolution." A major reason why our party was able to bring order out of chaos rapidly and effectively after the smashing of the "gang of four" and especially since the 3d plenary session of the 11th Central Committee was precisely because it revived and upheld the principle of democratic centralism. The new party constitution sums up the positive and negative experiences, regards upholding democratic centralism as one of the party's three basic principles, and lays down more systematic and comprehensive provisions regarding democratic centralism than any previous constitution. In particular, it stipulates that "the party prohibits personality cults in any form" as one of the basic principles of democratic centralism, and "no party member, no matter how high or low his post, may decide on important issues by himself." The new party constitution also makes detailed provisions on every aspect of democratic centralism, including full democracy within the party, the exercise of a high degree of centralism on the basis of a high degree of democracy, and on strict organizational discipline, and so on. In this way individual autocracy and also lack of organization and discipline can be effectively prevented.

3. The new party constitution meets the needs of socialist modernization and the needs of the "four transformations" of the cadre force. The new party constitution points out that although the class struggle in China will continue to exist to some extent for a long time, it is no longer the main contradiction, which is now the contradiction between the ever-growing material and cultural needs of the people and backward social production; and so, "the focus of the work of the CPC is to lead the people of all nationalities throughout the country to carry out socialist economic modernization."

The task of socialist modernization demands that we integrate the universal truth of Marxism-Leninism with concrete practice in the new period and master the objective laws of construction. The new party constitution stipulates the party's ideological line, and also points out: "The whole party must, in accordance with this line, scientifically sum up the experiences of history, investigate and study the new situations, solve new problems that arise in domestic and international affairs, and oppose all erroneous 'leftist' and rightist tendencies." In order to ensure the accomplishment of the modernization task, the new party constitution also puts forward corresponding demands on party members, party cadres and the party organizations at all levels. The "study of science, culture and professional matters" has been specially added to the duties of party members. In the chapter on "party cadres," it is clearly laid down that it is necessary to "strive to make the cadre force revolutionized, younger, better educated and more specialized," while the party's leading cadres at all levels are required to have a strong sense of the revolutionary cause and of political responsibility, and to possess organizational ability, general education and vocational knowledge so as to be able to carry out leadership work competently. The new party constitution also points out in particular that party cadres must undergo training by the party. This is an important provision for ensuring that our cadres will be able to competently handle the modernization task. Only by undergoing training will the cadres be able to sum up and renovate their experiences and knowledge, and thus be able to master modern scientific knowledge and modern management methods.

4. The new CPC constitution caters to the needs of building socialist spiritual civilization, developing socialist democracy and perfecting the socialist legal system. The new CPC constitution stipulates that "the CPC leads the people in building a high degree of material civilization as well as a high degree of socialist spiritual civilization." Our party's ideological building is the mainstay of the spiritual civilization and building of the whole society; and the exemplary role of CPC members in the field of ideology and morality may exert a positive influence on the mental outlook of the members of society and on the moral habits of society. As far as this aspect is concerned, the new CPC constitution has laid down strict requirements. In brief, the various stipulations on the obligations of party members require the latter to cultivate communist consciousness and revolutionary ideals, improve their moral standard and strengthen their sense of discipline. Undoubtedly, we will vigorously advance the building of spiritual civilization of the whole society if we keep in line with these requirements of the new CPC constitution. On the other hand, the new CPC constitution also provides that "the CPC leads the people in developing socialist democracy, perfecting the socialist legal system and consolidating the people's democratic dictatorship." Here the new CPC constitution, while affirming the role of the party as the leading core of our country's socialist cause, stipulates that the party must work within the framework of the constitution and the law, and that it must ensure that the legislative, judicial and administrative organ of the state, economic and cultural organizations, and nongovernmental bodies can enthusiastically, actively, independently, responsibly and coordinately work together. This is a problem which was not solved in past party constitutions. The new CPC constitution stipulates the basic principle affirming the leading role of the party and the appropriate position of the party in state affairs and the people's life, clearly defines the party's relationship with state organs and nonparty organizations, and thus draws a clear demarcation line between the party and the government. Such an arrangement will help develop socialist democracy and perfect the socialist legal system.

Finally, the new CPC constitution also conforms with the needs of achieving the three basic changes. The 12th CPC Congress asserted, in accordance with the general task in the new era, that we must strive to realize within the next 5 years the basic changes for improvement in the financial and economic conditions of the state, the general mood of society and the work style of the party. The basic change for improvement in party style is the key to realizing the basic change in the other two aspects. Aiming at solving solving certain existing problems of unhealthy party style, the new CPC constitution has laid down stricter requirements on our party members and cadres in the political, ideological, organizational and other fields. As for party members' obligation, the new constitution bans all practices of jobbery, activities of harming public interests to benefit oneself, and factionalism, and asks party members to support good people and good things courageously while opposing bad people and bad things, and so on. As for the basic requirements for leading cadres at all levels, the new CPC constitution requires them to adhere to the party's principles, resolutely struggle against all activities of abusing one's power to seek personal benefit, and so on. As for strengthening the party's discipline and consolidating the party's discipline inspection organs, the new CPC constitution has also laid down important regulations. All these regulations are very realistic and just in aiming at practical problems. They are the powerful weapons to achieve the three basic changes, in particular a basic change for the better in party style.

By and large, it can be seen that the new CPC constitution has not only correctly represented the role of our party as the ruling party and reflected the actual situation our party is facing after the historic turning point achieved since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, but also has catered to the needs of improving the quality of our party members, increasing the fighting power of party organizations, strengthening the party's leadership standard and building the party into a strong leadership core in our socialist modernization.

There have been 12 party constitutions during the 61 years since the founding of the CPC. Seven of them were formulated in the new democratic period, and five in the period of socialist revolution and socialist construction. Of course, each party constitution emerged under certain historical conditions, and therefore, each constitution inevitably bore the features of its era. However, this does not mean that all of them completely and correctly reflected the objective needs of social evolution and party building in their era. Since the party constitution formulated at the seventh party congress correctly reflected the needs of the development of the revolutionary cause and party building in the period of the new democratic revolution, it was the best party constitution at that time. Similarly, since the new party constitution adopted by the 12th congress has correctly reflected the features of our era and the current needs of party building, and is the summation of all historical experiences of our party and the crystallization of the collective wisdom of the whole party, we have every reason to believe that this constitution is the best for the socialist period.

It is not easy to formulate a new party constitution which correctly reflects the needs of the evolution of the era. However, to carry out the constitution in order to push ahead the progress of the era needs even more arduous work. Party members: Let us move, be prepared and organized according to the new party constitution and strive hard with the people throughout the country to achieve the historic tasks put forth by the 12th CPC Congress.

DEPUTY EDUCATION MINISTER ON HIGHER EDUCATION

HK230319 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 18 Nov 82 p 3

[Report by RENMIN RIBAO reporter Yang Lianghua [2799 5328 5478]: "Accelerate the Development of Higher Education in China -- Leading Member of Education Ministry Answers Questions by This Reporter"]

[Text] Our reporter called at the Ministry of Education the other day to inquire about how the ministry was going to speed up development of higher education in implementing the spirit of the 12th CPC National Congress. Deputy Minister Huang Xinbai answered our reporter's questions.

The Current Basic Circumstances of Higher Education

Question: Since the 12th CPC Congress, educational work, which is of strategic importance in the development of the whole national economy, is drawing more and more attention from various circles. Can you talk about some basic circumstances of higher education in this connection?

Answer: Education is a sector which cultivates qualified personnel, and higher education is the base which directly supplies economic construction and cultural work with high-level specialists. Therefore, educational work, including higher education, plays a decisive role in the development of the national economy and in the realization of modernization. At the 12th CPC Congress, education and science, together with agriculture, energy and communications, were mentioned in the same breath and set as key tasks of strategic importance in the development of the national economy. This is indeed a very correct and necessary decision.

Our higher education has developed rapidly since the founding of the PRC. The number of full-time institutes of higher learning was 205 when China was liberated and has increased to more than 700 today; and the number of students has increased from 117,000 to 1,140,000, an increase by 800 percent or more. However, since our country has a poor foundation in higher education and, in addition, we have been suffering from "leftist" interference, especially the destruction caused by the "Great Cultural Revolution," we face several notable problems in higher education. First, the scope of our higher education is limited and enrollment is relatively small. At present, only 11 of every 10,000 people are being enrolled in colleges. This ratio, much lower than that of developed countries and relatively low compared with other developing countries, falls behind the needs of the four modernizations. Second, the quality of our education needs to be improved. Quality refers to various elements including moral, intellectual and physical education. And intellectual education not only means academic performance and the level of understanding in knowledge learned, but also the composition of knowledge, and the comprehensive ability of cultivated qualified personnel in renewing and applying their knowledge. And third, the proportion between different disciplines within the higher educational framework is out of balance. We have to raise the proportion of such subjects as finance and economics, management, politics and law, and liberal arts to the level of other subjects, as well as the proportion of those subjects including light industry, textiles and so on to the level of engineering subjects. Moreover, the proportion of specialized courses to regular college courses should also be increased.

By and large, at present, both the development of our higher education and national economy do not completely conform with the needs of the whole society. We now face the task of further readjustment, reform, reorganization and improvement; and we have to increase actively and steadily the quantity and improve, in particular, the quality.

The Prospect for the Development of Higher Education

Question: What is the prospect for the development of higher education?

Answer: We must base developing higher education on our national conditions, the needs of the modernization construction and also our ability. In this way, we should establish step by step a socialist system of higher education with Chinese features. We must provide many levels in terms of educational content, adopt many forms of running schools, and depend on various circles in promoting education.

The major target of the national construction for the first 10 years from 1981 to 1990 is to lay a solid foundation, accumulate strength and create conditions for the economic take-off in the following 10 years. In the first 10 years, the development rate of higher education should be higher than economic growth. At present, the Ministry of Education is working out the plan. According to our tentative idea, the number of students recruited for full-time colleges will be doubled through efforts in the 1980's. In other words, the recruiting capacity, which was 280,000 students in 1980, will be increased to 400,000 in 1985 and to more than 600,000 in 1990. The enrollment of college students, which was 1.14 million in 1980, will be increased to 1.3 million in 1985 and to about 2 million in 1990. The development speed of other branches of higher education, namely, workers' universities, peasants' universities, correspondence colleges, broadcasting and television universities, and so on, will exceed that of the full-time universities in terms of both the number of recruited students and student enrollment. As post-graduate education will be restored and growing in the next few years, its developing speed will also be very high. In 1981, we recruited only 3,600 new graduate students because of a limited source of students. This year, the number of recruited graduate students increased to 11,000. The recruiting quota will further increase to 20,000 in 1985, and to more than 800 percent of that figure by 1990. Therefore, in short, the growth of higher education will be at least doubled in the decade.

As for development in the later decades, we still have to do more survey work to probe into the prospects and work out the future plan. As expected, further development will also be relatively remarkable.

Five Measures for Expanding Higher Education

Question: To attain the above-mentioned objectives for developing higher education, what measures will be taken in these few years?

Answer: Attaining the above-mentioned objectives is a strenuous task. Continuous development of the national economy and our further efforts to attach importance to investment in the exploitation of intellectual resources are basic conditions for such development. Apart from that, the reforms of some relevant systems, including management, personnel, labor, wages and so forth are also needed. There are five measures to be taken to expand higher education:

1. We should establish some new colleges and universities and additional departments and specialities should also be set up in the existing universities and colleges, in particular those branches of learning which we badly need, including finance, economy, management, political and legal studies and so forth. We should do well in this respect. The percentage of specialized courses is too small. Therefore, new universities, colleges and departments should set up more specialized courses.

2. We must tap the potentials of the presently existing universities and colleges to recruit more students under the prerequisite of enhancing educational quality.

Insufficient student dormitories is a key problem which hampers our efforts to recruit more students. Apart from continuing to build more dormitories in a planned way, we should do our utmost to recruit more nonresident students. It is possible for universities and colleges in urban areas to recruit more nonresident students. Those universities and colleges which are further away from urban areas may work out plans for setting up their branch schools in urban areas or in an area bordering urban districts and suburbs. By sending more teachers who live at home to teach those day students, we will train more qualified personnel without spending too much money.

3. We should develop short-term vocational universities. In some areas and medium-sized cities, the economy has developed rapidly. They urgently need specialized personnel of the middle rank or above. It is impossible for the state to provide them with too many specialized personnel of this type and those who are assigned to them might be unsuitable. Therefore, they propose that higher education be run locally. The period of study of such universities is generally 2 years. More practical specialities can be set up. Those nonresident students are locally recruited. Generally speaking, the state will not assign jobs for them after their graduation. The cities and areas concerned may choose the best graduates to employ. Such new universities have surfaced in recent years. They are welcomed by localities because not so much manpower and material resources are needed to establish them. Universities which can produce rapid effective results and have great vitality include Jinling University in Nanjing, Jianghan University in Wuhan and so forth. These universities have developed in recent years. The development of short-term universities means that the former two-level system for running universities and colleges in our country has now been replaced by the three-level system. In other words, universities and colleges are now run by institutions at the central level, provincial, municipal, autonomous regional and city levels. In this way our higher education system will improve. This plays a good role in promoting local economic construction.

4. Under the guidance of unified guiding principles and policies, we should develop various kinds of higher education, including universities for staff members and workers, peasant universities, correspondence universities, radio universities, television universities and so forth. We should also promote the system of encouraging students to take part in examinations after studying on their own. At present, there are 386,000 students studying at television universities which produce great influence over the society and are praised by people in various quarters. People place great hope in television universities. From now on, television universities should effectively integrate broadcasting, television and correspondence courses to provide more people with education, enrich the contents of teaching and gradually enhance teaching quality to make greater contributions. Big cities should arrange a special television frequency for educational use as early as possible to provide more courses to students.

5. Universities and colleges should shoulder the task of training cadres in rotation. They should take up the work of training cadres for government organs, enterprises, mass organizations and so forth and include this in their day-to-day work. The academic qualification of cadres who have studied in training classes for more than 2 years should be recognized. Those relevant units and departments should provide universities and colleges with necessary conditions to shoulder this task.

WEN HUI BAO CALLS FOR EDUCATIONAL REFORM

OW190815 Shanghai WEN HUI BAO in Chinese 15 Nov 82 p 1

[WEN HUI BAO Commentator's article: "To Develop the Economy, It Is Imperative To Develop Education First"]

[Excerpts] Recently, this paper has been continually publishing views of personages in education on how to restructure the present education system.

These views and suggestions are right on target and have aroused widespread response from all sides.

To establish firmly the strategic position of education in economic modernization, a current urgent task is to root out completely the erroneous view that education is unimportant. Over a long period, to many comrades construction has come to mean only material construction, namely industrial and agricultural production, and has little or nothing to do with education. Some comrades hold that, since our economy is still underdeveloped, we have to promote production first and education later. Some comrades, though themselves engaged in education, have regarded education merely as a social "welfare program" and looked down on education departments as being simply "consumer units." Therefore, without thoroughly eliminating these prejudices against education, it would be impossible to establish the concept that education holds an important strategic position in economic modernization.

Of course, the development of education depends on economic conditions. But we must also realize that education plays a tremendous role in promoting economic development. China's experience and experience in foreign countries show that education has always played a vital role in bringing prosperity and strength to a nation. The strategic significance of education in our modernization program lies in the fact that it plays an important role in raising labor productivity.

Thus, to develop the economy, it is necessary to promote education vigorously. If our education succeeds, we will be able to propel our economy forward in giant strides. If our education fails, it will become a heavy burden on our economy and adversely affect the four modernizations.

Education is not only a basic condition for building material civilization but is also an important factor in building socialist spiritual civilization and a high degree of democracy. Therefore, education is also important to the future of a nation.

To open up new vistas in education work, on the one hand, we must correctly understand the important role of education in socialist construction, and on the other hand, we must further emancipate our minds, do away with our narrow-mindedness about education and boldly carry out practical educational reforms. The 12th CPC Congress called on us to take our own road in building socialism with distinct Chinese characteristics. This is the basic guiding ideology of the entire modernization program. It is also the basic guiding ideology for developing China's education. Although some readjustments had already been made to our education system in the past, many problems still exist in the overall system, structure and management of our education, and it has still failed to meet the needs of the developing situation. Following the development of socialist modernization, this inadequacy has become increasingly acute. Therefore, it is necessary to sum up experience, analyze new situations, study new problems and systematically carry out readjustments and reforms to our ecucational system.

To develop the economy, it is necessary to develop education first. Following the rising tide in economic construction, reform in education is a must. We must seriously study and implement the guidelines of the 12th CPC Congress, firmly establish the concept that education occupies an important strategic position in economic modernization and make new contributions in making China's education a success.

COAL MINISTRY, FUJIAN TAKE LEAD IN EDUCATION

[Text] It has long been a practice in China that whenever production requires more funds, education funds are cut. Now that education is a priority in the country's development programme, the Ministry of Coal Industry and the provincial government of Fujian are taking the lead.

The ministry has allocated more than 100 million yuan to education since 1980. It has also upgraded the educational facilities under its control. At the same time, the leadership of educational institutions have been reshuffled, and 53 training schools have been established for cadres for coal mines nationwide.

The ministry also decided that institutes and coal industry bureaus should co-operate to bolster technical manpower. It increased funds to colleges and schools under its administration, demanding improved management.

Funds Increase

In east China's Fujian Province, the party provincial committee held a special meeting on education. The committee decided that the province should keep the rate of increase in education funds above six percent in next several years.

"This displays a spirit worth emulating," commented RENMIN JIAOYU (PEOPLE'S EDUCATION), China's leading magazine on education, "especially when the central government and local governments are faced with many difficulties, financially in particular."

Rural Education

Fujian's emphasis is on universal primary education in all rural areas, and the development of secondary vocational schools. "Effective measures should be adopted," the committee said, "to prevent rural children, especially girls, from missing the chance for an education."

The committee expects the province to have 45,000 university students and 2,000 postgraduates in 1990, compared to 30,300 and 500 respectively now. Large-scale adult education in rural areas is also being encouraged.

"The reason grain output and diversified economy cannot develop rapidly, management in many enterprises has remained chaotic and the competitive edge of our products low, is the neglect of education," said Xiang Nan, secretary of the party provincial committee.

HUNAN'S MAO ZHIYONG URGES RESPECT FOR TEACHERS

HK210418 Changsha Hunan Provincial Service in Mandarin 2310 GMT 20 Nov 82

[Excerpts from article by Hunan Provincial CPC Committee First Secretary Mao Zhiyong in issue No 12 of RENMIN JIAOYU [PEOPLE'S EDUCATION]: "The Whole of Society Must Respect and Support the Glorious Work of Teachers"]

[Text] The article says: Education is carried out by means of the labor of teachers. There can be no question of running schools well or developing education without the painstaking labor of teachers. At present, whether or not the leaders at all levels and the whole body of cadres, and indeed the whole of society, truly respect and support the glorious labor of teachers is an important issue related to implementing the strategic goal and focus proposed by the 12th party congress and accomplishing the general task for our country in the new era.

The article points out: The key to protecting and developing the cause of education lies in implementing seriously the 12th party congress spirit, further eliminating leftist influence, and enhancing the understanding of the cadres and masses, and especially of the leaders, regarding the status and role of education and teachers.

The article stresses: At present, the question of how to create in the whole of society an excellent mood of respecting teachers and caring for schools and resolutely halt the bad practices of insulting and beating teachers and seizing and looting school property is an extremely urgent issue. If we fail to solve this problem, not only will the development of education be hampered, it will also be difficult to consolidate the present education position.

Comrade Mao Zhiyong's article says in conclusion: Developing the cause of education is an extremely arduous task. We will have to do a lot of work for a long time in running and developing education well. This is the task of the whole party and the whole of society, not just of education departments. The party committees at all levels, all systems, departments and units and the whole of society must attach importance to this issue.

BEIJING COMMENTS ON ELEMENTARY EDUCATION IN PLA

[Station commentary: "The PLA Must Strive To Train Dual-Purpose Personnel"]

[Text] The party committee of a certain unit under the Shenyang PLA units has done a good job in conscientiously improving elementary education in the unit. Science and education are important components of socialist spiritual civilization. For the PLA, they are also essential requirements for modernizing the national defense as well as for raising the ideological consciousness and moral standards of cadres and fighters. The people's army is composed of people's soldiers who can fight when carrying guns as well as engage in construction when they are out of uniform. Therefore, they must master some scientific and cultural knowledge in order to become dual-purpose men serving both the army and the localities in construction.

Cadres and fighters are in their youth and full of energy. They want to improve and study, and the PLA is a large school providing better conditions for them to study. As long as the leadership in the PLA units grasps elementary education seriously, it will produce results.

A leading comrade of the Military Commission of the CPC Central Committee once said: In order to make the PLA units more lively, doing things only to meet a unit's own needs is not enough; we must also think of meeting the needs of cadres and fighters transferred to civilian jobs in various localities.

From a long-range and realistic view point, elementary education in units is of great significance. Party committees and political organs at all levels in PLA units must enhance understanding, seriously study and adopt effective measures to make this fundamental task a success.

PLA ISSUES DIRECTIVE ON CONGRESS DOCUMENTS STUDY

[Text] Beijing, 19 Nov (XINHUA) -- The PLA General Political Department issued a directive to the armed forces on 17 November stressing that the study of the 12th CPC National Congress documents must be integrated through practice.

The directive says: The principal task of the armed forces' political education during the first half of 1982 will still be the penetrating study and implementation of the 12th CPC National Congress documents and using the documents' guidelines to unify the thinking and actions of the cadres and fighters and to heighten their revolutionary spirit so that they will strive to realize the various fighting tasks put forward by the 12th party congress and create a new situation in the building of the armed forces.

The directive says: In penetratingly studying the 12th party congress documents, we must pay special attention to the key points so that we grasp the fundamental spirit of the documents. We must link theory with practice and, by reviewing how the party Central Committee has been gradually correcting its ideological line since its third plenary session, examine our understanding of the principles and policies formulated by the party Central Committee for setting things to rights and why we are more successful in implementing certain principles and policies than others. We must earnestly sum up our experiences, specifically analyze the situation and continue to remove all sorts of erroneous ideologies, particularly the influence of the "left" ideology. Our ideological and political unity with the party Central Committee and our implementation of the party's principles and polices must be elevated to a new level. All units and departments must formulate their own effective measures for implementing the guidelines of the 12th party congress and creating a new situation.

The directive says: While studying the 12th party congress documents, we must launch education of communist ideology among the fighters, unify the propagation of communist ideology with the execution of existing policies, and integrate our love for the armed forces, our love for our work and the fulfillment of various missions. While we must realize that what we do every day are communist practices, we must help everybody understand that the realization of the communist social system requires the arduous struggles of people of many generations. We must reaffirm our communist conviction and work energetically to propagate and advocate the spirit of dedicating ourselves to the people's interests and the selfless communist style of sacrificing our own interests for the sake of others so that the broad-masses of fighters will become a generation of new people with lofty ideals, socialist ethics, general knowledge and a sense of discipline.

The directive urges leading cadres at all levels in the armed forces to take the lead in study and take the initative, regularly correct the study attitude of cadres and fighters, and combat the idea that study should be completed quickly. It says that the general and tendentious problems which appeared during the study some time ago -- problems which have not yet been thoroughly resolved -- must be conscientiously resolved in a planned manner in the course of penetrating study.

CIVIL APPLICATION OF NUCLEAR SCIENCE NOTED

A tiny dot is surrounded by several constantly revolving and interlocking circles indicating the trajectories of electrons. It is all about the potential of this tiny dot that China recently held its first large scale, comprehensive exhibition on nuclear science and technology in Chengdu.

This tiny dot represents an atomic nucleus.

Visitors enter the strange world of nuclei when they step into the exhibition hall, which is bright with many colors. The demonstration boards, with their flashing lights and narratives, tell the secret of the nucleus. Based on the knowledge now available to man, nuclei provide two sources of energy -- atomic energy and radiation. Under different conditions, many different kinds of particle rays can be emitted from the nuclei of a radioactive element. Radioisotopes, which are produced by artificially transforming a nonradioactive element, and natural radioisotopes are also able to emit different kinds of particle rays. Man's efforts to explore and use the sources of energy of the nuclei have brought about the application of nuclear science and technology.

China began its study and application of nuclear science and technology as early as the 1950's. At present, the focus of China's nuclear science and technology has been shifted to applying it to civil use. The achievements we have made in many sectors of the national economy with nuclear science and technology are like fairytales. For example, by relying mainly on the application of beams of particle rays and radioactivity of isotopes, we have developed technical means and analytical methods with which we can determine the structure of, and the elements contained in, a solid body, determine the time, change the characteristics of some matter and living things, and disinfect, sterilize and prevent corrosion and mold. Such techniques have already been widely adopted in many professions and trades in China, including that of metallurgy, machinery industry, geology, chemical industry, building materials, foods and archaeology. After Jilin was hit by a meteorite shower,China's scientific research personnel launched their study of the composition of the meteorites. The means employed by these scientists was to use neutron radiation beams to induce nuclear reaction of the elements contained in the meteorites and then analyze and determine them. Eventually, they found what they were looking for.

The oil pipeline of Daqing, buried deep under the northeast plain, sometimes springs a leak. This normally calls for a general inspection and overhaul every few years, which means a big waste in human and material resources. For this reason, the isotope tracing method has been adopted. As expected, the fluid containing isotopes which is piped into the line will leave a trace at the leakage spot. By probing its radiation, the leakage can be traced.

The many new varieties of farm crops on display in the agriculture exhibition hall are a most convincing proof of the success in changing the characteristics of some matter and living things through radiation exposure. Among the crops cultured through radiation treatment, the varieties of rice have long ears and large kernels, those of wheat have plump ears with high protein content and those of cotton have large and numerous bolls. The cocoons treated with radiation are snow-white and large.

In the past 20 years, more than 150 new crop varieties have been successfully cultured in various localities of China by applying the method of radiation treatment. The new grain varieties alone, which are planted to a total area of more than 100 million mu, have brought an additional harvest of 5 billion jin. Among the new crop varieties, the "lu mian no. 1" cotton is widely known.

Examinations conducted before a disease can be accurately diagnosed often cause untold suffering to the patient. Today, it takes only a single drop of blood for nuclear technology to reach the same diagnosis. This method of radioactivity immunization analysis is being applied on a broader scale.

One strong, salient point for adopting nuclear technology is the fact that it requires a relatively smaller investment, with a short recovery period, but the results are enormous and the scope of application wide. To meet its scientific research needs, the Chenguang Chemical Industry Research Institute in Sichuan has built a radiation treatment facility. Three years ago it produced three new macromolecular products with the radiation treatment method. Now, the net income it has gained from two of the products has already exceeded the total amount of investment. The eight silkworm seed-breeding farms in Sichuan Province required an investment of only a few thousand yuan each. But the 600,000 sheets of seeds treated with radiation have earned over 7 million yuan for the farms.

The large shining reactor, accelerator models and relevant charts and data on display at the exhibition hall provide an inspiring clue to the new development in recent years in building reactors and accelerators, which can be used both for scientific research and for turning out particle beams and isotopes. China's first high-flux reactor and its 18 accelerators -- some of which are still under construction -- will further increase China's capacity in nuclear research and application.

Models on display at the exhibition hall tell us that our country has also made a giant step forward in utilizing nuclear energy. Some people still have doubts about using nuclear technology and link it with explosions, radiation sickness and death. But evidence shows that controlled use of nuclear technology for energy and radioactive rays will not produce the kind of uncontrollable chain fission of atomic bombs. Besides, our environmental protection law enforces strict rules against radioactive pollution. Scientific research and production units have also manufactured dozens of instruments designed to measure and guard against pollution.

Today, China possesses a fairly comprehensive network of nuclear research and production. As an important scientific and technological department in our national economy, it will definitely display a greater role and make greater contributions to achieving the magnificent goals set at the 12th CPC Congress.

CHINA DAILY ARTICLE VIEWS DOMESTIC TRADE

HK230312 Beijing CHINA DAILY in English 23 Nov 82 p 4

["Opinion" column by CHINA DAILY Commentator: "Brisk Trade at Home"]

[Text] China's 800 million peasants will henceforth be able to sell more of their farm and sideline produce directly on the market and mostly at negotiated prices.

Collective and individual entrepreneurs will do a larger share of the nation's wholesale and retail business of consumer goods and take over most of the catering and service trades.

And consumers will have access to better services and goods in greater variety, and buy more durables on an installment basis.

These are the cheering prospects offered by a three-week national conference on domestic trade that ended in Beijing earlier this month. Important policy changes were made at the conference to decentralize and activate domestic commerce as part of the effort to further promote the national economy.

It has been the role of state-operated commerce to monopolize or assume strict control over the purchase and sale of most farm products in order to ensure supplies to the populace of basic needs as grain, cotton, cooking oil, meat and sugar.

Conditions have changed a lot, however, since the 1950's and especially during the last three or four years. With the implementation of the responsibility systems, the peasants are producing more and willing to sell their products often in quantities larger than the state can handle.

It has thus been decided that henceforth the state will exercise control over the purchase and sale of 22 instead of the present 46 kinds of farm and sideline produce. The producers can sell all other kinds of produce, and what remains of the 22 minus a fixed quota purchased by the state, directly on the market at negotiated prices. What is more, aside from grain, the producers, marketing co-operatives and individual peasants can traffic in, set up stores in cities to sell farm produce wholesale or retail.

Because of the inadequacy in market research and a tendency of manufacturers to concentrate on quantity alone, overstocking of manufactured goods has been serious.

The differences between wholesale and retail prices will be enlarged, durable goods can be bought on an instalment basis and more travelling salesmen will be sent out to the countryside to encourage sales. Unmarketable goods will henceforth be the liability of the manufacturer.

More Shops

The number of shops engaged in commerce, catering and service trades in cities and towns was reduced by 82 percent between 1957 and 1978. All of the private shops were banned, and out of a total of 790,000 co-operative shops, all but 77,000 were squeezed out of business. Although these shops have been doubled since 1978, they still fall far short of demand. The most common complaints of the consumer are the bureaucratic airs and bad service in state-run shops and restaurants where the attendants are guaranteed their jobs and pay irrespective of their performances of duty.

To encourage the revival and development of co-ops and private shops, they will be given a 30 percent share of both the wholesale of manufactured goods and the purchase of farm and sideline produce, and 40 percent of the retail business. Seventy percent of the catering and service trades in cities and towns and all of them in the countryside will hence be operated by co-ops and private entrepreneurs.

The further broadening of the channels of domestic commerce is both a result of the boost of rural economy and an impetus to the growth of the national economy as a whole.

CHINA DAILY REPORT EXAMINES RAILWAY EXPANSION

HK230318 Beijing CHINA DAILY in English 23 Nov 82 p 4

[Report: "China Lays Groundwork for Expansion of Railway"]

[Text] Despite its rapid growth, the Chinese railway system is still a stumbling block in the nation's efforts to modernize.

China now has 52,300 kilometres of railway lines (not counting those in Taiwan), which, with the exception of Xizang (Tibet), extend to all provinces, municipalities and autonomous regions. In 1981, Chinese railways handled 1,048 billion tons or 70 percent of the total volume of freight and transported 942 million people.

33 Years Ago

In 1949, at the time of liberation, there were only 22,000 kilometres of rail lines. The Beijing to Guangzhou trunk line alone grew fourfold. And, five trunk lines have been built to link the northwest region with the rest of the country.

Along with the building of new railways, old lines are being improved to raise transport capacity. Doubling-tracking and electrification of rails are proceeding at a rapid pace.

Passenger Trains

The number of passenger trains has tripled and that of freight trains quintupled since the early years after liberation. The average freight load per car has increased from 32 tons at the time of liberation to the present 51 tons.

Railway communication signals have also been greatly improved. More than 6,300 kilometres of rails are now equipped with automatic blocking devices while 37,000 kilometres have semi-automatic blocking devices.

But, this progress aside, China's rail transport capacity still falls far short of need. Large quantities of commodities are piled up waiting for shipment. This is especially true of the coal from Shanxi, Inner Mongolia and Ningxia, coal and phosphate ore from Yunnan and Guizhou, and stockpiles of industrial goods in harbours and along the coast.

In the past three years, the volume of passenger transport increased abruptly to 150 million persons, an average annual increase of 50 million persons. More than 120 pairs of passenger trains have been added, but this is still not enough. And, rail technology is still backward. Most locomotives are still driven by steam engines.

But according to a three-year development programme worked out by the Ministry of Railways, 1,700 kilometres of single railway tracks and 1,500 kilometres of double tracks will be built and 2,000 kilometres of existing railway lines will be electrified in the next three years.

Switching Yards

In addition, seven switching yards are scheduled to be completed and three large passenger stations are to be built in Shanghai, Shenyang and Shijiazhuang. The volume of freight transport will reach 1.2 billion tons and that of passenger transport will come to 1.1 billion by 1985. This represents only the groundwork for reaching the goal of raising the present freight and passenger transport volume by 40 percent by 1990 and of faster development thereafter.

[Text] China will never allow its territory to be used as a transit point for international drug trafficking, a spokesman for the Chinese Foreign Ministry said on Saturday.

The spokesman also said: "China prohibits trafficking and taking of narcotics and has all along firmly opposed international narcotics trafficking."

HEBEI SYMPOSIUM ON STUDYING 12TH CONGRESS SPIRIT

HK120251 Shijiazhuang Hebei Provincial Service in Mandarin 0400 GMT 7 Nov 82

[Excerpts] On the morning of 6 November, the CPC committee of the Hebei provincial organs held a symposium of the organs on the study of 12th party congress documents. Over 1,400 people attended the meeting. Responsible comrades of the provincial CPC committee, people's congress standing committee, government and CPPCC Zhang Shuguang, Zhao Yimin, Li Feng, Lu Zhiguo, Ding Tingxin, Huang Hua, Yang Naijin, Zhang Xiaodong and (Ye Yigang) attended.

Provincial CPC committee executive secretary Zhang Shuguang gave four views on how further to deepen study of the 12th Party Congress documents:

1. Further enhance understanding of the great importance of studying the 12th party congress documents. How this problem is solved is the key to deepening study further. At present the great majority of cadres attach importance to studying the documents, and their study is relatively earnest. However, muddled and erroneous views exist in varying degrees in a few units and among a few comrades. Some comrades are satisfied with half-baked study, thinking that this is almost enough. Some even hold erroneously that it does not matter whether they study or not, since all they have to do is what higher authority says. Certain leading comrades set study against work. They either say they have no time to study because of work pressure, or fear that study will affect work. Hence, in order to deepen study of the 12th party congress documents, it is necessary first to sweep away various ideological obstacles, enhance spontaneity in study, overcome erroneous ideas and muddled concepts in study, and concentrate on enhancing understanding in the study of 12th Party Congress documents.

2. Make big efforts to appreciate and master the 12th party congress spirit. All documents adopted by the congress must be studied. It is not sufficient to study just one or two. In order to deepen understanding of the 12th party congress spirit, beginning in the first half of next year it will also be necessary to study relevant writings of Marx, Engels, Lenin, Stalin and Comrade Mao Zedong, and the chief central documents and important speeches of leading central comrades since the 3d plenary session. Through study, people should understand profoundly the historic position and great significance of the 12th party congress, the correct program for creating a new situation in all fields, the correct program for party building in the new period, and the profound significance of and work principles for cooperation among new and old cadres and replacement of the old by the new. Thus we can correct our thinking, brace our spirit, and work hard to achieve the strategic goal of economic construction in the next 20 years and the 3 fundamental turns for the better in the next 5 years.

3. Enhance understanding in connection with reality and unify thinking with the spirit of the 12th party congress documents. In light of the demands of the congress report and in connection with the state of mind of the cadres in Hebei, at present we should concentrate mainly on solving the problems of continuing to emancipate the mind and correct the ideological line, of bracing revolutionary spirit, of strengthening unity, of strengthening a sense of discipline and of improving work style.

In emancipating the mind, we should continue mainly to break through the bounds of leftist ideology, profoundly realize the harmfulness of leftism is connection with our own state of mind, shed the fetters of dogmatism and personality cult, criticize the erroneous ideas of those who say that "left is better than right," and firmly establish the ideological line of seeking truth from fact and proceeding from reality.

In bracing revolutionary spirit, we must on the one hand break down the "theory of quick results" -- which can only see the bright side and not the difficulties -- and on the other, break down the pessimistic tendency to fear difficulties and lack confidence. In study, we must concentrate on solving this passive tendency to lacking confidence and must criticize this pessimistic view.

We must promote great revolutionary unity in order to ensure implementation of the principles and tasks put forward by the 12th party congress and create a new work situation in Hebei. Through study, we continually should overcome factionalism and strengthen party spirit, act unselfishly in an open and aboveboard way, and eliminate prejudice. Comrades should trust, support, make allowances for and yield to one another. We should not say or do things that do not benefit unity. In particular, leading cadres at all levels must play an exemplary role in strengthening unity. As for words and deeds that run counter to the 12th party congress spirit and violate party discipline and state law, party leading cadres must adopt identical attitudes and actions, struggle resolutely, and handle them severely, so that people who break and flout the law will have no hole to crawl into.

4. Further strengthen leadership over study. In studying 12th party congress documents, the task of party committees at all levels is, on the one hand, to do a good job in their own study and, on the other, to organize the cadres and masses' study well.

HEBEI OFFICIALS BOOST QUADRUPLING OF OUTPUT

HK160746 Shijiazhuang HEBEI RIBAO in Chinese 5 Nov 82 pp 1, 2

[Unattributed report: "What Are the Main Tasks To Tackle in Quadrupling Industrial and Agricultural Output?"]

[Text] From 17 to 27 October, Liu Bingyan, secretary of the provincial party committee and acting governor of Hebei, and Yue Zongtai, deputy secretary of the provincial party committee and vice governor of Hebei, visited certain counties in Cangzhou municipality, Hengshui prefecture and Shijia Shijiazhuang municipality to carry out an investigation. They held seminars and discussions with cadres and masses in the places they visited on how to quadruple the gross annual value of industrial and agricultural production in our province. At the seminars, comrades Liu Bingyan and Yue Zongtai discussed four aspects, pointing out that it is impossible to rely on old ways to realize the strategic goal of guadrupling the gross annual value of industrial and agricultural production -- as proposed by the 12th CPC National Congress -- and that it is necessary to suit measures to local conditions and to promote a start to new levels of economic work. Agriculture must be based on perfection of the responsibility system and a high level of stable production to promote diversification vigorously and ensure the success of commune and production brigade enterprises. Industry must be based on overall rectivication so as to promote technical transformation vigorously. In the circulation sphere, we must carry out necessary reforms, arouse the enthusiasm of the masses and combine communist education with current policies.

Discussing the quadrupling of the gross annual value of agricultural production, Comrade Liu Bingyan and Comrade Yue Zongtai pointed out that to quadruple the gross annual value of agricultural production, it is very difficult, even impossible, to rely on an increase in grain production alone. It is necessary to rely on the continual perfection of the responsibility system in order to promote diversification and county, commune and production brigade enterprises vigorously.

In this way, sideline production supports agriculture and agriculture industry and sideline production are simultaneously developed. In 1980, in Ji County, the per mu production of grain in the Erpu production brigade of Chengguan commune was more than 1,000 jin. If the figure is doubled, that means more than 2,200 jin; and if the figure is quadrupled, that means more than 4,400 jin. It is impossible to achieve this figure at the end of this century. What shall we do? The only thing to do is vigorously to promote diversification, sideline production and commune and production brigade industries. In 1980, the gross annual value of industrial and agricultural production of this production brigade was 820,000 yuan, of which agricultural production accounted for 60,000 yuan. In 1982, the gross annual value of industrial and agricultural production will be 4,100,000 yuan, with agriculture accounting for about 80,000 yuan and industrial and sideline production accounting for 4,020,000 yuan. Compared with the gross annual value of agricultural and industrial production in 1980, the gross annual value of agricultural and industrial production is quadrupled in 1982. But the gross annual value of agricultural production increases by only 20,000 yuan and industrial and sideline production accounts for the major part of the figure. This tells us that we should rely principally on diversification and industrial and sideline production. Of course, we cannot slacken our efforts in grain production and use fields intended for grain production for other purposes. It is necessary to promote diversification vigorously on condition that a high and stable production of grain and self-sufficiency is ensured.

How can we make a success of diversification and sideline production? The most important thing is to implement the spirit of the 12th CPC National Congress and liberate our thinking. If thinking is not liberated, all channels will be closed. Consequently, diversification and industrial and sideline production will not advance. By liberating thinking, we mean to proceed from reality and the current situation, combine the spirit of the 12th CPC National Congress with the reality of our own region and our own department, dare to bring forth new ideas and be good at innovating. Superior local features must be promoted. We should determine to do this when appropriate. The promotion of commune and brigade industrial and sideline production requires proceeding from local resource conditions to developing planting, breeding and processing. In mountain areas we can organize the masses to work in mining. We should not sell raw materials alone or promote simple processing alone; we should develop more complex processing. In the raising of chickens, for example, in addition to running a chicken farm we can run hatcheries, fodder plants, chicken meat processing plants and chicken pest prevention stations. Chicken raising by specialized households in Renqiu County is managed this way. Commune and production brigade enterprises should combine. They can combine with industrial undertakings run by the counties or coordinate with urban industrial enterprises. Qing County takes this road. Coordination worked out for production of bricks and tiles, silk drawing, garment making, bamboo weaving and winter vegetables processing has produced good results.

When industrial and sideline production of counties and communes is developed and the economy thrives, city and town construction development will follow. Good plans must be made for the prefectures. The two or three small cities or towns in every prefecture can promote agricultural and other economic developments. Consequently, they form economic centers. It is not necessary for small cities and towns to develop many forms of heavy industry but to develop light industry, food processing and collective enterprises. In this way, an industrial structure and a product structure with distinctive local characteristics are formed.

Talking about quadrupling the gross annual value of industrial production, Comrade Liu Bingyan and Comrade Yue Zongtai pointed out: In order to quadruple (or more than quadruple) the gross annual value of industrial production, we rely chiefly on enterprise rectification for the vigorous promotion of technical transformation, which includes the application of new technology, new equipment and new crafts. In addition, new designs must be invented and varieties increased. It is impossible to rely on old equipment, old crafts and old products to quadruple the gross annual value of indusstrial production. Even if we succeed in quadrupling the gross annual value of indusstrial production, nobody wants to buy our products and they are long kept in stock in warehouses and become useless. That is wasteful. Hebei products are rustic and people ridicule them as being "unearthed cultural relics." It is impossible to change this situation without technical transformation. The Chengguan heating radiator factory is a good factory. In the past few years, its workers have improved techniques and transformed equipment and crafts. Consequently, the quality and quantity of their products is better. Now their products are sold throughout the country except in Xizang and Taiwan. However, there is keen competition. The situation forces them to renew their equipment and improve the quality and quantity of their products. If they do not take this road, they will not be competitive or hold their ground.

There is a problem of capital in technical transformation. At present, enterprises have their own difficulties. Under such conditions, Bo township amasses capital for technical transformation by handing over its own share of money -- which it gets by sharing the profits of an enterprise equally with the enterprise itself -- to the enterprises for technical transformation. The township itself is responsible for borrowing money from well-off enterprises to help those that are finding it difficult to promote technical transformation. For example, the Bo township bicycle factory is an enterprise which borrows money to carry out technical transformation. In conclusion, in local industry it is necessary to carry out a policy of allowing enterprises to "rest and recuperate." We should not drain the pond to get all the fish and press too hard. Let enterprises have a certain degree of independence. Do not worry about the large sum of money an enterprise absorbs and encourage enterprises to transform themselves technically with their own money so as to make them intrinsically vital.

Talking about necessary reforms in the circulation sphere, Comrade Liu Bingyan and Comrade Yue Zongtai pointed out: In order to quadruple the gross annual value of agricultural and industrial production as soon as possible, problems in the circulation sphere must be solved. The existence of many problems in the circulation sphere is strongly reflected by the masses. Reforms must be carried out resolutely. The reforms should alter the system, change practices, readjust certain concrete policies, reduce the number of intermediate links, open channels and revitalize the economy. Local authorities at lower levels should be allowed to buy products from the state at wholesale prices. Commercial undertakings established in rural areas should be in charge of both purchasing and marketing so that products are directly available to consumers. This facilitates the circulation of industrial products in rural areas. Many commodities do not have markets in urban areas. However, when sales teams are organized and products are delivered to the homes of commune members. Products are sold out and the pressure of overstock is reduced. This facilitates information feedback. The circulation sphere does not create values itself, but is like the human circulatory system in promoting industrial and agricultural development. If the circulation of blood stops, it is impossible to have economic activity.

Thus, the smoother channels are, the better. Therefore, it is necessary to solve the circulation problem resolutely. In this way, the circulation of commodities is invigorated and production spurred on by the market.

Talking about the combination of communist ideological education with current policies, Comrade Liu Bingyan and Comrade Yue Zongtai pointed out: When this problem is solved, direction for the three problems mentioned earlier will appear. At present, we are practicing the policy of distribution according to work. When egalitarianism is overcome and the policy of distribution according to work realized, the enthusiasm of the masses will become greater. The state must get the larger share, collectives the smaller share; and individual what is left. When production is developed, state income increases, collectives accumulate more money and workers are paid more. However, it is necessary to pay attention to public accumulation and to the fact that there are different incomes for different kinds of labor, to encourage laborers to keep their minds on their work, do a good job of public welfare, appeal to people to consider the overall situation, promote the communist spirit and overcome the emphasis on "looking at everything in terms of money."

Comrade Liu Bingyan pointed out: In past years, we relied on communist ideology as our guide to train cadres, formulate policies and tackle problems. Communism is a social system. In addition, it is also a movement. Leading cadres at all levels should use economic and ideological methods to guide the masses to look at the great communist goal, not to be preoccupied with their personal gains and losses, build up the communist attitude toward labor, make contributions to the four modernizations and give all they have for the communist cause.

NEI MONGGOL PLANS TO RESTRUCTURE GOVERNMENT ORGANS

SK230735 Hohhot Nei Monggol Regional Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 22 Nov 82

[Text] On the afternoon of 17 November, the Nei Monggol Regional CPC Committee held a meeting of leading cadres of organs subordinate to the regional government to relay the directives on effective organizational restructuring and to encourage and formulate plans for the regional government organs to implement restructuring. Attending the meeting were leading comrades of the regional CPC committee, including Ting Mao, Wang Duo, Kong Fei, (Jin Fengyuan), (Ni Weiran), Shen Xinfa, Peng Mengyu, Ba-Tu-Ba-Gen and (Liu Guiqian), responsible persons of the regional people's congress standing committee, people's government and CPPCC committee, and leading cadres of various departments, committees, offices, sections and bureaus.

Comrades Ting Mao and Kong Fei relayed the important central document on organizational restructuring and the important speeches of leading central comrades. Comrade (Liu Guiqian) introduced the regional financial bureau's efforts and experiences in being the first to conduct organizational restructuring. Comrade Wang Duo chaired the meeting and, on behalf of the regional CPC committee, spoke on plans to restructure regional government organs. Comrade Wang Duo said: Conditions are ripe for regional government organs to implement organizational restructuring. They should follow the guidelines of central directives on organizational restructuring and learn from the experiences and methods of central party and government organs so as to restructure the organs in our region successfully in a well-guided, well-planned and orderly manner. They should have firm determination and do a meticulous job in order to carry out the work. They should also strengthen centralized leadership, make unified plans and do penetrating and careful ideological and organizational work.

Comrade Wang Duo said: In compliance with the central demands, the regional CPC committee decided basically to complete, before the spring festival, the assignments of personnel to leading bodies of government organs at the regional level and the restructuring of the administration of departments, committees, offices, sections and bureaus and the assignment of major leading cadres for their leading bodies. Restructuring of other organs and other work will be carried out step by step later.

Comrade Wang Duo continued: We should boldly and resolutely select to install -- in leading bodies of departments, committees, offices, sections and bureaus -- a group of fine young and middle-aged cadres who have both political integrity and abilities and are capable of creating a new situation and properly solving the problem of replacement of old cadres with new cadres and succession of the old by the new. We should strive to select more young cadres, on the premise that they are revolutionary, meet college education standards, or higher, and are professionally competent. We should attach importance to the assignments of minority and women cadres. In the meantime, we should make good arrangements for the political life of veteran cadres who are retired or on convalescent leave.

Comrade Wang Duo stressed: In the course of readjusting leading bodies, we conscientiously should liquidate five types of people. If they are already in leading posts, we should resolutely remove them. None of them should remain in leading posts.

Comrade Wang Duo pointed out: In the entire course of organizational restructuring, we should: 1) Strengthen party leadership and do penetrating and meticulous ideological and political work; 2) Set the minds of the masses at rest and enable them to participate positively in the restructuring; and 3) Heed the opinions of all quarters and pool wisdom to select the best plans for restructuring government organs and the cadres and, at the same time, correctly practice centralism in a timely manner.

Comrade Wang Duo emphasized: This organizational restructuring has a bearing on success of the regional modernizatinn drive and on the long-term and fundamental interests of people of various nationalities. We cannot afford failure in this work. We should carry it out through to the end, never leaving it half-done.

Comrade Wang Duo concluded: As long as we have firm determination and do our work penetratingly, meticulously and thoroughly, we will certainly accomplish this organizational restructuring in a steady and timely manner.

NEI MONGGOL'S ZHOU HUI DISCUSSES PUBLIC SECURITY

SK180436 Hohhot Nei Monggol Regional Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 17 Nov 82

[Excerpts] The autonomous regional work conference on public security pointed out that the region's current tasks for public security work should be to take the 12th CPC Congress guidelines as a guide for upgrading the people's understanding and unifying their thinking so that they will be more conscious and righteous in concentrating their major efforts on safeguarding the achievement of socialist modernization.

The work conference sponsored by the regional CPC committee was held in Hohhot Municipality on 6-16 November. Attending the conference were leading comrades of the regional CPC committee, including Zhou Hui, Ting Mao, Wang Duo, Kong Fei, Yun Shiying and Bu He. Comrades Zhou Hui and Yun Shiying held a discussion with all conference participants and made important speeches during the conference. Also attending the conference were responsible persons of the leading public security group under the autonomous regional people's government, including (He Yao), Li Wenjing and Han Shijin.

The conference noted: Since the third plenary session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, the public security departments at all levels throughout the region -- under the leadership of party committees at all levels -- have focused the improvement of social order and, according to law, have dealt strict, timely blows to various criminals who seriously endangered public security. They have also scored marked achievements in consolidating public security comprehensively and in strengthening the work in various fields -- such as bringing cases to trial, conducting procuratorial procedure, reforming criminals through labor, enforcing civil affairs and enlarging the contingent of public security personnel.

The conference noted: We should, however, also see where we lag behind. Major manifestations in this regard are that some departments are still ineffective in implementing the principle of dealing in a timely manner and according to the law with major and vicious criminals who seriously endanger public security and arouse great indignation among the people, and that some still cannot meet the need of the new situation in applying the law to punish counterrevolutionaries and deal blows to criminals. Therefore, while continuously eliminating leftist influence, we should pay attention to preventing or overcoming the revivial of rightist ideas and earnestly do a good job in solving the problem of striking ineffectively at counterrevolutionaries and vicious criminals.

The conference stressed: To create a new situation in public security work in the region, it is necessary to unify thinking, upgrade understanding and adopt a correct attitude toward the issue that social contradictions and phenomena with the character of class struggle still exist in our country. Efforts should be made to uphold the state function of exercising the people's democratic dictatorship and of giving fierce elements who endanger socialism no opportunity. Meanwhile, it is imperative to carefully distinguish and deal with the contradictions between the enemy and us and those within the people.

The conference urged party committees at all levels throughout the region to attach great importance to and strengthen leadership over public security work. Leading cadres at all levels in the public security sector have to go deep into reality to conduct investigations and studies so as to discover new symptoms of a trend and to solve new problems.

WANG ENMAO ATTENDS XINJIANG HOSPITAL MEETING

HK230752 Urumqi Xinjiang Regional Service in Mandarin 1300 GMT 22 Nov 82

[Summary] The Xinjiang regional conference on hospital work was held recently. The conference pointed out: "The work personnel of the hospitals must emphasize civility and courtesy and have lofty medical ethics, and the hospitals must have a tidy, quiet, beautiful and good environment for medical treatment and constantly improve the quality of medical and nursing service to strengthen the sense of confidence of the masses of all nationalities in the hospitals. Only by doing so can the hospitals create a new situation in their work and give play to their important role in building socialist spiritual civilization."

The conference held: "To create a new situation in hospital work, it is necessary to adhere to the principle of making hospital personnel revolutionized, younger, professional and more educated and to build a leadership group which is small in number but highly trained, united, has a firm political orientation, a high level of understanding the policies and good work style and is devoted to work. It is imperative to grasp vigorously and well building socialist spiritual civilization with communist ideology as the core and to help medical work personnel establish lofty medical ethics and work style of wholeheartedly serving the people."

The conference pointed out that hospitals are places where intellectuals gather and it is extremely important to fully understand the role of knowledge and intellectuals in the four modernizations. It is necessary to further arouse the enthusiasm of the intellectuals so that they will contribute more toward creating a new situation in public health work.

Regional CPC committee first secretary Wang Enmao and regional chairman Ba Dai attended the conference in order to visit all representatives present and also to speak at the conference.

NPC TO DISCUSS STRATEGY FOR RECOVERING HONG KONG

HK200727 Hong Kong HSIN WAN PAO in Chinese 20 Nov 82 p 2

["New Talk" column: "Recovering Hong Kong Is China's National Strategy"]

[Text] The fifth session of the Fifth NPC will open in Beijing next Friday. As preludes to this, meetings of the committee for revising the constitution and the NPC Standing Committee have been held, and a NPC session preparatory meeting is now imminent.

The main agenda of this session will be to adopt China's new constitution, and to listen to and discuss Premier Zhao Ziyang's report on the Sixth 5-Year Plan and Finance Minister Wang Bingqian's report on the execution of this year's state budget and the draft of next year's budget.

Corresponding with the new constitution, the session will also revise the organic and electoral laws for the NPC, State Council, and local government at all levels. The building of democracy and legal system in China thus enters a new stage. The new party constitution recently adopted by the CPC stipulates that the party must conduct its activities within the framework of the constitution and the law. Putting democracy and the legal system on a sound basis is without doubt an important premise for improving the party work style and also the social mood.

As a result of readjustment in recent years, China's economy has embarked on the path of healthy development, while the financial deficit has been reduced. Zhao Ziyang's report on the 5-year plan and Wang Bingqian's financial report will let people know the current state of the economy and the arrangements for the future.

The 12th party congress put forward the tasks for the next 5 years, which are, to strive for fundamental turns for the btter in finance and the economy, in the social mood, and in party work style. The CPC session opening next week will be a powerful stimulus for accomplishing these three fundamental turns for the better.

There are tasks for 5 years and also tasks for 10. Deng Xiaoping said in his opening speech at the 12th party congress: "Stepping up socialist modernization, striving for the reunification of the motherland, including Taiwan, opposing hegemonism and preserving world peace are the three great tasks for the people of our country during the 1980's."

There are also tasks for the 20 years, Hu Yaobang said in his report to the 12th party congress: "During the 20 years from 1981 to the end of the century, the general target for endeavor in China's economic construction is, under the premise of continually improving economic returns, to quadruple the total annual output value of industrial and agricultural production."

Hu Yaobang mentioned China's three national strategies when talking to Thai Premier Prem Tinsulanon yesterday afternoon: first, devote all our efforts to the four modernizations; second, unify our country, by bringing Taiwan back to the motherland and recovering Hong Kong; and third, oppose hegemonism and preserve world peace.

It is evident that the three national strategies mentioned by Hu Yaobang are the same as Deng Xiaoping's three main tasks for the 1980's. Deng Xiaoping spoke of striving for the reunification of the motherland, including Taiwan, while Hu Yaobang specifically explained that reunifying the motherland means bringing Taiwan back to the motherland and recovering Hong Kong.

Earlier, an editorial in RENMIN RIBAO stated that the recovery of Hong Kong was a party principle, and this has now been explained as a national strategy.

A national strategy represents the fundamental interests of the people of the whole country and is unchanging. Of course, as with the four modernizations, making efforts in this respect in the 1980's does not mean that the tasks will be completed within this decade.

An editorial in the SOUTH CHINA MORNING POST last Thursday hinted that there were differences between the Chinese leaders on the Hong Kong issue, and also thought that there were differences in meaning between "recovering Hong Kong" and "recovering sovereignty over Hong Kong." In fact these differences only exist in the imagination of the editorial writer. The CPC principle and the national strategy is to recover Hong Kong, including sovereignty over ruling power, without changing the social system.

WEN WEI PO VIEWS LIAO REMARKS ON HONG KONG

[Editorial: "Liao Chengzhi on Hong Kong People Ruling Hong Kong"]

[Text] Mr Liao Chengzhi, vice chairman of the NPC, told Mr Huang Jian, chairman of the Hong Kong Factory Owners Association: China will regain sovereignty over Hong Kong by 1997 at the latest and Hong Kong will be ruled by the people of Hong Kong. After the reversion, Hong Kong's prosperity and stability will be retained, Hong Kong's system and lifestyle will not be changed and Hong Kong will remain a free port and financial center.

Although the statement is a short one, it involves the time of the regaining of sovereignty over Hong Kong, the method of management after the reversion and the basic policies. In a word, it has commented on the main points in the solution of the Hong Kong situation.

It was said that the reversion of Hong Kong would take place when the time was ripe. What does the "ripe" time refer to? Now, we have a definite answer: by 1997 at the latest. The words "at the latest" have profound implications and call for deep thought. In short, in regaining sovereignty over Hong Kong, China will not restrain herself to the time indicated in the three unequal treaties, but will see whether or not the conditions and the time are ripe. What then do the conditions and time mean? Perhaps this refers to the frank consultations being carried on between China, Britain and Hong Kong, and the various preparatory work made before the reversion. It is obviously wrong to regard the progress of the four modernization of China as the standard for ripe conditions and time.

How will Hong Kong be administered after the reversion to China? Some people say that Britain can be entrusted as an administering agent of Hong Kong. These people are wrong because they separate sovereignty and administration and underestimate the unified will and ruling ability of our Chinese people. But due to history, present conditions and the future of Hong Kong, the CPC Central Committee will not appoint any officers to form the Hong Kong Government but let the Hong Kong Government organ be composed of the people of Hong Kong themselves. This is called "Hong Kong people ruling Hong Kong." Hong Kong has many talented people. The rapid development of Hong Kong's economy over the past 10 years or so has proved this point. A number of administrative experts will certainly emerge as the times require. The problem is not only one of capability, but also social connections and influence. Of the 1 billion Chinese people we could surely find a person who could shoulder responsibility as "Hong Kong governor!" But, that person would not possess the social connections and influence among Hong Kong people that plays a significant role in maintaining the popular morale of Hong Kong. The Chinese people are certainly not willing to retain the vestiges of colonialism in Hong Kong. It also is not appropriate for the Chinese Government to appoint officers to rule Hong Kong. Hong Kong people are also Chinese. Therefore, the most ideal scheme is to let "Hong Kong people rule Hong Kong."

The management method and personnel system is related to administrative policies. "Hong Kong people ruling Hong Kong" will enable the implementation of the policy of an "unchanged system and lifestyle and the continuance of a free port and financial center."

Saying that the system will not be changed refers to the social system, which is, first of all, one of private ownership of large and small enterprises and also encompasses the law, currency, employment and various other aspects with capitalism as their spirit and core.

When it is said that the lifestyle will not be changed, this includes the living standard and social style. Along with the maintenance and development of economic prosperity, we must maintain and improve the living standard of the people of Hong Kong. Horse racing, mahjong playing and traveling abroad should remain as forms of entertainment and means of relaxation for the people of Hong Kong after their busy work.

To say Hong Kong will remain a free port and financial center means that there will be no tax or less tax levied. The goods of any country can be freely imported and exported from Hong Kong and be processed, sold and stored in Hong Kong. Hong Kong will continue to be a trading center and purchasing paradise. It is necessary to retain Hong Kong's position as a financial center so that Hong Kong will continue to have gold, silver and stock markets and be a market with huge capital and a center of credit, investment, trade, and gold and stock trade, in the Asian and Pacific region.

The overall plan for the solution of Hong Kong is still pending further discussion between Britain and China. Later the discussions will be opened to the public. But the above basic points show the general idea and direction.

Can the peoples' minds be set at ease? Certainly, we need more time, but at least we are fully prepared for what is coming.

More on Liao Remarks

HK210106 Hong Kong HONG KONG STANDARD in English 21 Nov 82 p 1

[Report by Daniel Chung: "Beijing Hints at Self-Rule"]

[Excerpts] Hong Kong will be administered by its local people after China regains sovereignty over the place, a senior Chinese official said yesterday. And China hopes to regain it not later than 1997.

The statement on Hong Kong's future, considered the most explicit and concrete so far, was given by Director of the State Council's Overseas Chinese Affairs Office Liao Chengzhi when he met the delegation of Hong Kong industrialists in the Great Hall of the People in Beijing.

In a long-distance telephone interview, the leader of the Hong Kong delegation of industrialists, Huang Jian, told the STANDARD more details were disclosed by Mr Liao during the meeting.

Mr Huang, chairman of the Hong Kong Factory Owners Association, said Mr. Liao talked on a wide range of issues concerning Hong Kong's future. Mr Liao told the delegation that China would not interfere with the Hong Kong Government after China regained the sovereignty. Mr Huang quoted Mr Liao as saying that there would be no election of the future head of the Hong Kong Government as it might not be fair under the circumstances. "We were told that the future head of the Eong Kong Government would not be called the governor. This person would be chosen through compromise among the various associations," Mr Huang said.

Mr Liao stressed that the future leader would definitely not be appointed by China and, Hong Kong as a Special Administrative Zone, would not be changed for a very long time.

"We were told that the current pragmatic and stable policy was a determined policy and people should not worry that it would change," Mr Huang said.

According to Mr Huang, some other details made by Mr Liao were:

-- The new Hong Kong Government will continue to employ the current force of civil servants. Expatriate civil servants may stay on with their jobs if they wish.

-- The Chinese national flag and a Hong Kong flag will fly side by side on Hong Kong soil.

-- The Hong Kong dollar will be retained as an international currency.

-- Horse racing will be allowed except that the Royal Hong Kong Jockey Club will have the word "royal" deleted. All other entertainment establishments will continue as Hong Kong citizens see fit.

-- Passports for Hong Kong citizens will bear the description of nationality "China-Hong Kong."

-- Hong Kong citizens will continue to have the freedom of overseas travel.

-- Present judiciary and legal system will be maintained, but all legal proceedings confined in Hong Kong. There will be no appeals to the British Privy Council or to China.

Mr Liao also disclosed that China would complete drafting plans for Hong Kong's future in around a year.

The delegation leader said he was also told that a provision in the Chinese Constitution allowing Hong Kong to maintain its special status would be discussed in the forthcoming national congress to be held this week.

Mr Liao's statement on Hong Kong's future was apparently aimed at ending months of speculation on what mode of administrative system Hong Kong would have after China regained it.

'HONG KONG SPECIAL ADMINISTRATIVE ZONE' DETAILED

HK190741 Hong Kong KUANG CHIAO CHING in Chinese No. 122, 16 Nov 82 pp 6-8

[Article by Yu Huai: "'The Hong Kong Special Administrative Zone' Will Absolutely Not Be Modelled After the 'Shenzhen Special Economic Zone' -- China's Social Scientists Mention Six Differences Between the Two Kinds of 'Special Zones'"]

[Text] Since Mrs Thatcher's visit to China and the following talks between China and Britain on the future of Hong Kong, "recovering sovereignty, establishing a special zone, administering Hong Kong with local people and maintaining prosperity" have become hot topics of discussion among Hong Kong residents. More and more people have come to realize that China will not transform Hong Kong into a city like Guangzhou or Shanghai after it recovers sovereignty in 1997 but will rather make Hong Kong a "special administrative zone", maintaining Hong Kong's position as a free port and an international financial center. As to what form the special administrative zone will take, this is a question to which no unanimous answer has yet been given. Some newspapers believe that the future Hong Kong speical administrative zone will be similar to the present Shenzhen Special Zone. There was even one press commentator who said: "If Hong kong is turned into another Shenzhen Special Zone, her prosperity and stability can by no means be maintained."

A magazine published in October even went as far as to say: China's setting up of the Shenzhen and Zhuhai Special Zones was a tactic right from the start to first let Shenzhen and Zhuhai become like Hong Kong and Macao then when the economy in Shenzhen and Zhuhai has mixed with the economy in Hong Kong and Macao, China will conversely make Hong Kong and Macao become like Shenzhen and Zhuhai. The above are merely examples of the many other ideas on the subject.

This writer recently made a tour of Beijing and Guangzhou and took the opportunity to visit five economists and lawyers in the Chinese Academy of Social Science and consult with them on the above question. They are all enlightened scholars and each aired his own views. As regards are understanding of the Hong Kong special administrative zone in 15 years time, they unanimously believe that it will not take the same form as the present Shenzhen Special Zone.

What, then will be the main differences between the future "Hong Kong special administrative zone" and the present Shenzhen Special Economic Zone? I have summarized the opinions of the five scholars on the considerable differences between the two zones into the following six points:

I: Difference in the Nature of the Social Systems

China's special economic zones are areas within socialist China that were selected to absorb foreign capital in a concentrated way by reducing and remitting tariffs. They are different from free trade zones and export processing zones in capitalist countries. Of course, compared with Guangzhou, the Shenzhen Special Economic Zone indeed has many special characteristics but these "specialities" are mainly "special economic policies." In the fields of politics, the army, diplomacy and culture, there are no special features. Therefore, the social system in the special economic zones is still socialist in nature. For this reason, in the draft of China's new constitution, although there is only one particular article dealing with the establishment of special administrative zones, there is no article dealing with special economic zones.

The situation of the future Hong Kong special administrative zone will be quite different because the nature of its social system will be the same as it is now. That is to say, it will retain its capitalist nature. Why is it necessary to set up a few special capitalist zones in a powerful socialist country? It is because of the following considerations: Hong Kong has been ruled by Britain for more than a century and has developed into a modern capitalist society. Whether in her socio-political and economic system or in her way of life, Hong Kong is totally different from other places in our country. This state of affairs, shaped by history can never be changed in a short time after the recovery of sovereignty. So as to maintain Hong Kong's position as a free port and international financial center and accommodate our Hong Kong compatriots' business, daily living and work customs and to guarantee the economic interests of Chinese and foreign consortiums in Hong Kong, it has been decided that a "Hong Kong special administration zone of China" will be set up after the recovery of sovereignty so as to differentiate Hong Kong from China's socialist system and keep her nature as a capitalist society unchanged. This is the so-called "capitalism under the five-star red flag" which was first mentioned by the monthly KUANG CHIAO CHING. We could say that this will be an unprecedented creation in the world.

II. Difference in Economic Structure

Experience in the Shenzhen Special Economic Zone over the past 3 years shows that there are five economic components in the composition of the ownership system: 1) State-owned economy. In the areas of industry, communications, enterprises, construction, finance and tourism, state-owned economy makes up a fairly large proportion.

In the fields of production and circulation, it plays a dominant role. 2) Collective economy. This mainly exists in a section of light industry, retail commerce, service trades and rural communes. 3) Individual economy. This mainly refers to the household business undertakings under licences issued by the government. In Shenzhen City there are now more than 1,300 households doing business in this way. 4) Sino-foreign joint venture economy. This mainly involves enterprises run jointly bv state-owned units and Hong Kong companies and others in the form of processing imported materials, compensation trade etc. 5) The economy solely operated by foreign capitalists. Of the above-mentioned five economic components, state-owned economy and collective economy are socialist in nature. Individual economy is always to be found "at the crossroads." It has the possibility of developing into socialism, but it can also tend toward capitalism. The section of joint ventures owned by foreign capital and the economy solely operated by foreign capitalists are, of course, capitalist economic components, but joint ventures, because of the participation of Chinese state-owned units, can be counted as a form of state capitalism or semi-socialism. The economic sector operated solely by foreign capitalists is still now not great. Even if in future, this sector continuously increases, it will not be a very large proportion of the economy of the special zone as a whole. So, to sum up, the economic composition of the Shenzhen Special Economic Zone is: a variety of economic components reflected by different forms of ownership systems coexisting under the dominance of socialist and state-capitalist economies. Viewed as a whole, the economy in Shenzhen is still part of the socialist system and is not part of the capitalist system.

The future Hong Kong special administrative zone will certainly be different from this. Hong Kong's economic structure has been always dominated by capitalism. Individual economy is also attached to capitalism. In the future when the special administrative zone is set up, the ownership system will not change and because of this its economic structure will be part of the capitalist system, and will not resemble that in the current Shenzhen Special Economic Zone which is mainly socialist in character.

III. Difference in Political Power Setup

The economic system of the future Hong Kong special administrative zone will be completely different from that of the present Shenzhen Special Economic Zone. Because of this, there will be many marked differences in the superstructure of the two "special zones." As far as the structure of politcial power goes, the government of the Shenzhen Special Economic Zone is subordinate to the Quangdong Provincial People's Government but the future Hong Kong special adminsitrative zone will be a municipality directly under the Central People's government. As far as the organization of government goes, the political power in Shenzhen has the same character and organizational setup as other cities and provinces in China. Its administrative, judicial and procuratorial organs are all elected by its people's congress and must be responsible to and are supervised by the people's congress. However, things in the future Hong Kong special adminsitrative zone will obviously be different.

In September last year, Ye Jianying pointed out in his speech on the problem of Taiwan returning to the motherland: Special administrative zones will "enjoy a high degree of autonomy," and "the central government will not interfere in the local affairs of Taiwan." Judging from the policies toward Hong Kong's future revealed by some Beijing high-level officials in recent months, we can believe that in the future China will take the same measures toward Hong Kong. The so-called "enjoyment of a high degree of autonomy" means that this special zone will be like a state in a federal country, for example, like Guam's position in the United States. As Hong Kong will enjoy a high degree of autonomy when it becomes a special administrative zone, a council representing the entire Hong Kong region will be set up and function as the organ of supreme authority.

This council will be composed of Hong Hong patriots from all walks of life. Principal government administrators will be elected by this council and approved by central government. At the same time, since it will enjoy a high degree of autonomy, the setup of governmental organs will not necessarily be the same as in other places on the mainland. Rather, Hong Kong will continue to maintain its present effective government setups, such as the legislative council, the executive council etc. Moreoever, current officials from Britain can continue to be employed in leading positions in the government, or some of them may act as senior advisors. In addition, since Hong Kong will enjoy a high degree of autonomy, there will be no large numbers of cadres being sent from the mainland to take over the work in various governmental departments. Instead, Hong Kong will rely mainly on the local people who are qualified and have specialized knowledge to administer the city. These officials will not be required to support the unification of the motherland. All current civil servants, police personnel and government officials, so long as they are competent, will remain at their posts and continue their work. This is what has been advocated by the media in Hong Kong as "administrating Hong Kong with local people."

IV. Difference in Laws and Decrees

The laws of the two different types of "special zones" most certainly cannot be mentioned in the same breath. The laws in Shenzhen Special Economic Zone are the same as laws in other provinces and cities of China. The fifth article of the PRC Constitution, which will soon be approved, stipulates: "The state safeguards the integrity and dignity of the socialist legal system. No laws, decrees and regulations are allowed to violate the constitution."

But in the special administrative zones things will be different. The 30th article of the new constitution clearly stipulates: "The system implemented in a special administrative zone shall be stipulated by law according to the specific conditions." That is to say, it is not necessary to rigidly copy the whole set of systems and laws implemented within China. Because the future Hong Kong special administrative zone will enjoy a high degree of autonomy, this indicates that it will also enjoy a high degree of independent legislative and judicial power and will be able to maintain the validity of current laws, decrees and regulations. Of course, one thing is bound to be changed. That is that at present, the power of final judgement lies in London. Anyone who refuses to accept the judgment of a Hong Kong court can appeal to London's Privy Council. But in the future, as a special administrative zone, Hong Kong will no longer retain this colonial legal procedure. This, however, does not mean that appeals can be lodged in Beijing. Rather, Hong Kong's Supreme Court will be authorized with the power of final judgment through legislative procedure. In addition, because the current legal system in Hong Kong is extremely different from that on the Chinese mainland, some people have suggested that the National People's Congress should formulate a "Hong Kong charter" providing the fundamental law for Hong Kong. This will certainly give the people in Hong Kong firmer confidence in the future special administrative zone.

V. Difference in the Power Over Foreign Affairs

Foreign Affairs in the Shenzhen Economic Zone are handled by foreign departments at and above provincial level. No "special" foreign policy is enacted in the Shenzhen Special Zone. But things in the future Hong Kong special administative zone will be different. Except for state-to-state exchange and talks that should be handled by the Foreign Ministry of the central government, the special administrative zone will have considerable power over foreign affairs.

For example, it will be able to independently sign economic and cultural agreements with other countries and regions and join various international economic and cultural organizations etc.

As we know, Hong Kong, in its status as a British dependency, is now engaging in international economic activities. It can take part in bilateral trade talks as an "independent tariff region" and join various international organizations and sign various international agreements in official, semi-official and popular capacities. When the future special administrative zone is founded, these practices will be continued and Hong Kong will enjoy a high degree of autonomy. It will still be able to participate in international economic activities as an "independent tariff region."

VI. Difference in the Degree of Democracy and Freedom

With respect to democracy and freedom, the current Shenzhen Special Economic Zone is basically the same as other provinces and cities on the mainland, but differences will be seen in the future Hong Kong special administrative zone. According to many remarks made by Chinese state leaders, we can believe that Hong Kong's law in future will stipulate in explicit terms that the people in Hong Kong can enjoy more and better democracy and freedom. Freedom of personal correspondence, tours to other countries, speech, press, assembly, association, procession, demonstration and strike will be guaranteed by law and their freedom of religious belief will be larger than that in the Shenzhen Special Economic Zone.

As everyone knows, since the downfall of the "gang of four," the CPC's policy toward religion has been gradually implemented. At present, in the Shenzhen Special Economic Zone, we can see various religious activities. Catholicism, Christianity, Buddhism and Taoism all have their religious organizations. They hold servies, conduct sermons, publicize their religious doctrines and freely publish their sermons, publicize their religious doctrines and freely publish their scriptures. However, the future Hong Kong special administrative zone, in consideration of its traditions formed by history, will have wider freedom of religious belief. For example, religious organizations that have direct relations with foreign churches will be able to continue these ties, raise funds to contribute to these churches and carry on normal international religious contacts. All this is different from the "three-self" principle carried out by the religious groups on the mainland.

Moreover, the Hong Kong special administrative zone will have many differences in ways of life from the Shenzhen Special Economic Zone. For example, horse racing, the Mark Six lottery and mahjong playing are habits of life shaped over a long period in a capitalist society. In the future, they must be allowed to exist for a fairly long period in Hong Kong.

In short, what the Chinese social scientists have described is the completely new form of the future Hong Kong special administrative zone: It will have a maximum of autonomy, a high degree of legislative power, independent judicial power, sufficient power over foreign affairs, unchanged social and economic systems and unchanged lifestyle.

Some people are doubtful. How can the CPC regime allow three capitalist regions, namely, Hong Kong, Macao and Taiwan, to exist in its socialist state? In fact, it is not difficult to understand. This is called "showing respect for history and reality." The total population of these three regions is merely 20 million odd people and accounts for less than 2 percent of a large socialist country with a population of 1 billion.

This will never radically influence the system of the state and the national government. As for when these three regions will take the road of socialism, this is already a question that will not be solved by this generation of people. That is to say, in the next four to five decades, Hong Kong will remain a capitalist Hong Kong and capitalism in Hong Kong will last even longer than that. Only when future generations feel that the society must be reformed will it then be peacefully reformed in a natural way.

Why should we fear that the sky will fall on our heads?

TA KUNG PAO ON SHIDAI DE BAOGAO RESHUFFLE

HK220338 Hong Kong TA KUNG PAO in Chinese 20 Nov 82 p 3

["Special Feature" by Lau Yu [0525 0151] "Report on SHIDAI DE BAOGAO"]

[Text] An Explosive Incident in the Literary and Art World

Not long ago, an explosive incident occurred in the literary and art world in Beijing. That is, the journal SHIDAI DE BAOGAO which had for a time enjoyed considerable fame, was criticized, and its chief editor, Huang Gang, was dismissed. Amid loud demands for the reorganization of the journal's editorial board, it has been stipulated that in the future, this journal should be restricted to publishing straight reportage and that it should not publish commentaries on literary and art problems, or try to order people about arbitrarily.

For the last month, whenever people in literary and art circles have met, they have talked about this incident. When a critic said humorously, "it is 3 to 1 this time," people smiled knowingly. This was a metaphor that compared this victory in eliminating "leftist" ideology in the ideological debate with the overwhelming victory of the Chinese womens' volleyball team in the world championship competition. Naturally, people are pleased by this victory.

The criticism of SHIDAI DE BAOGAO was caused by the following incidents:

The first was the journal's ideas on the problems related to the "relationship between literature and politics." Since 1979, Deng Xiaoping and Hu Qiaomu have repeatedly explained that we should no longer raise the slogans "Literature and art serve politics" and "Literature and art are subordinate to politics." Because this issue is closely related to the decades of leftist mistakes in the spheres of literature and art, those who have long been influenced by "leftist" ideology are especially sensitive to it. It seems to them that if these slogans are abolished, they will lose their shelter in literary and art circles. That is why they always try to act in opposition. The No. 6 issue of SHIDAI DE BAOGAO published two long articles by well-known personages in the literary and art world. These articles tried many means to emphasize the correctness and necessity of the slogan that literature and art serves politics. They held that this slogan "cannot be negated," and that those who think that this slogan plays a negative role are "too extreme." They even go so far as to adopt a lecturing tone, saying "Why not be a bit calmer?" This phenomenon of putting on a public show of direct opposition to the cetnral authorities has really been very rare in recent years, especially since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee. According to the view of SHIDAI DE BAOGAO, we should simply turn the clock of history back to 6 years ago. Of course, this can never be allowed.

There Was Malicious Intent Behind the Phrase "There Has Been No Difference in the Past 16 Years"

The second is the problem related to the view that "There has been no difference in the past 16 years." The No. 2 issue of SHIDAI DE BAOGAO published an "editor's note" that alleged that "during the 16 years since the start of the 'Great Cultural Revolution' the 'talks' (referring to Mao Zedong's 'talks at the Yanan forum on literature and art') have suffered distortion by both 'leftists' and rightists." This lumped together the decade in which Lin Biao, Jiang Qing and their ilk created turmoil throughout China, with the recent few years in which we have been bringing order out of chaos in accordance with the policies formulated by the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee and have created a stable and bright political situation for our four modernizations. This view was propagated in the very first issue of SHIDAI DE BAOGAO, which stated that "there was no essential difference" between the period which Lin Biao and Jiang Qing staged a rebellion, and the present period. This time, they used a few non-essential phenomena that had emerged in the course of bringing order out of chaos as grounds to describe the past few years as being a period of complete darkness, stating that there was a "situation of complete confusion" in these years and calling them the most rightist period in the past few decades. By publishing these groundless views, they were publicly attacking the policies of the Central Committee. It was natural that they would fail to win the support of the broad ranks of readers and masses.

However, it was by no means easy to win victory in this debate. Since the publication of the first issue of SHIDAI DE BAOGAO in 1980, some people have deceived and lured a few people they regarded as being influential into supporting them, and tried to bully people by flaunting their connections with those influential personages. The journal chose targets of criticism at will and thus caused all the people in the literary and art circles to look askance. When they published the "editor's note," they thought they could exploit the opportunity of commemorating the "talks" to attack the cadres, writers and artists in literary and art circles. Unexpectedly, they suffered the stern resistance and criticism of the WENYI BAO and literary and art journals from Anhui, Liaoning, Shanghai, Fujian, Hunan and other places. Moreover, their polemics were reported by RENMIN RIBAO and GUANGMING RIBAO. This enraged the chief editor of SHIDAI DE BAOGAO who threatened that he would "fight to the bitter end." On the one hand, in the seventh and eighth issues, they published a number of so-called articles written by the masses of workers and peasants and a number of editor's articles, and used sophistry to refute the criticism of other journals, calumnously stating that WENYI BAO and other journals were creating disturbances and mobilizing press circles to beseige them. They even alleged: "It will not be favorable for the unity of the literary and art world if all the old accounts are dug up and settled." On the other hand, they lavished praise on themselves, saying: "Among a thick forest of various kinds of journals, I find that SHIDAI DE BAOGAO has maintained a solemn, simple and rigorous style." At the same time, they went all over the place pouring out their "grievances" and published an ultimatum demanding that RENMIN RIBAO and GUANGMING RIBAO give the same space and treatment in reporting about the articles in SHIDAI DE BAOGAO. They time and again sent people to the office of GUANGMING RIBAO to pester the people there, but no one paid any attention to them.

Forcing the Central Committee To Make Known Its Position By Criticizing "Unrequited Love"

In criticizing "Unrequited Love" last year, SHIDAI DE BAOGAO denounced it as a scenario with mistakes and defects, and as a "big poisonous weed that opposes the party and socialism." They sent people to hawk their journals in the busiest areas of Beijing and said that "the big poisonous weed of the reactionary writer Bai Hua should be criticized."

The hue and cry they raised was aimed at forcing the Central Committee to make known its position.

In fact, some people even carried out a series of behind-the-scenes activities. For example, they sent people to various areas to make preparations to exploit their "success" in criticizing "Unrequited Love" and runing Bai Hua in order to pull down all those leading cadres in literary and art circles who were thorns in their flesh. In April, last year, some one even went to give a report at a meeting of the reporters of the ZHONGGUO QINGNIAN BAO. This person put forward a so-called "global strategic viewpoint," and advocated treating literary and art issues with an attitude that regarded class struggle as the key link and war as inevitable. He threatened that if the leaders of the literary and art circles did not have these attitudes, they "could not evade the condemnation of history." These wanton viewpoints went against the current literary and art policies of the CPC Central Committee and could not win any support from the people.

At a time when the people want to eliminate the poisonous influence of "leftism" and maintain the situation of stability and unity, only these people are the people who "desire to see the world plunged into chaos." However, all they got in the end was a rebuff.

WEN WEI PO EDITORIAL ON CHIANG CHING-KUO'S ERRORS

[Editorial: "The Erroneous Utterances of Chiang Ching-Kuo"]

[Text] On the 13th, Chiang Ching-kuo granted an interview to Li Ou [2621 2962], editor-in-chief of the French magazine LE FIGARO. Giving himself up to the mood of the occasion, he talked eloquently on the "national policies" of the Taiwan authorities.

The most important part of this "national policy" is still the question of China's unity. It involves the orientation and the future of Taiwan -- to be reunited with the motherland, or to be like a lonely orphan across the sea. Continued separation will be anathema to the people. Furthermore, it is an anachronism. For the Taiwan authorities, not reunifying undoubtedly means digging their own grave. Look around, is it not the case that more and more compatriots and overseas Chinese at home and abroad are demanding peace talks between the KMT and the CPC? Last month, Fei Hsi-ping and Tao Pai-chuan, "members of the Legislative Yuan" also did so. So, recently, did Feng Yuxiang's son Feng Hongzhi. The CPC, for its part, has suggested that every effort be made to achieve peaceful reunification between the mainland and Taiwan in the 1980's. As time goes by, in the absence of talks and peace, the Taiwan authorities will surely be thrown into a harder plight.

However, Chiang Ching-kuo in his talk, obviously failed to take into account this inevitable trend in the development of history. He still adheres to the "national policy" of "no contact, no talks and no compromise" and of "no change in position in the face of every possible change in the situation." What is the situation on the mainland of China? What is the will of the people of Taiwan? Chiang Ching-kuo still does not know. Or, he knows and has purposely distorted things, being afraid of facing up to reality.

Reading through Chiang Ching-kuo's whole talk, we can see that a most serious mistake is his assessment of the mainland. Chiang Ching-kuo holds that "with Deng Xiaoping in power, the crisis is deeper." There is no explaining what the crisis is. However, everyone knows that since the downfall of the gang of four, through readjusting policies and the economy, the mainland of China has brought order out of chaos. There has been unprecedented political unity and stability.

A balanced and steady growth of the economy has been noticed. The people's living standards have shown an appropriate improvement. Where is the "crisis?" What suggests "a deeper crisis?" If one wants to say that China has problems, to be sure, there are problems. They are: How to introduce the production responsibility system in various economic departments; How to accelerate the development of socialist spiritual civilization; How to improve and strengthen leadership at all levels; and so forth. These can be described as problems concerning the progress of China and are not the least to do with a "crisis."

A wrong assessment inevitably leads to a wrong conclusion. Therefore, Chiang Ching-Kuo has again harped on the old tune of "exerting every effort to achieve final victory." However, who will believe his claim about "final victory?"

Another serious mistake in Chiang Ching-kuo's talk is his assessment of the will of the people of Taiwan. The reason why Chiang Ching-kuo has been so resolute in his refusal to have peace talks with the CPC is that peace talks on reunification would "make the people relax their cherished aspirations and morale." People cannot help asking: Do the "cherished aspirations and morale of the people" of Taiwan, after all, call for unity or division, peace or war? Even in the strictly controlled Taiwan press, we can read a lot written about the Taiwan compatriots' yearning for the motherland, their longing for their relatives on the mainland, and their ceaseless hopes for reunification with the motherland and for free communication between both sides of the straits. Even in government circles in Taiwan, the appeal for peace talks is often heard. Dissatisfaction with the policy of "no contact, no talks and no compromise" is also often revealed. Fei Hsi-ping and Tao Pai-chuan, who were mentioned above, are only two cases in point. We can conclude that if Chiang Ching-kuo continues following his own course, more cries and a greater sense of dissatisfaction will be aroused. The will of the people of Taiwan calls for peaceful reunification with the motherland. This is an indisputable argument. This is a natural product of historical consciousness and cultural traditions of the Chinese nation over several thousand years. Anyone who acts against it will be isolated. Chiang Ching-kuo is afraid that peace talks may "make the people relax their cherished aspirations and morale." Does this not only serve in reverse as an indication of the trend in the people's cherished aspirations and morale?

Chiang Ching-kuo still believes that he can maintain a stable government by relying on an anticommunist stand. This is the political consciousness and traditional line of a small number of people represented by Chiang Ching-kuo and has nothing to do with the masses of people. This has been proved by past history and will surely continue to be proved by the future development of facts. An anticommunist stand is unpopular, because this is going against the trend. We advise Chiang Ching-kuo to seriously study a bit the national conditions of the mainland and the will of Taiwan and not to cling to his own erroneous view.

MING PAO REPORTS GUANGDONG PERSONNEL CHANGES

HK180320 Hong Kong MING PAO in Chinese 18 Nov 82 p 5

[Special dispatch from Guangzhou by Shi Ruo [2457 5387]: "Guangdong Personnel Transfers Begin"]

[Text] Guangzhou, 17 Nov -- The Guangdong Provincial CPC Committee and provincial government have recently undergone important personnel changes.

The readjustment of the leading bodies of the provincial CPC committee and provincial government is now being speeded up. The current personnel changes involve many aspects and relatively high levels.

The recent rumor that Wang Quanguo would be appointed governor of Guangdong Province has now been clarified. He has recently received an official transfer order from the organization department of the CPC Central Committee, and is to be transfered to take up the post of executive secretary of the Hunan Provincial CPC Committee. His former post was that of a provincial CPC secretary and vice governor of Guangdong. As a cadre of action in his prime, he was elected a member of the 12th CPC Central Committee in September of this year.

Luo Tian, Guangdong Provincial CPC Committee executive secretary, recently sent in his resignation. His retreat to the second front has been approved. His former posts as first secretary of the Hainan Regional CPC Committee, commissioner to the administrative district and first political commissar of the Hainan Military District are now taken up by Lei Yu [7191 1342].

Le Yu is an experienced cadre adept at organizational work. He has long been in charge of industrial and communications work and has made prominent contributions. Of Guangdong origin, he graduated from the Harbin Industrial University and is now 48 years old. He enjoyed the trust of Ren Zhongyi long ago when the latter was holding the post of first secretary of the Liaoning Provincial CPC Committee. Thus, he was appointed director of the Industrial and Communications Bureau of the Liaoning Provincial Government. Admiring his ability, Ren Zhongyi brought him to Guangdong and appointed him deputy director of the Guangdong CPC Committee General Office.

As Wang Quanguo has already received the transfer order and is to take up his new post in Hunan Province soon, the rumor that he will be appointed governor of Guangdong Province has been clarified. However, who will take up the post of governor, since former Governor Liu Tianfu is going to retire soon? Some sources recently disclosed that there are two likely candidates, namely, Liang Lingguang and Lin Ruo [2651 5387].

Both Liang Lingguang and Lin Ruo were elected members of the 12th CPC Central Committee in September of this year. As a young cadre whose ability was admired by Zhao Ziyang when the latter was holding the post of first secretary of the Guangdong Provincial CPC Committee, Lin Ruo has given full play to his talent in recent years. Despite his short period of service, he is an outstanding personage in power.

Before the Cultural Revolution, Lin Ruo had been secretary of the Donguang County CPC Committee. Showing concern for the people's livelihood and practicing a benevolent rule, he was well-supported by the local peasants. Later, he was cruelly persecuted by the revolutionary rebels. The peasants hid him and treated him to steamed chickens. Thus, he survived the disaster. At present, he is secretary of the Zhanjiang Prefectural CPC Committee. He has devoted much effort to increase grain production and has been successful.

UN URGES ABOLITION OF VESTIGES OF COLONIALISM

OW230832 Beijing XINHUA in English 0717 GMT 23 Nov 82

[Text] United Nations, November 22 (XINHUA) -- The U.N. General Assembly plenary meeting today called for the early abolition of the vestiges of colonialism and the speedy eradication of racism and apartheid.

The General Assembly this morning began its debate on the implementation of the 1960 declaration on the granting of independence to colonial countries and peoples.

Faruk Adhami (Syria), rapporteur of the Special Committee on Decolonization, told the Assembly that the special committee had formulated recommendations for the application of further measures by states and U.N. organs to accelerate the pace of decolonization.

Frank Abdullah (Trinidad and Tobago), chairman of the Special Committee on Decolonization, said that his committee had given intensified consideration to the question of Namibia. He regretted that certain states contributed to the continued existence of the problem by taking part in the exploitation of the territory. All such collaboration with South Africa must cease and increased support must be extended to the Namibian people and the South-West Africa People's Organization (SWAPO), he stressed.

Abdullah said that the committee had given considerable time and attention to other smaller territories in the Caribbean and in the Indian and Pacific regions. The administering powers concerned, he went on, must permit the peoples of those territories to make their decisions freely and without inducement.

Indian representative D.P. Chattopadhyaya announced that India's sympathy, understanding and support for liberation struggles would continue until the last vestiges of colonialism were eradicated.

Cypriot Representative Andreas Konstandiou said that colonialism and racist oppression remained in southern Africa, Namibia, Palestine and other places where the colonial powers continued to exploit the indigenous population, to plunder the natural resources and the wealth of those territories and to keep their oppressed victims in perpetual bondage. There were still over four million people in the remaining colonial territories who had yet to achieve the goal of self-determination and independence, he noted.

Georges Razanakoto of Madagascar reiterated his country's support for liberation movements. He said that should the transition toward independence be too slow, the United Nations should proclaim Namibia's independence.

Raul Roa Kouri of Cuba expressed support for Argentina's right to sovereignty over the Malvinas (Falkland) Islands.

PRC DELEGATE ADDRESSES FAO COUNCIL IN ROME

OW240147 Beijing XINHUA in English 0106 GMT 24 Nov 82

[Text] Rome, November 23 (XINHUA) -- Kong Candong, head of the Chinese delegation to the 82nd Food and Agriculture Organization (FAO) council meeting, today called for increased food and agricultural production in the Third World and a change for the better in international trade of agricultural produce.

He was speaking at the FAO council meeting which began here yesterday.

He pointed out that the world has gathered another good harvest this year which, he said, is indeed good tidings.

However, he continued, many developing countries, falling a victim to the economic crisis exported by some developed countries are still unable to ensure themselves sufficient food supplies and are suffering from a soaring international payment deficit from their disadvantageous position in gaining access to markets and in pricing, thus entailing mounting foreign debts. The international economic situation as a whole looks very grim, the Chinese delegation leader said.

He made the appeal for the creation of a new, just and fair international economic order.

FAO Director-General Edouard Saouma, when speaking at the opening meeting yesterday, pointed out that the world economic situation seemed never so bad as it is today, and never so distressing. The decline in world trade has caused losses in the developing countries which are two times the official aid they have received, thus plunging them into deeper financial troubles.

The representatives of Romania, Brazil, Kenya and Mexico all underlined in their speeches at the meeting the importance of developing grain production in developing countries.

During the council meeting, discussions were centered on questions concerning the food and agricultural situation and international readjustment of agriculture. Representatives from 49 council member countries attended the meeting which will end Dec. 3.

REAGAN ANNOUNCES DECISION ON MX DEPLOYMENT

OW231132 Beijing XINHUA in English 1113 GMT 23 Nov 82

[Text] Washington, November 22 (XINHUA) -- U.S. President Ronald Reagan announced in a statement here today that he has decided to adopt the "closely spaced basing" plan for the controversial MX missile -- an essential first step in deploying this giant intercontinental ballistic missile (ICBM) system.

Reagan described the strengthening of U.S. land-based missile system as "absolutely essential" to maintain America's deterrent capability to deter war and to protect the nation. He disclosed that the missile work is now nearly complete and the first test flight is scheduled for early next year.

The MX, a new generation of ICBM, carries 10 warheads. It is more accurate and has greater range and targeting flexibility than the present Minuteman ICBMs. The Reagan administration plans to spend 26 billion dollars to deploy 100 missiles in Wyoming.

Hours later, in a televised speech to the nation tonight, Reagan announced that he had made some suggestions to the Soviet leadership on reducing the risks of accident and misunderstanding between the two countries. But there was actually not much new in these suggestions which included "advance notification of all U.S. and Soviet test launches of intercontinental ballistic missiles" and "advance notification of major military exercises".

An AP dispatch interpreted these two statements as a "carrot and stick" approach in dealing with the Soviet Union, a reference to the President's statement that he intended "to search for along two parallel paths -- deterrence and arms reduction."

But others considered the second statement was designed to alleviate the public fear that the deployment of the new ICBMs would touch off a new round of the nuclear armament race.

To convince the U.S. Congress as well as the public, Reagan stressed that the new system was not only crucial to U.S. security but would also prove helpful to negotiate an arms control agreement with the Soviets. He repeated his allegation: "Today, in virtually every measure of military power the Soviet Union enjoys a decided advantage." However, an ABC evening news commentary held that congressional approval of the new ICBM system "is very much in doubt" in view of the current economic woes, huge budget deficits and public sentiments against nuclear arms race.

CAAC, BOEING SIGN MULTIMILLION-DOLLAR CONTRACT

OW231938 Beijing XINHUA in English 1840 GMT 23 Nov 82

[Text] Beijing, November 23 (XINHUA) -- The Civil Aviation Administration of China (CAAC) and the U.S. Boeing Company today exchanged a 170 million U.S. dollar contract for 10 advanced 737-200 twin engin jetliners.

At the press conference for the contract exchanging ceremony, Hu Yizhou, CAAC's deputy-director general, said negotiations on the purchase of two Boeing 747 planes is still under way.

The 10 short-to-medium range 129-seat 737s will be delivered by Boeing beginning in February next year.

"China is a big country with a population of more than 1,000 million," Hu Yizhou said. "We will upgrade and modernize our air fleet, and import advanced equipment. CAAC intends to develop economic cooperation and trade relations with all aircraft manufacturers in the world."

CAAC operates 173 domestic air routes on more than 210,000 kilometers, serving 86 cities in China's 29 provinces, municipalities and autonomous regions except Taiwan. International service operates 20 routes on more than 190,000 kilometers, serving 22 cities in 18 countries and regions.

CAAC, since 1979, has earned steady profits, netting 160 million yuan last year, Hu Yizhou said. He expects to earn more in 1982.

"The key to our success is the strength and improvement of CAAC's management, reliance on the efforts of our staff, lower production costs and the superiority of the socialist system," he said.

Thorton A. Wilson, chairman of the board and chief executive officer of Boeing, said "we have made substantial progress in the step-by-step development of an industrial cooperation program that will lead to an even stronger bond between us... We intend to continue our cooperative efforts for the benefit of both of our peoples."

YURIY ANDROPOV SPEAKS TO CPSU PLENUM SESSION

[Text] Moscow, November 22 (XINHUA) -- General Secretary of the Soviet Communist Party (CPSU) Yuriy Andropov said in a speech today at the plenary meeting of the CPSU Central Committee that Soviet foreign policy "continues to be determined by the decisions" of the last three party congresses.

He said: "Defense requirements as usual have been taken into account. The Political Bureau considers it essential, particularly with the present-day international situation, to provide the army and the navy with everything they require."

He said that the Soviet Union is ready for talks with the U.S. and other Western countries on slowing the arms race and for reaching agreements. "But let no one expect unilateral disarmament from us," he said. He also repeated the proposal on freezing Soviet and U.S. strategic nuclear weapons.

Referring to Soviet-Chinese relations, he spoke of the ideas proposed by Leonid Brezhnev in his speeches in Tashkent and Baku. "We pay great attention to every positive response to this from the Chinese side," he said.

Talking of the domestic problems, Andropov admitted that a series of extremely important targets for the first two years of the present Five-Year Plan had not been fulfilled, and this will affect the plan for next year. He said that "there are many things to be done in the national economy" of the Soviet Union. "The main thing is to speed up work to improve the entire sphere of economic management, including administration, planning and the economic mechanism," he said.

FRENCH ENVOY DISCUSSES REUNIFICATION OF KOREA

OW231955 Beijing XINHUA in English 1649 GMT 23 Nov 82

[Text] Pyongyang, November 23 (XINHUA) -- The French president's special envoy Francois de Grossouvre pledged yesterday that France would spare no efforts to contribute to the reunification of Korea.

KCNA quoted Grossourre as saying at a banquet in his honor after his arrival here yesterday that France and the Democratic People's Republic of Korea (DPRK) have further developed their friendly relations and enhanced their mutual contacts.

Grossouvre also expressed France's solidarity with the Korean people who have suffered from the unjust partition of the country.

DPRK Vice-Premier Chong Chun-ki said in reply that the special envoy's visit to DPRK reflected the common desire of the French and Korean peoples to further develop friendly relations between them. KYODO: JAPAN, PRC AGREE ON DPRK TRADE ROUTE

[Text] Tokyo, Nov 20 KYODO -- Chinese and Japanese traders have agreed to use North Korea as an entrepot for two-way trade between Japan and two northeast Chinese provinces on an experimental basis, trade and shipping sources said Saturday.

The plan, first conceived by Chinese trading officials to shorten shipment delays, has reportedly received the blessings of the North Korean authorities, the sources said. The plan calls for shipping Chinese goods produced in Jilin and Heilongjiang by train to North Korean port of Chongjin for transhipment to Japan.

The sources stressed that the transit plan is purely on an experimental basis and said the first consignment is expected to set sail for Japan next January.

Trading officials from Heilongjiang and Jilin brought up the transit idea during a visit to Japan last October. They told their Japanese trading partners that the transhipment through North Korea would ease congestion problems at the Chinese port of Dalian and speed up delivery, the sources said.

MORE SRV TROOPS REPORTED AT THAI BORDER

[Text] Bangkok, November 19 (XINHUA) -- Fresh Vietnamese troops, many from crack divisions armed with new long-range artillery, have been moved closer to the Kampuchean-Thai border, according to reports from the border areas. From the southeastern Thai Province of Chanthaburi to the northeastern Province of Ubon Ratchatani, Thai defense forces now face beefed-up Vietnamese units before the dry season sets in.

The latest Vietnamese weapon which caused serious concern among Thai officers is an improved version of the 130mm field gun with an accurate range of 35 kilometres. The BANGKOK POST here reported today that intelligence and field sources have confirmed the movement of Vietnamese troops and the presence of tanks, assualt rifles and helicopters near the Kampuchean-Thai border.

It quoted a source based at the border town of Aranyaprathet as saying that it's going to be a very hot winter at the border, for Thailand as well as the resistance forces of Democratic Kampuchea.

However, secretary-general of the National Security Council of Thailand Prasong Soonsiri said earlier this week that the Vietnamese troops would still be unable to wipe out the Kampuchean resistance forces in the dry-season offensive. The military situation would remain fundamentally unchanged in the next few years, he said.

DK PRIME MINISTER SON SANN CONTINUES VISIT

Meets With Hu Yaobang

OW231118 Beijing XINHUA in English 1106 GMT 23 Nov 82

[Text] Beijing, November 23 (XINHUA) -- Hu Yaobang, general secretary of the C.P.C. Central Committee, met here this morning with Son Sann, prime minister of the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea, and his party.

Hu Yaobang praised the Kampuchean prime minister for his contributions to the salvation of his country by resisting the Vietnamese aggressors and to peace in Southeast Asia. He said that the Kampuchean people are now engaged in a difficult but great struggle on the outcome of which hinges the destiny of the Kampuchean nation, the future of coming generations, and the peace and stability of Southeast Asia.

The general secretary said that it will take a tremondous effort to win the victory of saving Kampuchea from the Vietnamese aggressors. "In our opinion", Hu said, "there are at least two prerequisites for such a victory. The first is the close unity and heroic struggle of the various patriotic forces of Kampuchea. The three patriotic forces should discard their differences with each other and unite to resist the foreign aggressors. The second is to gain support from the world community, that is to say to get the overwhelming majority of countries and peoples of the world to take the stand of upholding justice and supporting the struggle of the Kampuchean people."

Hu emphasized that China stands unswervingly on the side of the Kampuchean people.

Son Sann said: "Our consistent opinion is that the various resistance forces in Kampuchea should sincerely unite so as to employ every means to promote our struggle against the Vietnamese aggressors. That is why we joined the coalition government last June. We have the utmost hope for our coalition. We will be as good as our word."

He continued: "I would like to reiterate solemnly and clearly that we will do everything we can to keep the coalition government going since we have joined it. We are determined to spare no effort in our struggle which we will continue until the last Vietnamese aggressor is driven off."

Present at the meeting were Wu Xueqian, minister of foreign affairs; Han Nianlong, adviser to the Foreign Ministry and Pech Cheang, ambassador of Democratic Kampuchea to China.

Press Conference

[Text] Beijing, November 23 (XINHUA) -- Son Sann, prime minister of the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea, held a press conference for Chinese and foreign journalists at the Great Hall of the People this afternoon.

Son Sann described the Kampuchean people's resistance to the Vietnamese aggressors since the formation of the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea. He condemned the Vietnamese use of chemicals and toxic gas to kill innocent people.

"The office of the prime minister condemns the use of chemicals and toxic gas by the Vietnamese aggressors, whose forces occupy Kampuchea in contempt of all international laws and principles, and the Charter of the United Nations," he said.

"In the face of the genocide and the expansionist and annexationist policies of Hanoi, all the patriotic forces in Kampuchea shall continue to mobilize all efforts in all forms to fight the Vietnamese occupation troops until the complete liberation of the motherland," he said.

"I was warmly received in China. I have held talks with Premier Zhao Ziyang. The conversation between General Secretary Hu Yaobang and us today was very inspiring," Son Sann said.

He said: "Vietnam's attempt to disrupt the unity of the three patriotic forces in Kampuchea is futile. The only way to solve the Kampuchean issue is for the Vietnamese to withdraw and let the Kampuchean people solve their own problems. Vietnam must follow the United Nations' resolution on the Kampuchean issue.

"We are determined to carry on the coalition of the three parties. We have united to resist the aggressors. The Kampuchean people's struggle is a just cause and our people are bound to win. After Vietnam withdraws Kampuchea will be a non-aligned country, independent and neutral, and respecting human rights," he said.

COMMENTARY NOTES GOOD PRC-THAI RELATIONS

OW230613 Beijing in Mandarin to Southeast Asia 0900 GMT 21 Nov 82

[Commentary by station commentator (Ya Ming): "The Path of Sino-Thai Friendship Is Widening," commenting on Thai Prime Minister Prem's visit to China]

[Text] The Chinese Government and people gave a warm welcome to and several receptions between 17 and 20 November in honor of Thai Prime Minister Prem Tinsulanon, the distinguished guest from the banks of the Mae Nam River and a respected old friend of the Chinese people. In these 4 short days, he met separately with our state leaders Hu Yaobang, Deng Xiaoping, Zhao Ziyang and Deng Yingchao. Premier Zhao Ziyang and Prime Minister Prem held talks on two occasions dealing with the international situation, relations between the two countries and other issues of mutual concern. Foreign ministers of the two countries also held talks.

Whether at the banquets or during sincere and friendly talks, the enthusiastic atmosphere showed that Sino-Thai relations are growing and the path of Sino-Thai friendship is widening. China has always cherished good feelings towards Thailand. This is because the people of these two countries have been maintaining close ties, like relatives, since ancient times, and China profoundly admires Thailand's new achievements in safeguarding national independence and developing the national economy. China also highly praises the just stand taken by Thailand in international affairs, especially its stand toward the Kampuchean question. Just as Hu Yaobang, general secretary of the CPC Central Committee, pointed out at his meeting with Prime Minister Prem, it is China's consistent national policy to maintain long-term, good neighborly relations, friendship and cooperation with Thailand.

At present, the friendly cooperation between China and Thailand is developing very smoothly in the political and economic fields, as well as in the fields of science, technology and culture. Sino-Thai friendship and cooperation, built on a basis of mutual trust and support, will be further developed through Prime Minister Prem's visit. The talks between the Chinese and Thai premiers revealed that both sides share broad, identical views on important current international issues and on the situation in Southeast Asia. The premiers of both countries unanimously agreed to continue support for the Kampuchean people's united struggle against Vietnam and for the coalition government formed by the three patriotic forces. The two premiers also urged Vietnam to withdraw its troops from Kampuchea in compliance with the UN General Assembly resolutions in order to bring about peace and security in Southeast Asia.

The Vietnamese authorities have not only rejected the UN resolutions, but have rushed weapons and troops to the Kampuchean-Thai border areas in an attempt to start a new military adventure there.

The Thai Government and people have sternly expressed their determination to safeguard the country's sovereignty and territorial integrity. Chinese leaders have also reiterated this time that if the Vietnamese authorities dare to invade Thailand by force, the Chinese Government and people will resolutely stand at Thailand's side and fully support the Thai people's just stand against aggression. This shows once again that China has always adhered to a basic principle in its foreign policy, that is, to oppose hegemonism and safeguard world peace. Thai Prime Minister Prem Tinsulanon's visit will further strengthen Sino-Thai friendship. The development of Sino-Thai friendship will not only serve the basic interests of the two people, but also peace and security in Southeast Asia.

Peng Chong delivered a written address at Subang International Airport. He said: The establishment of diplomatic relations between China and Malaysia has added a new chapter to the history of traditional friendship between the peoples of the two countries. Friendship and cooperation between the governments and peoples of our countries, on the basis of the five principles for peaceful coexistence, have been increasing with each passing day.

Ismail gave a banquet to welcome the Chinese NPC delegation, headed by Vice Chairman Peng Chong, on the evening of 19 November. Touching on the Kampuchean issue, he said: The ASEAN countries have upheld justice and opposed the armed invasion and occupation of Kampuchea by foreign countries. The ASEAN countries have persistently supported a just and reasonable solution to the Kampuchean issue in accordance with the resolution of the United Nations and the statement of the International Conference on Kampuchea.

Peng Chong expressed his support for the suggestion made by the ASEAN countries to turn Southeast Asia into a peaceful, free and neutral zone. He said: In the course of opposing hegemonism and defending world peace, China particularly wants to strengthen its unity and cooperation with the Third World countries. He pointed out: The countries in Southeast Asia are our dear neighbors and have had good relations with China. We hope that the countries in Southeast Asia will promote unity, stability and prosperity. We also hope that our friendly relations with them will continue to develop.

NETHERLANDS' LUBBERS CITED ON MISSILE PLANS

OW230910 Beijing XINHUA in English 0814 GMT 23 Nov 82

[Text] Brussels, November 22 (XINHUA) -- New Dutch Prime Minister Ruud Lubbers today pledged to continue the preparations for the deployment of U.S. nuclear missiles in Dutch territory, according to a report from The Hague.

In his inaugural speech at the parliament, Lubbers said that the preparations are meant to exert pressure on the Soviet Union, which is now negotiating with the United States in Geneva on the reduction of intermediate-range nuclear weapons.

The outcome of the talks will be a very important factor in deciding on Dutch deployment, he said.

He described the North Atlantic alliance as the principal instrument of Western cooperation and stressed Dutch loyalty to the alliance and its NATO commitments.

The Netherlands will increase its annual defense spendings by 2 percent in the coming four years, Lubbers declared.

NORWAY APPROVES NATO MISSILE DEPLOYMENT PAYMENT

OW240143 Beijing XINHUA in English 0102 GMT 24 Nov 82

[Text] Stockholm, November 23 (XINHUA) -- Norway's parliament last night approved by a 77-76 vote government payments to NATO for the deployment of medium-range missiles.

Reports from Oslo said the Conservative government's defense budget for 1983 which includes the payments caused a heated debate in parliament Monday.

The opposition Labor Party, which opposed immediate payment for the deployment, won support from a minority of parliamentarians of the Socialist Left Party, the Liberal Party, the Center Party and the Christian Democrats Party.

The Conservative Party argued that Norway should keep the promise made by the previous government of the Labor Party and honor payments on schedule.

It stressed that a delay in the payment would send the Soviet Union a signal that NATO is not making preparations for the deployment of new medium-range missiles, which would cause difficulty to the U.S.-Soviet disarmament negotiations now being held in Geneva.

With the support of a majority of parliamentarians of the Center Party and the Christian Democrats Party, the Conservative government's defense budget was approved.

UK'S CALLAGHAN VIEWS UNILATERAL DISARMAMENT

OW191301 Beijing XINHUA in English 0725 GMT 19 Nov 82

[Text] London, November 18 (XINHUA) -- Former British Prime Minister James Callaghan today dismissed unilateral nuclear disarmament as an "illusion" and called on the British Labour Party to rethink its policy on that issue.

"Unilateral disarmament does not offer a way out," Callaghan said. "To do so would be to hand to the Soviet Union something valuable with no prospect of anything in exchange."

"Why should we unilaterally give away any bargaining counters whilst negotiations are in progress?" he asked.

In an address to the Fabian Society in Cardiff, Wales, Callaghan, prime minister of the last Labour government, criticised the British Labour Party's commitment to unilateral nuclear disarmament as an "insular illusion which overestimates Britain's importance".

Callaghan said that the Labour Party's policy of unilateral disarmament was attractive but wrong. He warned that any unilateral action might eventually lead to the "unravelling of NATO".

He suggested that a future Labour government should retain Britain's Polaris fleet, keep U.S. bases in the country and cooperate in the storage of cruise missiles, and concentrate on conventional rather than nuclear weapons. However, he said that the present Conservative government's Trident program should be discarded.

ISRAELI WITHDRAWAL DEMANDS TO LEBANON CONDEMNED

HK231106 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 23 Nov 82 p 6

["Short" commentary: "Peremptory Demands"]

[Text] The key to relaxing tension in Lebanon lies in the withdrawal of Israeli aggressor troops from the country.

However, the Begin authorities are adopting a rude and unreasonable attitude to provide an excuse for refusing to pull their troops out of Lebanon. It has been reported that Israel has told Lebanon of the conditions for withdrawal of its troops from the country, which include Israeli authority to control the territorial airspace and waters of Lebanon, the establishment of Israeli radar stations on the top of the Baruk Mountain located in the southern part of Lebanon, the opening up of Lebanon's market to Israeli products, and so forth. These conditions put forth by Israel are obviously not aimed at Israeli troop withdrawal. Instead, Israel is trying to turn Lebanon into its dependency or colony. Naturally, the conditions have been rejected by the Lebanese Government. Israel invaded Lebanon on the pretext of the Palestinian problem. Now it regards Lebanon as a defeated nation and is making territorial and sovereignty claims. Such an act fully proves that its invasion of Lebanon was a step in its overall plan of aggression and expansion. The fact that it has set peremptory demands on Lebanon further exposes its ambition as a local hegemonist.

Israel has put forward conditions which no sovereign country would accept. Its purpose in doing so is only so that it can refuse to withdraw its aggressor troops from Lebanon in order to obstruct the peaceful settlement of the Middle East problem and so that it can continue to occupy and annex Arab territory. It is obvious that so long as Israel continues its local hegemonist ambitions, there is no hope for peace in the Middle East. The United States is a firm supporter of Israel. Now U.S. special envoy Habib is shuttling back and forth in the Middle East, carrying out diplomatic activities. It is reported that his goal is to solve the problem of the withdrawal of all foreign troops from Lebanon in order to find a settlement of the Middle East problem. Whether the United States acts according to its word will be tested by its attitude toward the Begin authorities.

MITTERRAND ON NEED FOR INDEPENDENT PALESTINE

[Text] Cairo, November 23 (XINHUA) -- French President Francois Mitterrand has called for an independent Palestinian state and mutual recognition between Arab countries and Israel. The mutual recognition will lead to peace in this region, he said. Mitterrand made the statement, on the eve of his visit to Egypt, in an interview published here today in the newspapers AL-AHRAM and AL-AKHBAR. Mitterrand said he believes it is necessary to give the U.S. President Ronald Reagan's Middle East peace initiative an adequate chance. This plan calls for Palestinian autonomy in the West Bank and Gaza Strip in association with Jordan.

Although France does not approve of all the conditions of the Fes summit resolution it is a good "basis" to start the negotiations process, Mitterrand said. The Fes resolution calls for creation of an independent Palestinian state with Jerusalem as its capital, and guarantee of peace for all states in the region, an implicit recognition of Israel's right to exist.

"We might find ourselves forced to return to the Egyptian-French plan," Mitterrand said. This proposal, introduced at the United Nations last August, calls for mutual recognition between the PLO and Israel and self-determination for the Palestinians. The French president said it is not possible to determine the future of the Palestinians without their participation in the negotiation. He said withdrawal of all foreign troops from Lebanon is a necessary condition to achieve a solution to the Middle East problem. On Franco-Egyptian relations Mitterrand said cooperation between the two countries in the political, economic and military fields is proceeding positively.

CONSTITUTION REVISION BODY APPROVES NEW DRAFT

[Text] Beijing, November 23 (XINHUA) -- The new draft of the revised Chinese Constitution was approved by the Committee for the Revision of the Constitution here this afternoon. It will be submitted for deliberation to the National People's Congress session scheduled to open November 26.

Peng Zhen, vice-chairman of the committee, said that it had taken the committee 26 months to prepare the new draft, solicit opinions among the poeple, and finalize the document on the basis of the nation-wide discussions which began last April.

Some 80 to 90 percent of the adult population on the mainland, as well as overseas Chinese and Chinese compatriots in Hong Kong and Macao, took part in the discussions and contributed to the revision.

Since it was founded in 1949, the People's Republic of China has promulgated three constitutions -- in 1954, 1975 and 1978. Owing to the limitations of the historical conditions at the time of its adoption, and to the changes that have taken place since, the 1978 constitution, in many respects, is no longer in keeping with the present political and economic life of the Chinese people and their need to build a modern country. On the proposal of the Central Committee of the Chinese Communist Party, the Third Plenary Session of the Fifth National People's Congress decided to revise the constitution and establish a special committee for this purpose.

While incorporating a number of major changes to the 1978 constitution, the new draft retains those provisions in the three previous constitutions that are still valid. The important revisions include:

-- Restoration of the posts of chairman and vice-chairman of the state.

-- Expansion of the functions and powers of the N.P.C. Standing Committee, enabling it to make laws and decrees and supervise the implementation of the constitution.

-- Implementation of the system of sole responsibility of the premier for the State Council. A Standing Committee of the State Council is to be formed by the premier, vice-premiers, state councillors and secretary-general. A new auditing organ to be set up under the State Council will independently supervise the revenue and expenditure of the state in accordance with the law.

-- Restoration of local government in the rural areas. The people's communes will serve only as collective economic organizations and the commune system that incorporates governmental and economic functions will be changed.

Chinese law specialists say the new draft pending adoption represents a new constitution which is uniquely Chinese and in conformity with the needs of the socialist modernization drive.

WANG WEI EXPLAINS NEW FOOD HYGIENE LAW

OW231256 Beijing XINHUA in English 1118 GMT 20 Nov 82

[Text] Beijing, November 20 (XINHUA) -- China's new food hygiene law is intended to protect people's health by strengthening supervision and disease-prevention measures, said Wang Wei, vice-minister of public health, in an interview today.

Explaining the salient points in the new law, which was passed by the National People's Congress Standing Committee yesterday and will be put on trial use on October first, 1983, the vice-minister said that eight out of the 45 articles in the law set the hygiene standards of food, food production and those of food additives. Two articles list the kind of food banned.

He noted that food containers and packaging made of such material as paper, plastics and rubber should, according to the new law, be manufactured by specially appointed factories. Pesticides, fertilizer and other chemicals affecting the quality of food must be examined by the health departments as regulated by the law.

Special care, he added, has been shown on baby food with one article ruling on staple and non-staple food for babies.

He pointed out that food producing or processing enterprises jointly run by Chinese and foreign businessmen also come under this law. Imported food must accord with the standards set by this law, he said.

Defining foods, the vice-minister said they refer to products that are edible and used both as food and medicinal purposes but does not include such strictly medicinal products as ginseng.

In conclusion, he stated that offenders will be punished according to the severity of their violation, ranging from fines, closure and license suspension to criminal liability in the event of death or disability.

Vice-Minister Wang pointed out that the replacement of the old regulations by the new law was necessitated by the pollution of food that followed China's industrialization and the rising living standards of the people.

RENMIN RIBAO ON IMPORTANCE OF FOOD HYGIENE

HK240616 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 21 Nov 82 p 2

[Editorial: "Ensure Food Hygiene; Guarantee the People's Health"]

[Text] The "Food Hygiene Law (for trial implementation) of the People's Republic of China," which was adopted by the NPC Standing Committee, has been formally published. The publication of this law has shown the great importance attached by the party and the state to people's health and marked a new development in food hygiene work.

Food hygiene is closely related to people's health and the security of their lives. In the early 1950's, China implemented the regulations for controlling food hygiene, and formulated and published "Food Hygiene Administrative Regulations" and standards and measures for all kinds of food hygiene. However, in the previous hygiene law, most regulations were based on moral regulations without specific stipulations for dealing with those who violate the law or the responsibility they should assume. Consequently, those who undermined the law were not duly prosecuted and even some serious cases such as food poisoning accidents or other serious food-related diseases resulting in death were not handled due to the absence of law. In recent years, food poisoning factors and opportunities have increased following the growth of food trade channels, and the previous hygiene law failed to adapt to the developing situation. The recently published "food hygiene law" is based on the experiences of food hygiene supervision and administrative work since the founding of the state and it corresponds to the legitimate right of the people's demand for food safety and hygiene. All food-processing manufacturers and retailers must observe the law.

Some comrades think that at present the most important thing is to stimulate food production, and stressing food hygiene will affect production development and the profits to be turned over to higher authorities. It is absolutely wrong to set the development of food production against food hygiene work. What the proverb says is quite true: Illness finds its way into the body through the mouth. Food production development will mean nothing if foods are contaminated and endanger people's health. We should proceed in all work from the interest of the people and hold ourselves responsible to the people. Socialist production aims at meeting the people's demand and certainly not at merely increasing production and profits in isolation from people's interests.

Other comrades consider that considerably more investment will be needed to grasp food hygiene and improve conditions in food production. This is not an all-round idea. Most problems existing in food hygiene can be resolved by strengthening management and strictly implementing the regulations. For instance, personnel engaged in food production must wash their hands, food sellers must use utensils, tableware must be sterilized, cooked food and raw food must be separated, and so on. These do not need a lot of money, but they will greatly help to ensure food hygiene. Of course, some of the problems are caused by bad equipment and so on. To hold themselves responsible to the people, the departments concerned should improve their food processing and marketing facilities in line with the technical reform of the enterprise and it is necessary to make some investments in this respect.

In order to strictly implement the "food hygiene law", from now on, the contents of this law should be extensively publicized in all areas, so that all personnel engaged in food production and marketing will come to understand their responsibility for ensuring food hygiene, and take practical and effective measures to improve food hygiene conditions. After the "food hygiene law" comes into force, those who violate the law will be investigated and prosecuted in accordance with the law and each specific case.

RENMIN RIBAO URGES CULTURAL RELICS PROTECTION

[Editorial: "Protect Cultural Relics; Enforce the Law Strictly"]

[Text] The NPC Standing Committee has adopted and promulgated "The Cultural Relics Protection Law of the PRC." This is an important measure to protect our country's historical and cultural heritage and a major event in the building of socialist spiritual civilization.

As a united multinational country with a long history, our country has an extremely rich store of historical and revolutionary relics. Since the founding of the PRC, the people's government has promulgated a series of relics protection ordinances and has achieved great success in the work of protecting and administering relics. During the 10 years of internal disorder, the cultural relics of our country were destroyed on an unprecedented scale. Large-scale destruction like this was halted after the smashing of the "gang of four." However, due to the influence of the 10 years of internal disorder, destruction of cultural relics is still occasionally to be seen in certain places. In the last few years we have even found activities of smuggling and profiteering from cultural relics in some places, some of which were rather serious. The promulgation of the cultural relics protection law has provided us with a legal weapon to strengthen protection of cultural relics against various destructive activities.

The cultural relics of our country are the valuable treasure of the whole people; no unit or individual is allowed to destroy or seize these relics. The cultural relics protection law clearly provides that "all government organizations, mass organizations and individuals have the obligation to protect our country's cultural relics." The protection of cultural relics is not only the responsibility of the cultural relics administration departments but also the common responsibility of all departments concerned. All departments should support cultural relics protection work. At present, some units are occupying some ancient buildings owned by the country. They claim that they themselves are the proprietors of the premises, refuse to move, and even arbitrarily demolish, rebuild and extend the buildings. Some places and units have taken forcible possession of unearthed cultural relics, some communes and brigades have openly excavated ancient tombs to take treasure and regarded these activities as a kind of sideline production and in some instances, ancient buildings have even been demolished and sold with the approval of leading people. All these practices are extremely wrong and should be immediately corrected and strictly banned. Those serious cases must be conscientiously handled and legal responsibility for the cases must be assigned.

In enforcing the cultural relics protection law, we must strictly adhere to the law and seriously prosecute all violators of the law. Anyone who violates the cultural relics protection law must be prosecuted according to law. Cultural relics workers who embezzle state property must be seriously penalized. At present, we must punish according to the law those major criminals who smuggle and make profits from cultural relics while dealing blows at the economic criminal activities. Those major cases of deliberate destruction of the state's precious historical relics and smuggling of cultural relics must be seriously handled and publicly denounced in the newspapers so as to educate the masses. The present attitude of the departments concerned in some places which is indulgent toward major cases and fails to deal strong blows at serious criminal activities should be absolutely changed.

In order to properly carry out the work of cultural relics protection, we must depend on the broad masses. We must make use of every propaganda medium to educate and mobilize the masses, to deepen their understanding in the great significance of cultural relics protection work and to imbue everyone with the idea of "everyone being responsible for protecting cultural relics."

Most of the important archaeological discoveries in our country since the founding of the PRC were based on clues provided by the masses and were then excavated by professional archaeologists. Many cultural relics were preserved during the 10 years of internal disorder just because the local people, in cooperation with our cultural relics workers, conscientiously stopped destructive activities. Practice has shown that dependence on the masses of people is the important guarantee for the work of cultural relics protection. We must regard the mass cultural relics protection work as an important part of mass cultural activities, and actively and extensively promote it.

The purpose of the protection of cultural relics is to make full use of cultural relics. Cultural relics are the witnesses of history. Vividly reflecting from various aspects the political, economic, cultural and social conditions of our country at different stages of historical development, cultural relics can not only help the people to understand their own history, remind them of their creative ability, strengthen their national self-esteem and confidence, and kindle their patriotic enthusiasm and revolutionary spirit, but can also provide important reference materials for our socialist economic construction. In recent years, some archaeological results provided some departments and units, including water conservancy, seismic prediction and so on, with quite a few valuable reference materials. For this reason, these departments and units now attach more importance to cultural relics protection. This also shows that protecting cultural relics and giving full play to the role of cultural relics complement each other and help each other along. The better cultural relics play their role, the more attention they will draw from the society, and the more advantageous that will be to cultural relics protection. The cultural relics administration departments at all levels should strengthen the organizational work for scientific studies in cultural relics, extensively carry out various propaganda and educational activities, give full play to the positive role of cultural relics in various fields, and thus enhance the cultural relics work to a new level.

The task of cultural relics protection is arduous and glorious. The people's governments at all levels must strengthen their leadership of cultural relics work, consolidate cultural relics administration organizations, coordinate the relations between different aspects concerned, conscientiously implement various specific stipulations of the cultural relics protection law, and thus bring about a new situation in the cultural relics work and make due contributions to socialist modernization.

ANTISMUGGLING ACTIVITIES REPORTED STEPPED UP

OW230838 Beijing XINHUA in English 0744 GMT 23 Nov 82

[Text] Beijing, November 23 (XINHUA) -- More than 900 ships involved in small scale smuggling were caught in the first nine months of this year, according to an anti-smuggling group of the State Council.

The value of the captured smuggled goods totaled 59 million yuan (about 28 million U.S. dollars), a large drop compared with the same period last year, the group said. Fewer smuggling cases were also recorded in Chinese customs.

An official of the group told XINHUA that at present large scale smuggling in China's southeastern coastal areas has been stopped and smuggled goods markets banned, he said.

The smuggled goods into mainland China mainly are watches, radios, nylon cloth and products, TV sets; and out of it mainly are antiques and medicinal herbs.

For more than two years the party Central Committee and the State Council have focused on combating smuggling and the sales of smuggled goods. Special meetings have been called to cope with such activities and regulations governing anti-smuggling activities have been enacted.

As a result, the official said, more people are fighting smuggling and exposing offenders. More smugglers have turned themselves into the security departments or confessed their offenses.

In Guangdong, Fujian and Zhejiang Provinces, from September of last year to March this year, more than 200 offenders were jailed according to the law. Some 140 smugglers in Zhejiang Province received lenient treatment after they turned in themselves.

From June 1980 to June 1982 more than 51,000 smuggling cases, with a value of the captured smuggled goods totaling more than 159 million yuan (about 79 million U.S. dollars), were solved by the Chinese customs. Last year alone 1,251 ships were caught smuggling on the seas; and the value of the captured smuggled goods totaled more than 205 million yuan (about 102 million U.S. dollars).

The official said that China's customs and anti-smuggling personnel will continue their alert to combat smuggling activities this winter and in the spring when there is usually a smuggling wave.

RENMIN RIBAO REPORTS SHENZHEN SMUGGLERS' ARREST

HK240556 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 23 Nov 82 p 4

[Report from Shenzhen: "Shenzhen Judicial Department Orders Arrest of Zhou Zhirong and Xu Zhiliang for Smuggling"]

[Text] An in-depth investigation by the "Shenzhen branch-case" inspection team of the CPC Central Commission for Discipline Inspection and by the Guagndong Provincial People's Procuratorate has definitely proved that smuggling, tax evasion, giving and accepting bribes and illegally buying and selling foreign exchange committed by Zhou Zhirong and his accomplices in the Shenzhen branch of the China Electronics Import and Export Corporation have violated the criminal law and are economic crimes. On 30 October, Zhou Zhirong and Xu Zhiliang were legally arrested and held responsible for their crimes.

Since the Shenzhen branch of the China Electronics Import and Export Corporation (shortened hereafter to branch) was set up in May 1980, Zhou Zhirong, the former principal responsible person of the branch's administration and secretary of the branch's provisional party committee, Xu Zhiliang, a former leader of the branch's storage and transport department and their accomplices have, in order to gain windfall profits, disregarded party discipline and state law, colluded with lawbreaking Hong Kong businessmen and adopted such dirty tricks as underrating in customs declarations the number, nature and value of the goods imported, smuggling goods under cover of declared imported goods and falsely declaring assembled sets and components as spares to wantonly carry out criminal activities of smuggling and tax evasion. According to the results of the investigation, from December 1980 to September 1981, they engaged in smuggling activities on 26 occasions and the value of the electronic products smuggled totalled more than 23 million yuan. The smuggled goods included 24,700 television sets, 87,539 radio-cassette recorders, 100,000 cassette tapes, 4,342 clock radios, 43,400 spare parts for receivers in and 19,900 spare parts for the recorders in radio-cassette recorders. In addition to smuggling, they have viciously misappropriated 1.48 million yuan in customs duties that they had been assigned by other units to pay when they imported electronic products for these units. The responsible person of the General Administration of Customs pointed out that in terms of the amount of goods smuggled and taxes evaded and in terms of the vicious nature of their tricks, Zhou Zhirong and his accomplices' case of smuggling and tax evasion has been a rare and major one in the more than 30 years since the founding of the PRC.

As far back as February 1981, the Kowloon customs office discovered the Shenzhen branch's tax evasion activities and time and again warned and fined it. However, Zhou Zhirong and his accomplicies paid no heed to the warning. Instead, they continued to even more seriously collude with law breaking Hong Kong businessmen in smuggling and tax evasion. Moreover, after the State Council issued the regulation on exerting strict control over the import of machinery (including television sets and recorders), they used the tricks of changing the date of purchase contracts to obtain import licenses from the state. Our investigation has proved that they produced 81 contracts with changed dates and illegally imported 550,000 television sets, 340,000 radio-cassette recorders, 1.35 million cassette tapes and 20,000 calculators, the value totalling U.S. $47.5 million. These imported goods have been put on the market by 460 units in 15 provinces, municipalities and regions throughout the country, have a shocking effect on the market against similar products made by our country and impair the development of our national electronics industry.

Furthermore, Zhou Zhirong and his accomplices have violated the foreign exchange management regulations of the state and illegally bought and sold foreign exchange worth U.S. $16 million. They illegally imported and recorded 150,000 cassette tapes, of which 100,000 have already been sold in 15 provinces, municipalities and autonomous regions. Most of these tapes were of Hong Kong and Taiwan decadent songs that have seriously polluted the general mood of our society.

Zhou Zhirong and his accomplices have sold at excessively low prices 730 television sets, 800 radio-cassette recorders and record players and 19,000 recorded and blank cassette tapes to the units in the former 4th Ministry of Machine Building and other units with which they have an under-the-counter relationship. Some of these goods were sold by them as disguised bribes at a low price in order to facilitate their economic crimes. After gaining some benefits from them, some people turned on the green light for their criminal activities in violation of state regulations or defended their illegal and criminal activities. This has added difficulties and resistance to the investigation of this big smuggling case.

Zhou Zhirong has moreover accepted bribes in Hong Kong and Chinese currencies and wristwatches from lawbreaking Hong Kong businessmen.

He and his accomplices' illegal and criminal activities of smuggling and tax evasion have caused tremendous economic losses to the state and enabled lawbreaking Hong Kong businessmen to gain windfall profits. They helped Hong Kong businessmen to import and market a large number of low-grade components and television sets and radio-cassette recorder spare parts, many of which cannot form complete sets and become worthless stock in our warehouses. According to the data collected from the number 750 state-owned factory and the 5 units in Nanjing Radio Company, 270,000 of the 380,000 sets of television and radio-cassette recorder components that the branch imported for these units through 18 contracts with lawbreaking Hong Kong businessmen, cannot be assembled because of lack of parts. These units therefore suffered losses.

The central leading comrades have paid close attention to the "Shenzhen branch case." They have issued important instructions enjoining the Central Commission for Discipline Inspection has resolutely carried out the instruction of the central leading comrades. Last December it organized a joint investigation team with other relevant central departments. This team carried out a painstaking investigation and gradually discovered many serious problems. Concerning these problems, this newspaper gave two reports on 11 March and 22 April this year.

In May this year, on the basis of the material transferred by the "Shenzhen branch case" investigation team of the Central Commission for Dscipline Inspection, the Guangdong Provincial People's Procuratorate placed this case in its file and began its investigation. It kept watch on Zhou Zhirong and Xu Zhiliang's residences and after 5 months of investigation and checking, found a great deal of conclusive evidence in depositions and material evidence and finally clarified the facts of Zhou Zhirong and his accomplices' illegal and criminal activities of smuggling and tax evasion and indicted them on a serious smuggling charge.

XINHUA TALKS TO SOCIAL SCIENCE ACADEMY PRESIDENT

OW240049 Beijing XINHUA in English 1527 GMT 23 Nov 82

[Text] Beijing, November 23 (XINHUA) -- The fundamental task for Chinese social sciences today is to study and solve theoretical and practical problems in the country's drive for modernization, said Ma Hong, president of the Chinese Academy of Social Sciences in an interview with XINHUA today.

The academy's 62-year-old president said that after recent discussions of the goal set by the 12th party congress the faculty posed such questions as "what should we rely on to quadruple gross industrial and agricultural output value by the end of this century? Should we follow the old path or pave a new one? Does the goal mean that every department, unit and enterprises should quadruple its production?"

These questions, he said, call for an intensive study of such subjects as the strategy for social progress and development of China's economy, the economic structure, the reform of the economic system, the economic management of socialist enterprises, the development of the rural economy, the price system and its management, employment and the wage system, population, and trends in the contemporary world economy and its influence on China.

Other subjects such as the theoretical significance as well as the practice of building a socialist civilization, a socialist democracy, and China's relations with other countries must also be studied, President Ma Hong said.

Most of Ma Hong's own writings touch on present economic issues. He has headed seven economic institutes under the academy and has recently published "A Preliminary Study of the New Strategy for Developing China's Economy," "Economic Structure and Economic Management," and "The Readjustment, Reform and Development of China's Economy."

Summing up the work of the past six years, the president said that after the downfall of the gang of four, social scientists broke the fetters of dogmatism and the cult of the individual. Branches of learning such as sociology and political sciences have been reinstituted and new subjects such as population science, journalism and juvenile issues have been added. The study of economics has been strengthened and the study of international issues has been expanded. A number of new institutes of social sciences have been set up.

President Ma underlined the fact that Chinese social scientists are guided by the basic principles of Marxism, a scientific truth which has stood the test of practice.

Refuting the allegation in the capitalist world that Marxism is outdated, he said, Marxism will never be outdated but will draw lasting youthfulness and vigor from the development of history and science.

But it is really impractical, Ma Hong continued, to expect to find ready-made answers in the Marxist classics.

In scientific discussions the policy of "let a hundred flowers bloom and a hundred schools of thought contend" should be followed, he said. Ma Hong is against a relapse into oversimplification or heavy-handed interference in academic discussions which might result in stagnation.

Ma Hong, who recently toured Japan, the U.S.A., France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Switzerland and Austria, said it is necessary to know the present trends in the social sciences throughout the world. China must pursue the study of the different schools of social sciences in foreign countries and there must be international exchanges in the field. "China should retain its own characteristics in social sciences, but should make its contributions to the development of these sciences in the world," he said.

WAN LI APPROVES SUGGESTION ON SCHOOL REFORM

OW231048 Shanghai City Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 22 Nov 82

[Text] (Wen Yuankai), a promising young chemist and associate professor of the Chinese University of Science and Technology, recently wrote Vice Premier Wan Li to suggest a reform of present scientific and technological education organization. In his letter to the responsible person of the party committee of the Chinese University of Science and Technology, Wan Li pointed out that the suggestion is worth a try and asked the university to support and lead the experiment. Vice Premier Wan Li praised (Wen Yuankai's) initiative and enthusiasm for the four modernizations.

The party committee of the Chinese University of Science and Technology has discussed and approved (Wen Yuankai's) suggestion on the reform. It has decided to first carry out on a trial basis an organizational reform of the chemistry teachers office of the department of chemistry. (Wen Yuankai) has been appointed director of the chemistry teachers office and concurrently secretary of the party branch of the department of modern chemistry and been put in charge of the experimental organizational reform.

(Wen Yuankai's) suggestion on the reform consisted of eight points. They included:

1. The teachers office be put in the charge of the director, with the director serving concurrently as the party branch secretary and with the addition of a deputy director in order to reduce haggling and avoid shifts of responsibility;

2. A hiring system be practiced to gradually enable personnel to come and go;

3. The director of the teachers office be given added power and responsibility;

4. Operational funds be set up for the teachers office; and

5. The faculty members and workers be permitted and encouraged to hold part-time jobs, including teaching and technical consultation jobs and particularly the jobs for industrial departments, provided they have fulfilled their work quota; no limit should be set on their extra income, but income tax may be levied on the excess of income according to the income tax law.

SHOUDU IRON, STEEL COMPANY DOUBLES PROFIT

[Text] Beijing, 24 Nov (XINHUA) -- According to XINHUA reporter Xu Renzhong, the Shoudu Iron and Steel Company netted a profit of more than 309 million yuan between January and October this year, nearly doubling the amount for the same period in 1978.

It is learned that the Shoudu Iron and Steel Company's actual contributions were larger than the above amount. In 1978, that company delivered to the state a profit of 180 million yuan, but received an allocation of 150 million yuan from the state. This meant the state was a little over 23 million yuan ahead in the true sense. This year, however, the Shoudu Iron and Steel Company delivered a profit totaling more than 230 million yuan to the state during the first 10 months, but received no money from the state at all. So the actual amount of profits received by the state was nearly nine times bigger than the amount turned in during 1978.

More significantly, 1978 was the year in which the Shoudu Iron and Steel Company scored the highest peak in economic and technical targets in 30 years; in other words, it doubled its profits on a relatively elevated basis, and all its products sold without much problem.
